14. — on a seat in the high places] For the purpose of inveigling passengers. It is related by travellers in the East, that it is still the practice for prostitutes to sit at the doors of their houses, in the most alluring pomp that they can display. Harmer.

17. Stolen waters are sweet, &c.] Forbidden pleasures are sweet when enjoyed in secret.

18. — he knoweth not that the dead are there;] He considers not all this while, that she invites him to his utter ruin both of body and soul, and sinks down all those who accept of her invitation to the pit of destruction. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. X. ver. 1. The proverbs of Solomon.] Here now properly begins the book of the Proverbs, as the title of this chapter tells us; what has been delivered hitherto being rather a preface, to awaken attention, and form sundry arguments to commend the wise instructions which now follow to every one's practice, and to caution those who would receive benefit by these instructions, to avoid such things as may hinder their edification in the school of wisdom. Bp. Patrick.

From this chapter to the twenty-fifth, are contained more particularly the theorems of the doctrine of morality; which, under sundry observations concerning virtue and vice, or moral good and evil, may form a full and complete system of Divine ethicks. The virtues and vices are for the most part set in opposition the one to the other, and compared together; that so the wisdom and beauty of the one, and the folly and deformity of the other, may the more convincingly appear. Wogan.

3. — he casteth away the substance of the wicked.] He dissipates or destroys the estate, the possessions of the wicked. Dr. Hammond.

4. — that dealeth with a slack hand:] That dealeth or worketh with a lazy hand. Dr. Wells.

6. — violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.] Their own wickedness shall violently overwhelm, to their utter confusion, those who wickedly defraud and oppress their neighbour. Bp. Patrick.

8. The wise in heart will receive &c.] It is the part of wisdom to open the ear and heart to all good advice, especially to the commandments of God; whereas they who keep no guard on their tongues, frequently discover things which bring ruin and mischief on themselves. Dr. Hammond.

9. He that walketh uprightly walketh surely:] "To walk surely," is to be in safe condition, to be out of danger of falling into any extreme calamity, and to have our main interest so secured, that, notwithstanding whatever may happen for a time, yet our chief and great design shall certainly succeed happily in the end. The sum therefore of Solomon's assertion is this: He that in the whole course of his life acts sincerely and justly, with a continual respect to the reason of things and the law of God, that carries on his undertakings by fair and equitable means, avoiding all fraud and deceit, all base and unworthy practice; this man takes the wisest and surest course to succeed in all his designs, respecting either his present, or his future happiness. Dr. S. Clarke.

10. He that winketh with the eye &c.] The double dealing and dissembling person causes much sorrow at the last, both to himself and to those who have been deceived by him. Bp. Hall.

11. The mouth of a righteous man is a well of life:] The discourse of a good man, like a perpetual spring of wholesome water, always tends to the profit, comfort, and refreshment of those who receive it. Bp. Patrick.

12. — love covereth all sins.] Love induces men to cover or overlook several great offences. Dr. Wells. See James v. 20.

14. — the mouth of the foolish is near destruction.] The fool is always talking, and seldom opens his mouth but it proves a present mischief to himself or to others. Bp. Patrick.

minds, and make them confident; whereas poverty exposes men to injuries and abuses, and is apt to depress and deject their spirits. Bp. Patrick.

19. In the multitude of words &c.] There are so many ways of offending God or man, by profanations, falsehoods, slanders, &c. that there cannot be a more necessary part of moral wisdom, or wherein the exercise of true piety is more concerned, than the art of restraining the tongue, and keeping it within proper bounds, as to all such matters. Dr. Hammond.

24. The fear of the wicked, it shall come upon him:] The evil which the wicked fears shall come upon him.

26. As vinegar to the teeth, &c.] Vinegar is not more offensive to the teeth, nor smoke more vexatious to the eyes, than a remiss and negligent servant is to him that employs him, and relies on him in a weighty business. Bp. Patrick.

27. — the years of the wicked shall be shortened.] See note at Prov. iii. 2.

This truth here announced is confirmed by the nature of things, and the positive appointments of Providence. In the nature of things, men destroy themselves and shorten their days by many kinds of wickedness. By wars and desolations, they unpeople whole countries; by private quarrels, they bring each other to untimely ends; by capital crimes, they cause themselves to be cut off by the hands of justice; by luxury and intemperance, they destroy their bodies; by envy and malice, they consume themselves in the midst of their iniquity. In like manner, according to the same tendency, by peace and charity, men are preserved from destruction; by temperance, their bodies are maintained in health; by quiet of conscience and satisfaction of mind, new life is added to their spirits. Dr. S. Clarke.

31. — the froward tongue shall be cut out.] That is, he that does mischief with his tongue shall be duly punished. Dr. Wells.

32. — know what is acceptable:] What is pleasing to God and edifying to man. See Eph. iv. 29, and v. 3, 4. Dr. Isham.

Chap. XI. ver. 2. When pride cometh, then cometh shame:] Pride makes men foolish and void of caution, and this puts them upon doing things which bring them to dishonour. Dr. S. Clarke.

7. — his expectation shall perish:] The wicked man, having no other expectation than in his own means of strength, will see all his projects dissipated by death. Calmet.

8. — the wicked cometh in his stead.] That is, the wicked falls into those very distresses from which the just is happily freed. Bp. Patrick. See Esther vii. 9.

14. — in the multitude of counsellers there is safety.] A country is safe when there are many wise men to govern affairs; for, if one fail, others still remain; and what one or two discover not, others may be able to discern. Bp. Patrick.

16. A gracious woman &c.] Beauty and virtue in a woman advance her to honour, as formidable power and strength in men advance them to riches: and, as their principal care is to keep their treasures, so should her's be to preserve her reputation. Bp. Patrick.

21. Though hand join in hand, &c.] Though the wicked man endeavour to strengthen himself and his family by powerful leagues and confederations, he shall not be able to escape the punishment his iniquity deserves. Bp. Patrick. To join hands was anciently, and still continues in the East, a solemn method of taking an oath on making an engagement. To this circumstance allusion seems clearly to be made in these words of Solomon.

22. As a jewel of gold &c.] Allusion is here made to the Eastern custom of wearing valuable rings in the nostril. As such an ornament would be very ill placed in the snout of a swine which grovels continually in the mire, so beauty is equally misplaced in a woman who is without virtue and discretion. Bp. Patrick. See Sir J. Chardin's note on Gen. xxiv. 22.

24. There is that scattereth,] That is, that giveth liberally on all proper occasions. Dr. Wells.

25. The liberal soul shall be made fat:] The liberal "soul," or the liberal "man;" "soul" being often in Hebrew put for "man." Dr. Durell. "Shall be made fat," or rich; and he that "watereth," or giveth plenteously to others, shall be watered, or receive plentifully from God himself. Dr. Wells.

26. He that withholdeth corn,] He that hoardeth up corn in a time of scarcity, on purpose to raise the price. Bp. Patrick.

29. He that troubleth &c.] He that troubleth his own house or family, or whatever else he holds under his authority, by making or fomenting dissensions therein, "shall inherit the wind," shall be deceived as to any advantage he may expect thereby, and gain nothing; and the fool of this description shall be, as is often found by experience, "servant to the wise of heart," who manages his affairs after a prudent manner. Dr. Wells. "He that troubleth his own house," either by improvidently dissipating his property, or by sowing divisions and discord among the members of his family. Calmet.

30. — he that winneth souls] That draws souls to the love of virtue by communicating wisdom seasonably and charitably. Bp. Patrick.

31. — shall be recompensed in the earth:] Shall be recompensed for their righteousness.

exertion loses even the fruit of his former labours; but the diligent man sets a just value on it, and converts it to its proper use.

28. In the way of righteousness is life; &c.] This is, as it were, the sum and substance of the chapter, and a proper conclusion of all that we have been taught in the foregoing maxims of Divine philosophy; namely, that religion and a holy conversation are the only sure and infallible way to happiness. So excellent, and so far beyond every other scheme, is this "way of righteousness," that not one of all the actions and pursuits in which it engages us shall ever end in misery and disappointment. "In the pathway thereof there is no death;" but, saith the Gospel, seconding the royal moralist, "All things work together for good to them that love God," Rom. viii. 28. Wogan.

Chap. XIII. ver. 2. A man shall eat good &c.] He that speaks well of others, and gives them faithful counsel, shall reap the benefit thereof himself; and they that perfidiously calumniate or deceive others, shall suffer themselves the injury which they design to do their neighbours. *Bp. 12. Hope deferred maketh the heart sick:] He speaks of a case, when by repeated disappointments the hope seems to be removed farther off from day to day; which is justly said to sicken the heart. Dr. Durell.

13. Whoso despiseth the word &c.] Despiseth the good counsels and admonitions that are given him. Bp. Patrick.

14. The law of the wise &c.] The law of God, which is the matter and scope to which all the instruction of wise teachers tends, is that fountain, from which spiritual and eternal life flows, and the only means of delivering the soul from the snares of eternal death. Bp. Hall.

15. Good understanding giveth favour:] A prudent, pious, and regular behaviour, is most amiable and acceptable to all men; but the conversation of those who live by no law but their own lusts, like a rough way, is grievously uneasy. Bp. Patrick.

20. He that walketh with wise men] That is, who chooses wise persons for his companions, and loses no opportunity of receiving their advice and instruction. Dr. Jortin.

21. — to the righteous good shall be repayed.] This sentence expresses the general truth, that the practice of righteousness is men's true interest, even in the present life; and that wickedness is attended with great misery generally, even here as well as hereafter. Dr. S. Clarke.

24. He that spareth his rod &c.] A fond indulgence of children is frequently their utter ruin, and in truth is not love, but hatred. Abp. Tillotson.

25. The righteous eateth &c.] A righteous man never wants a sufficiency, because his desires are moderate, and he makes a temperate use of God's blessings: whereas wicked men bring themselves to poverty by riot and dissipation. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. XIV. ver. 1. — buildeth her house:] By her diligent and prudent management raises up a family, and increases its riches and reputation. Bp. Patrick.

3. In the mouth of the foolish &c.] The tongue of the fool is a scourge by which his own pride is lashed; but the lips of the wise are a safe defence to himself. Bp. Hall.

4. Where no oxen are, &c.] If the fields lie fallow and neglected, a famine will follow; but good husbandry bestowed upon them makes great plenty.—Oxen were the principal instruments of husbandry in Palestine, being employed, not only in ploughing the land, and carrying home the crop, but also in treading out the corn. *Bp. Anger is certainly one of the most foolish passions of human nature, and commonly betrays men to the most imprudent and unreasonable things. Abp. Tillotson.

30. A sound heart is the life] A quiet, honest, contented mind, is "the life of the flesh," conduces much to health and happiness. Dr. Wells.

32. — the righteous hath hope in his death.] These words have no sense or meaning except on the supposition of a future state: for hope always looks forward, and has respect unto something that is future: but, if death puts an end to our being; if, according to the creed of the unbeliever, we die like brute animals, and have no after-existence; what hope can the righteous have in his death, any more than the wicked, or how can either of them have any hope at all? This hope can be built on nothing, but the belief of the soul's immortality, and a future state of retribution. Dr. Ibbot.

13. — by sorrow of the heart the spirit is broken.] When grief and sorrow seize on the heart, they deject, enfeeble, and break the most courageous spirit. Bp. Patrick.

16. — and trouble therewith.] That disquiet and confusion of thoughts which, where there is no religious fear of God, is apt to attend on abundance of wealth. Bp. Patrick.

17. — a dinner of herbs where love is,] That is, It is better to have peace without plenty, than plenty without peace. Seed. "A dinner of herbs," or of green pottage, was the poorest entertainment in Eastern countries, and "a stalled (or crammed) ox," an ox put up in a stall, and there fatted, was esteemed the best entertainment. Thus in the New Testament, the marriage provision which the king made for his son's wedding was "oxen and fatlings," Matth. xxii. 4. And "the fatted calf" was brought forth to entertain the returning prodigal. In the same manner Homer describes the entertainments of his greatest princes and heroes, as consisting almost entirely of fatted oxen and other animals. Bochart.

19. The way of the slothful man &c.] The proceedings of the slothful man are full of embarassments and uneasiness; like a man breaking through a hedge of thorns, he moves with difficulty and pain.

23. A man hath joy &c.] It is a great pleasure to a man to give wholesome counsel, and to see the good success of it; and the greatest of all, both to himself and to others, is to have it given so seasonably, that a business has been easily effected by it, which would not have been done without it. Bp. Patrick.

24. The way of life is above to the wise,] He that is truly wise has his affections and conversation above; and in the holy way of obedience walketh to eternal life. Bp. Hall.

25. — he will establish the border of the widow.] He will preserve the poor widow, who has no helper, in her right, when insolent persons invade it. Bp. Patrick.

28. The heart of the righteous &c.] A good man does not speak without consideration: but bad men are rash, and forward to utter their mind. Bp. Patrick.

30. The light of the eyes &c.] As light gives pleasure to the eye, and pours joy into the recesses of the heart, so a good reputation creates inward satisfaction, and contributes to the health of the body. Calmet.

31. — the reproof of life] Salutary reproof.

33. — before honour is humility.] Humility, docility, the fear of God, are the means which lead to honour and true wisdom. Calmet. Our Lord Himself has made "humility" the first entrance to the "honour" of being His disciple, as well as the first step in His scale of blessings, Matt. v. And with this important maxim the chapter concludes, as the sum total of the foregoing precepts, "Before honour is humility." Wogan.

Chap. XVI. ver. 1. The preparations of the heart &c.] The literal version of the original gives the best and truest sense of this text, "To man are the dispositions of the heart, but from the Lord is the answer of the tongue;" that is, Man hath a power over his thoughts to propose and dispose, to intend and contrive; but to bring such thoughts to effect, or even to utter them with the tongue, especially to utter them wisely, depends wholly upon God. A similar sentence occurs in this chapter at ver. 9; also chap. xx. 24, &c. Wogan.

2. All the ways of a man &c.] Every man is apt to think the best of his own actions, and to justify himself in his own courses; but the Lord judgeth and examineth the inward disposition, the soul and spirit of a man. Bp. Hall.

3. Commit thy works &c.] When thou undertakest any thing, implore the Divine blessing; and, committing the success of it to God's providence, leave it to Him to give what issue to it He pleases; which is the surest way to have thy honest designs accomplished. Bp. Patrick.

4. The Lord hath made &c.] This text may be rendered, with much better sense, and much nearer to the Hebrew, "God hath ordained every thing to that which is fit to it, and the wicked hath He ordained for the day of evil;" that is, The wisdom of God hath fitted one thing to another, punishment to sin, the evil day to the evil doer. Abp. Tillotson.

"Even the wicked for the day of evil;" that is, even the most wicked and the worst of men are under His direction and control: however they may be set on mischief, they can proceed no further than God permits, being instruments only in His hands to afflict others, and bring evil upon them. Dr. Waterland.

The meaning is, as Scripture elsewhere expresses, "The wicked are reserved to the day of destruction, they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath," Job xxi. 30. Dr. S. Clark.

The wicked are indeed the work of God's hands, as being a part of the creation; and He gave them the faculties which they have abused and perverted to a sinful purpose: but this power to abuse and pervert is inseparable from the character of a free agent. The true meaning of this passage is, that God made all things to display His own glorious attributes; and that even wicked men, whose existence and frequent prosperity may seem scarcely reconcileable with the Divine perfections, will, in the end, be found to furnish the strongest proof of His longsuffering in bearing with their iniquities, and of His power and justice in punishing their incorrigible depravity; upon such men "the day of evil" will certainly come. Bp. Tomline.

6. By mercy and truth iniquity is purged:] By a sincere observance of God's law, iniquity is most effectually purged away: sorrow for sin may begin repentance, but obedience only completes it. Wogan.

10. A divine sentence is &c.] God is present in an especial manner with a pious king, inspiring his mind with sagacity to penetrate doubtful and obscure things, that all causes may be decided by him so justly and exactly that no man may be wronged in the judgment which he passes. Bp. Patrick.

11. — all the weights of the bag are his work.] That is, God requires exact justice in all our dealings, and therefore it is our duty to take care that the weights and balance be just. Dr. Wells. In the margin, "all the stones."—Stones were anciently used for weights. Dr. Isham.

14. The wrath of a king &c.] The wrath of a king strikes terrour into him with whom he is offended, no less than if the sentence of death were pronounced upon him; but a virtuous and prudent man appeases his anger and makes a reconciliation. Bp. Patrick.

—— as messengers of death:] It is usual in Turkey, when a warrant for a person's death is procured, for an executioner to carry it to him, and execute it immediately. The same seems to have been the case in Palestine, 1 Kings ii. 25; Matt. xiv. 10. This may perhaps be considered as giving peculiar energy to the term "messengers of death" here used. Harmer.

15. — as a cloud of the latter rain.] As a cloud producing the grateful rain of spring. See note at Deut. xi. 14. Job uses a similar comparison, to express how he was esteemed and desired by his people, Job xxix. 23. Calmet.

17. The highway of the upright] The habitual and accustomed course of the upright. Wogan.

18. Pride goeth before destruction,] That is, pride and haughtiness commonly bring men to shame and destruction; they lead to it, and generally end in it. Dr. Waterland. Pride makes men rash and peevish, obstinate and insolent; and this seldom fails to bring down ruin upon them. *Dr. S. has the powerful charms of eloquence to convey his mind pleasantly to others, adds a greater value to his wisdom, and makes it more diffusive, as well as more instructive to the world. Bp. Patrick.

26. He that laboureth &c.] A man needs no other inducement to labour than his own profit and necessity; for it is by his labour that he must sustain himself and uphold nature, which craveth it of him. Bp. Hall.

27. —diggeth up evil:] This expression signifies labouring after evil with toil and application, searching for it as a person searching for a hidden treasure. "In his lips there is as a burning fire;" he carries on his tongue a burning fire, which spreads on every side destruction and devastation. Calmet.

Hence every good man may draw this comfortable reflection, that he is not left to the caprice or hazard of a blind chance; but that his least, as well as greatest, concerns, are under the constant and infallible direction of Infinite wisdom, which maketh "all things work together for good to them that love God." Wogan.

—— an house full of sacrifices] When sacrifices were offered in the temple, it was usual for the person to have a feast at home with his friends on the remains of the animal slain. Thus a house full of sacrifices means a house full of good provision. See Prov. vii. 14. Calmet.

2. A wise servant shall have rule &c.] Probity and prudence are so much better than mere riches and noble birth, that a wise and faithful servant sometimes arrives at the honour of being appointed the governour of a son, whose folly and wickedness make him a discredit to his family. *Bp. 22. —a broken spirit drieth the bones.] Preys upon the strength, and eats out the vigour of the constitution. Bp. Horne.

23. — taketh a gift out of the bosom] The Hebrews used to carry in their bosom their purse, money, and all valuables. Thus perhaps the expression here may not be intended to convey any idea of secrecy, but merely to mark out something precious and valuable, as being carried in the bosom. Calmet.

24. — the eyes of a fool &c.] The eyes of a fool are constantly wandering every where, and his thoughts fix on nothing that may avail to his good. Bp. Hall.

26. — princes] Or, "honourable men." Schultens.

27. —is of an excellent spirit.] In the margin, "of a cool spirit." A man of understanding is of a well tempered spirit, not too forward in putting himself forth. Bp. Hall.

Chap. XVIII. ver. 1. Through desire a man, &c.] He that in a fervent desire of knowledge has set himself apart to its continual study, labours to inform himself in all parts of wisdom, so that he may not be a stranger to any kind of learning. Bp. Hall.

"Having separated himself."—A total separation from society and its pleasures, for the pursuit of wisdom, cannot be the meaning of the text, because that is contrary to the main tenour of the book of Proverbs; and besides, it is obvious that every one man's sense, however excellent, unless it mixes in society with that of others, always degenerates into singularity and caprice. Seed.

2. A fool hath no delight &c.] A fool will never take pleasure in true understanding, but all the design of his studies is to make a vain ostentation of wisdom unto others. Bp. Patrick.

3. When the wicked cometh,] Wheresoever the wicked cometh, he is apt to cast contempt and reproach on others. Bp. Hall.

4. The words of a man's mouth &c.] This sentence expresses the depth, the abundance, the clearness, and the force of the counsels of the wise man. Calmet.

5. — to accept the person of the wicked,] To shew favour or partiality to the wicked. Calmet. See Job xiii. 8, 10.

6. — his mouth calleth for strokes.] He increases a difference which may arise between others, till from words they come to blows. Bp. Patrick.

8. — are as wounds,] The Hebrew word here rendered "wounds," occurs no where else in the Bible, and translators have differed much in rendering the verse. "The words of the talebearer inflict a deadly wound on those who are the objects of his calumny, and sink deep into the minds of all who hear them." Bp. Patrick. The Hebrew word is allied to one in Arabick, which signifies "to swallow quickly or greedily." Thus perhaps the meaning may be, "are like dainties which are eagerly swallowed up by those who hear them." Schultens. Otherwise, "are like subtile poisons, which insinuate themselves, and produce their effects insensibly, for they penetrate into the inward parts of the belly, where they lie rankling and gnawing the vitals." Dr. Durell.

11. The rich man's wealth is his strong city,] This verse seems opposed to the preceding. The righteous rests all his strength on God, the name of God is his strong tower; but the rich man regards his riches as an impregnable fortress. Calmet.

14. The spirit of a man &c.] A resolute and unbounded spirit is able to bear up against infirmities of mind and body: but if the heart of a man be wounded, and dejected with any crosses which befall him, what means has he of any longer sustaining himself? there remains no remedy, but he must needs droop and yield. Bp. Hall.

—— but a wounded spirit who can bear?] The words admit also of being rendered, "a wounded (or dejected) spirit, who can raise it up?" As both senses are true and pertinent, we may well take the passage in both; for the misery of a broken spirit is, that it is very hard to be borne, and that it is without remedy or support. The words may be understood, not of a wounded conscience merely, but of a wounded spirit in general, wounded by grief, and sinking under its load of troubles, no particular cause of trouble being expressed. They contain a caution against yielding too far to any troubles or misfortunes, against letting our spirits sink, or our courage fail us in our day of calamity. Dr. Waterland.

16. — maketh room for him, &c.] Opens a way for him, and procures him admittance before great men. Calmet. See note on Gen. xxi. 27.

17. He that is first &c.] He that is first in telling his own cause, seems to have justice on his side; but his neighbour cometh and examines what was said by him, and then shews the falsity of it. Dr. Wells.

18. The lot causeth contentions &c.] In some cases of difficult adjustment, the casting of lots is an equal way of determining the controversy, and of putting each party in quiet possession of that which falls to his share. Bp. Patrick.

22. Whoso findeth a wife] The Greek and almost all the old versions read, "whoso findeth a good wife." Dr. Durell. The meaning is, "one who truly answers to the character of a wife." Dr. Wells. "Obtaineth favour of the Lord;" hath met with an excellent blessing, and ought thankfully to acknowledge the favour of God in guiding his mind to so happy a choice. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. XIX. ver. 1. — than he that is perverse &c.] Than he that gathers great riches by fraud and circumvention, which he takes to be cunning, but which will prove folly in the end. Bp. Patrick.

12. — as the roaring of a lion; &c.] The roaring of a lion, it is said, is so terrible, that, in a wild state, all other animals fly away in consternation at the very sound. In the same manner, cruel and headstrong kings spread on every side alarm and consternation. Calmet.

—— as dew upon the grass.] In hot Eastern climates, where it rarely rains in summer, the copious dews which fall during the night, contribute greatly to the nourishment of vegetables in general. The dew, says Hasselquist, speaking of the excessively hot weather in Egypt, is particularly serviceable to the trees, which would otherwise never be able to resist the heat; but with this assistance they thrive well and blossom. Parkhurst.

13. — are a continual dropping.] Like a roof which continually drops with rain. Implying, that it is not more difficult to live in a house with such a roof, than with a quarrelsome woman. Calmet. The old English version explains "continual dropping" by "rain that droppeth and rotteth a house;" perhaps the meaning may be, like the continued dropping of the eaves of a house, or any continued gentle falling of water, than which nothing is apt to be more tiresome or distracting. Dr Durell.

14. — a prudent wife is from the Lord.] A prudent and virtuous wife is an especial blessing from God. Bp. Hall.

15. — casteth into a deep sleep;] Insensibly sinks the mind into a dull stupidity and unconcernedness about necessary things. Bp. Patrick.

16. — he that despiseth his ways] Cares not in how disorderly a manner he lives. Dr. Wells.

17. He that hath pity &c.] He that hath compassion on the poor, and relieves their necessities, does not impoverish but enrich himself. For the Lord considers that which is given to the poor as lent to Himself, and will not fail to make a full compensation, returning the benefit he hath done to others with large interest and increase of blessings on himself and his posterity. Bp. Patrick.

Sir Thomas More, a famous Lord Chancellor of England, used always to say, "There was more rhetorick," more persuasive argument, "in this little sentence, than in a whole library." Bp. Horne.

19. A man of great wrath &c.] A man that is subject to frequent and extreme passions of anger, cannot avoid many and great inconveniences, which he brings on himself: and if thou do in a friendly manner free him from some dangerous effects of his intemperance, he will "do it again," he will repeat the same misconduct. Bp. Hall.

21. — the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand.] That which God has in His everlasting counsels either determined to do Himself, or to suffer to be done by any of His creatures, shall, whether we will or not, undoubtedly so come to pass, as He hath appointed. Bp. Sanderson.

22. The desire of a man is his kindness:] There is nothing more desirable for a man than to have wherewithal to be kind to others, and to confer obligations on his friends and neighbours. Bp. Patrick.

—— a poor man is better than a liar.] If a wealthy man promise much and perform nothing, a poor man, who is unable to undertake or to perform, is better than he. Bp. Hall.

24. A slothful man hideth &c.] The word which we translate "bosom," signifies more properly "a pan" or "dish." Thus the verse is rendered by many, "The slothful man hideth or plungeth his hand in the pan, and will not so much as (that is, it irketh or grieveth him to) bring it to his mouth again." In illustration of which sense it is to be remarked, that, to this day, the Arabs and Moors make use at their meals of neither knives, forks, nor spoons, but only of their hands and fingers, in eating pottage, or what we call spoon meats. To this purpose Le Bruyn says, "The Arabs in feeding on milk use no spoons. They dip their hands into the milk, which is placed before them in a wooden bowl, and sup it out of the palms of their hands." Parkhurst, Harmer.

25. Smite a scorner, and the simple will beware:] Punish severely a derider of religion; and, even if it do him no good, those incautious persons whom he hath deluded will be awakened by it to greater circumspection. Bp. Patrick.

27. — that causeth to err from the words of knowledge.] By "the words of knowledge" we are here to understand, generally, the precepts of virtue and religion; and the sum of the advice given is, that we should be careful to guard against the arts and insinuations of such as set themselves up for teachers of infidelity and irreligion. *Bp. Chap. XX. ver. 1. Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging:] Excess of wine beguiles a man of his senses, and incites him to wanton wickedness and violence. Bp. Hall.

2. — sinneth against his own soul.] Incurs the danger of death. Dr. Isham.

4. The sluggard will not plow by reason of the cold;] In Syria they begin to plow about the latter end of September, and sow their earliest wheat about the middle of October. The frosts are never severe enough to prevent their ploughing all the winter. Dr. Russell.

5. Counsel in the heart of man &c.] Though the designs and intentions of some men are as hard to be sounded as deep waters; yet there are persons of such penetrating understandings, and of so great a reach, that they will find means to discover them, and to draw them out. Bp. Patrick.

6. — but a faithful man who can find?] A faithful man, one who will steadily perform what he has promised, and what he has boasted he would perform. Schultens.

8. A king that sitteth in the throne of judgment &c.] A king who acts justly.

10. Divers weights, &c.] A fraudulent diversity of weights and measures is abominable unto the Lord. Bp. Hall.

11. Even a child &c.] It is not difficult, by the carriage and disposition of a person in childhood, to judge what is to be hoped or feared of him in riper years; either good or evil begins to shew itself betimes. Bp. Hall.

12. The hearing ear, &c.] We are here reminded, that we derive from God all that we have, and all that we are, and that therefore none ought to take glory to himself for any excellent qualities of mind or body which he may possess. Calmet.

13. — open thine eyes,] That is, arise betimes in the morning, and follow some honest employment. Dr. Wells.

14. It is naught, — saith the buyer:] That is, the buyer unjustly tries to overreach the seller, by disparaging his goods: but when he has obtained them at his own price, he boasts of having tricked him. Dr. Wells.

16. Take his garment] Take a garment (take the uttermost security thou canst) from him who is so inconsiderate as to become surety for an utter stranger; and also take a present pledge of him who has the folly to become surety for a strange or infamous woman. Dr. Wells.

17. Bread of deceit] Under the name of the "bread of deceit" may be included all things wrongfully obtained, which, however they may please in the beginning, will bring sorrow and pain in the conclusion. Bp. Patrick.

20. — his lamp shall be put out in obscure darkness.] His comfort and help shall be taken from him when he has most need of it, and he shall be left utterly miserable and disconsolate. Bp. Hall.

22. Say not thou, I will recompense &c.] Take not revenge for an injury received, where thou art not the proper judge, but leave thy cause to the Lord, and expect His righteous sentence. Bp. Patrick.

16 The man that wandereth out of the

24. Man's goings are of the Lord;] No man can take one step towards any thing he designs, without the permission of the Lord; who sometimes overrules the motions of men unto ends so far distant from their thoughts, that it is impossible for them to know what the event shall be of any thing they undertake. Bp. Patrick.

25. It is a snare to the man &c.] That man entangleth his soul in the snares of death, who taketh back to a profane use that which is once consecrated to God, and who, after he has vowed any thing to the Lord, argues within himself how he may alter that holy purpose, and defraud God of His due. Bp. Hall.

26. — and bringeth the wheel over them.] A metaphor, to express the due punishment of the wicked, taken from the custom of threshing corn by means of a wheel drawn over it by oxen, Isai. xxviii. 27, 28. Bp. Patrick.

27. The spirit of man &c.] The soul is a principle of light to guide and direct man in all his motions, enabling him to reflect, not only on his own actions, but on his most secret thoughts, and to discover the good or evil which is in them. Dr. Wells.

30. The blueness of a wound &c.] The meaning seems to be, that a wicked man, who has received due correction for his crimes, will be cured of them, or will not so easily fall into the like again; and that though stripes chiefly affect the body, yet they have likewise an effect on (the chambers of the belly) the inward recesses of the mind; restraining the offender by the fear of punishment. That this is the meaning of the Hebrew, rendered "the inward parts of the belly," appears from that elegant comparison of the conscience or spirit of a man, verse 27, to a light within him, searching out and discovering his most secret thoughts. Dr. Gray.

Chap. XXI. ver. 1. The king's heart is &c.] It is not in the power of kings, much less of other men, either to do or to design what they please, but their very wills are subject to the great Lord of all, who diverts them as easily from what they intend, or inclines them to that which they resolve against, as the gardener draws the streams of water, through the trenches he cuts, into what part of the ground he thinks good. Bp. Patrick.

4. — the plowing of the wicked,] The designs and contrivances of the wicked. Bp. Patrick.

5. — that is hasty] Who hopes to get rich rapidly by improper means.

6. The getting of treasures &c.] Wealth acquired by falsehood and lying is altogether uncertain and unstable; and will occasion utter destruction both of soul and body to him who unjustly acquires it. Bp. Hall. "Is a vanity tossed to and fro;" is not more durable than heaps of chaff or clouds of smoke, which are soon dissipated by the wind. Bp. Patrick.

8. — and strange:] Alienated from God and goodness. Dr. Isham.

9. — in a corner of the housetop,] During the summer season, it was usual to sleep on the tops of the houses, which were flat and properly guarded by a parapet wall; for which purpose little arbours were formed upon them. This, however pleasant in fine weather, must have been much otherwise in bad weather. Harmer.

12. — but God overthroweth &c.] The word "God" is not in the Hebrew, and is inserted to make up the sense: still the meaning is sufficiently good without this insertion, if by the term "righteous man," we understand not a private person, but a just and upright magistrate. The sense may then be, "A just judge makes a prudent but strict scrutiny into all the actions of a wicked man's family, that he may so punish them for their rapine, violence, and extortion, as to deprive them of all power to do further mischief." Bp. Patrick.

25 [o] The desire of the slothful killeth him; for his hands refuse to labour.

26 He coveteth greedily all the day long: but the [p] righteous giveth and spareth not.

27 [q] The sacrifice of the wicked is abomination: how much more, when he bringeth it † with a wicked mind?

28 [r] † A false witness shall perish: but the man that heareth speaketh constantly.

29 A wicked man hardeneth his face: but as for the upright, he ‖ directeth his way.

30 [s] There is no wisdom nor understanding nor counsel against the LORD.

CHAP. XXII.

[a] A GOOD name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and ‖ loving favour rather than silver and gold.

2 [b] The rich and poor meet together: the LORD is the maker of them all.

3 [c] A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself: but the simple pass on, and are punished.

4 [d] ‖ By humility and the fear of the LORD are riches, honour, and life.

5 Thorns and snares are in the way of the froward: he that doth keep his soul shall be far from them.

6 ‖ Train up a child † in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it.

7 The rich ruleth over the poor, and the borrower is servant † to the lender.

8 [e] He that soweth iniquity shall reap vanity: ‖ and the rod of his anger shall fail.

9 [f] † He that hath a bountiful eye shall be blessed; for he giveth of his bread to the poor.

17. — that loveth wine and oil] That loveth eating and drinking.

18. The wicked shall be a ransom &c.] It frequently falls out, through the wise and just providence of God, that those calamities which threatened to seize on the godly and righteous man, fall, in their stead, on the wicked and transgressors. Bp. Hall.

24. Proud and haughty scorner &c.] He that deals proudly in his anger, is worthy to be branded with the name of an insolent scorner. Bp. Hall.

25. The desire of the slothful killeth him;] The slothful man is consumed by vain longings.

27. — when he bringeth it with a wicked mind?] When at the very time he is projecting some wicked design which he thinks to sanctify by his sacrifices. Bp. Patrick.

28. — but the man that heareth] The man who heard, that is, who testifies only to what he heard, "speaketh" convincingly, so as to carry his point. Bate, Parkhurst.

29. — hardeneth his face:] He hardens his face against shame, laughs at correction, and impudently defends the evil he has done. The upright, on the contrary, watches over his ways, and corrects them when he is made aware of his errours. Calmet.

30. There is no wisdom &c. — against the Lord.] Wisdom, counsel, &c. avail nothing when they oppose the counsels and decrees of Heaven. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. XXII. ver. 1. — and loving favour] The loving favour of good men. Dr. Wells.

2. The rich and poor meet together: &c.] The obvious meaning of this proverbial speech is, that the rich and poor are mingled, or rather associated together, as members of the same community; under very different circumstances indeed, as to their outward appearance and condition, but with a manifest equality, as to their nature and origin; "the Lord is maker of them all." Dean Moss.

3. — foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself:] Foresees a calamity before it comes, and withdraws himself from the danger into a place of safety. Bp. Patrick.

6. Train up a child &c.] In these words are contained, 1st, the duty of parents and instructors, "Train up a child in the way he should go;" that is, in the course of life which he ought to lead; instruct him carefully in the knowledge and practice of his whole duty to God and man, which he ought to perform and observe all the days of his life: 2d, the fruit and benefit of good education, that, "when he is old, he will not depart from it." This we must understand according to the moral probability of things, not as if this happy effect did always and infallibly follow upon the good education of a child, but that this very frequently is, and may probably be hoped and presumed to be, the fruit and effect of a pious and prudent education: though exceptions may occur, yet they are not sufficient to infringe the general truth of the assertion. Abp. Tillotson.

7. — and the borrower &c.] Loses his liberty, and depends on the will and pleasure of the lender. Bp. Patrick.

9. He that hath a bountiful eye] He who freely gives, and delights to afford pleasure to others; opposed to him who has an evil eye. "Is thine eye evil, &c." Matt. xx. 15. Calmet.

"Good of eye," as in the margin, denotes kindness or benevolence in heart, which quality is usually accompanied with a good natured benevolent eye or look. On the contrary, "evil in eye," is equivalent to envious, grudging, chap. xxiii. 6; xxviii. 22. Parkhurst.

4 [a] Labour not to be rich: cease from thine own wisdom.

[a] 1 Tim. 6. 9, 10.

13. The slothful man saith, &c.] The slothful man feigns idle excuses, and pretences of danger, when he ought to be employed on his business. Bp. Hall.

14. The mouth of strange women &c.] The plausible and smooth tongue of a harlot is no less dangerous than a deep pit fairly covered, into which if a man fall, there is small hope of his recovering himself; and it is a fearful sign and effect of God's anger to be given over to her enticements. Bp. Hall.

15. Foolishness is bound in the heart of a child;] There is a foolish waywardness, which is natural to the child, and cleaves close to its disposition. Bp. Hall.

16. — and he that giveth to the rich,] He that giveth to the rich and powerful, to induce them to wink at his oppression of others. Dr. Wells.

17. Bow down thine ear, &c.] From this verse, all interpreters have observed, that another form of speech, different from the preceding, begins and continues to the twenty-fifth chapter. From the beginning of the tenth chapter, to this place, the instructions of wisdom, are delivered in short sentences, and proverbs properly so called, which have seldom any connexion. But now follow exhortations and precepts in the imperative mood, and those comprehended in two, three, or more verses. Bp. Patrick.

18. — they shall withal be fitted in thy lips.] "They shall withal be ready upon thy lips." Dr. Durell. So that thou shalt be able to produce them as there is occasion, and aptly communicate them for other men's instruction. Bp. Patrick.

24. — thou shalt not go:] Rather, "Go not," for both parts of the sentence are expressed in the same tense. Dr. Durell.

27. If thou hast nothing to pay, &c.] If thou hast nothing to pay, why shouldest thou be so egregiously foolish as only to incense the creditor against thee, by taking upon thee to pay what thou art not able, and so provoke him to shew thee no pity, but even to take away thy bed from under thee. Dr. Wells.

29. — he shall stand before kings;] He shall soon be preferred to the service of his prince, and shall not continue long in the service of a private person. Dr. Wells.

Chap. XXIII. ver. 1. When thou sittest to eat with a ruler,] As the foregoing chapter closes with an observation concerning the qualities of a person who is most likely to come to preferment, so this begins with a caution to him, as to his behaviour when he is promoted to it. Solomon advises such a person to be very considerate on such occasions who and what is before him, and to be always on his guard lest he commit excess, or betray want of respect. Bp. Patrick.

2. — put a knife to thy throat,] Be careful by all means to restrain thy wanton appetite, if thou be a man given to please thy palate. Bp. Hall. This is a bold Eastern phrase, expressive of the absolute necessity of restraining the appetites, and intimating that there is as much danger in indulging them, as there is in running against a knife applied to the throat. Dr. Durell.

4. Labour not to be rich:] Do not too eagerly strive and labour to be rich; and follow not thy own carnal wisdom, which suggests to thee wrong ways to the hasty acquirement of wealth. Bp. Hall.

5. Wilt thou set thine eyes] Wilt thou be so intent upon riches, and pursue them with such haste and earnestness, which, perhaps, thou canst never catch; or which if thou dost, may be gone as fast as they came; and by all thy care and pains never be recovered?

"They fly away as an eagle." He sets forth the inconstancy of riches by the flight of an eagle, which of all birds is observed to fly swiftest and highest "toward heaven." Bp. Patrick.

6—8. Eat thou not the bread &c.] Court not the acquaintance of a malicious person; whatever kindness he may shew thee will be dearly paid for, and all thy friendly language will be lost on him.

10. — enter not into the fields &c.] Invade not the estates of the fatherless; for God (ver. 11.) is in a special manner their Redeemer and Protector, who is mighty above all others. Dr. Wells.

13. — he shall not die.] He shall be preserved from destruction. Dr. Isham.

18. For surely there is an end;] For surely there shall be a blessed reward of all thy holy endeavours, and thy expectation of a joyful retribution shall not be disappointed. Bp. Hall.

27. — is a deep ditch;] From which it is difficult to escape. Dr. Isham. See chap. xxii. 14.

29. — who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause?] Who is given to idle obscene words? who suffers stripes and wounds in distempered frays? Bp. Hall.

31. Look not thou upon the wine &c.] Suffer not thine eyes to be tempted by beholding with too much pleasure the pure and grateful colour of wine, when it shews itself in the cup and sparkles, through the strength and spirit that is in it. Bp. Hall.

—— when it is red,] Red wine is more esteemed in the East than white; and we are told in the Travels of Olearius, that it is customary with the Armenian Christians in Persia to put Brazil wood, or saffron, into their wine, to give it an higher colour, when the wine is not so red as they like; as they set little value on white wine. Harmer.

BE not thou [a] envious against evil men, neither desire to be with them.

2 [b] For their heart studieth destruction, and their lips talk of mischief.

3 Through wisdom is an house builded; and by understanding it is established:

4 And by knowledge shall the chambers be filled with all precious and pleasant riches.

14 [f] So shall the knowledge of wisdom be unto thy soul: when thou hast found it, [g] then there shall be a reward, and thy expectation shall not be cut off.

15 Lay not wait, O wicked man, against the dwelling of the righteous; spoil not his resting place:

16 [h] For a just man falleth seven times, and riseth up again: but the wicked shall fall into mischief.

17 [i] Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth, and let not thine heart be glad when he stumbleth:

18 Lest the LORD see it, and † it displease him, and he turn away his wrath from him.

35. They have stricken me, &c.] This verse describes the drunken man's insensibility to blows.

Chap. XXIV. ver. 1. Be not thou envious &c.] The proneness of good men to be dejected at the prosperity of the ungodly, and so to be tempted to imitate them, is the reason that the admonition given in this verse is so often repeated. We find it before at chap. iii. 31; xxiii. 17; and it is repeated at ver. 19. of this chapter. Bp. Patrick.

5. — a man of knowledge increaseth strength.] A man of knowledge and understanding imparts a great increase of strength and defence to the whole city or community in which he is. Bp. Hall.

7. Wisdom is too high for a fool:] Wisdom is too high for a vain or inconsiderate person duly to value, and consequently to take sufficient pains to attain; whence it is, that he "openeth not his mouth in the gate," never becomes a judge or publick magistrate. Dr. Wells.

9. The thought of foolishness is sin:] He that is wickedly foolish entertains commonly no thoughts but sinful. Bp. Hall.

—— the scorner is an abomination to men.] It is worthy of remark that Solomon frequently exhorts us not to be scorners or scoffers in religion. Such persons he considers as the worst sort of sinners, as incurable fools and reprobates. The scorner, if he be in a mean and poor condition, does all the mischief he can in his narrow sphere of action; if he be in an exalted station, he is a publick curse and a national calamity. Dr. Jortin.

11, 12. If thou forbear &c.] The sum of the instruction conveyed in these verses is, that every man, according to his place and power, and especially those who are armed with any publick authority, are bound, both in charity and in justice, to use the utmost of their power, and to embrace all lawful opportunities, by all lawful means, to help those to right that suffer wrong; to stand by their poorer brethren and neighbours in the day of calamity and distress, to defend them in their righteous causes, to protect them from injuries, and to deliver them out of the hands of those who are too mighty, or too crafty, for them, who seek, either by violence or cunning, to deprive them of their lives or livelihoods. Bp. Sanderson.

13. — eat thou honey, &c.] The wise man shews with what pleasure the instructions of wisdom should be received, (ver. 14,) and how profitable also and necessary they are, by the example of honey, which was not only esteemed for its grateful flavour in those countries, but deemed most useful for the support of human life. It was held in great esteem for food, for drink, for medicine, for preserving of dead bodies, and particularly for infants. See Isai. vii. 15; Ecclus. xxxix. 26. Hence the ancient Christians used to give a little milk and honey to those who were baptized, as persons newly regenerate and born again; because honey, as well as milk, was the nutriment of little children in those countries. See 1 Sam. xiv. 27; Luke xxiv. 41, 42. All this may be applied to heavenly wisdom, from which the mind derives the greatest satisfaction, and therefore it ought to be our daily diet, from the beginning of our days to the end of them. Bp. Patrick.

16. For a just man falleth seven times,] Rather, "Though a just man falleth seven times, yet will he rise again." Dr. Durell. A righteous man, if he fall into manifold miseries and calamities, yet, through the goodness of God, shall be delivered out of them all. Bp. Hall.

18. Lest the Lord see it, &c.] Lest the Lord see thy inward gladness, which man cannot see, and such a sinful and unreasonable feeling displease Him, and "He turn away His wrath" from the wicked man, and transfer it on thee. Dr. Wells.

21. —and meddle not with them that are given to change:] And have nothing to do with those, whose discontent with the present state of things, or continual love of novelty, makes them desire a change of government, and depart from their duty both to God and man. Bp. Patrick.

26. Every man shall kiss his lips &c.] Every good man shall applaud and bless the mouth of him who giveth an upright sentence in judgment. Bp. Hall.

27. Prepare thy work without, &c.] Get thy estate in good order, and then go, build thy house.

28. —and deceive not with thy lips.] The word which we render "deceive" signifies, in the original, any damage, any inconvenience, brought upon a man in the way of slander, calumny, backsliding, or any other injurious manner of representing him. We must consider every degree of this sin as forbidden in the precept. Dr. S. Clarke.

29. Say not, I will do so to him &c.] That is, whether revenge, or any other feeling, be the temptation to the practice, the sin itself is of the deepest die, and condemned amongst the most detestable crimes, both by reason and Scripture. Dr. S. Clarke.

31. —and the stone wall] Stone walls were frequently used for the preservation of vineyards, as well as living fences. Van Egmont and Heyman, describing the country round about Saphet, a celebrated city of Galilee, tell us, "the country round is finely improved, the declivity being covered with vines supported by low walls." Harmer.

Chap. XXV. Here begins the third part of the book of Proverbs; which is a collection made by some belonging to Hezekiah, and acknowledged here, in the entrance of the book, as well as the former, to be Solomon's. Bp. Patrick. See the Introduction.

Ver. 2. It is the glory of God to conceal &c.] It is the peculiar glory of God, as being a prerogative justly due to His transcendant majesty, wisdom, goodness, and justice, "to conceal a thing;" that is, not to make known all the reasons of His providence, or of His decrees or judgments. Dr. Wells.

3. The heaven for height, &c.] It is as impossible for vulgar minds to penetrate into the secrets of state, and understand the counsels and designs of wise princes, and the various ways and means whereby they project to effect their ends, as it is to know how far it is from hence to the highest heavens, or how far to the centre of the earth upon which we tread. Bp. Patrick, Dr. Durell.

6. Put not forth thyself &c.] He here admonishes subjects not to be vainly ambitious, nor bold and forward in thrusting themselves into offices that do not belong to them, but to be modest, and, according to our Saviour's rule, Luke xiv. 8, to be invited to honour, rather than to seek it. Bp. Patrick.

9. Debate thy cause &c.] If there be a difference between thy neighbour and thee, take him aside, and in a friendly manner argue the matter with him alone, and discover not a secret unkindness to a third person, till thou seest no other way of reconciliation. Bp. Hall.

28 [i] He that hath no rule over his own spirit is like a city that is broken down, and without walls.

11. A word fitly spoken &c.] The general design of this sentence is manifestly to express the value and gratefulness of a word of counsel, reproof, or comfort, delivered in due time and place. Bp. Patrick. The Hebrew, translated in its most literal form, is, "a word spoken on its wheels," as the margin gives it; figuratively expressing a discourse which is grateful, which flows smoothly, agreeably, and without harshness. Calmet.

—— like apples of gold in pictures of silver.] As oranges or citrons in curiously engraved work of silver. Parkhurst. It may be doubtful whether by "apples of gold" be meant "apples that look like gold," or "apples made of gold." "Like golden balls or beautiful apples presented in a silver network basket." Bp. Patrick. Solomon probably alludes to the pomegranates and net-work in the temple, 1 Kings vii. 20.

12. —an ornament of fine gold,] The Hebrew words seem to mean any costly ornament wrought with great labour and pains. Parkhurst.

13. As the cold of snow in the time of harvest, &c.] As the mixing of snow with wine in the sultry time of harvest is pleasing and refreshing, so a successful messenger revives the spirit of his master who sent him, and who was ready to faint from an apprehension of his failure. The practice of cooling wines with snow was usual among the Eastern nations. It was derived from the Asiaticks and Greeks to the Romans. Plutarch describes the manner in which they preserved the snow by covering it with straw, and coarse cloths unshorn. In some hot countries it was often difficult to obtain it, and they were obliged to search into the hollow cliffs to collect it. Mount Hebron, which was always covered with snow, plentifully supplied the inhabitants of the country near it, from whence it was often carried to Tyre. Barry.

14. Whoso boasteth himself &c.] He that makes bountiful and deluding promises of great gifts which will never be performed, is like a cloud that makes a shew of rain which it cannot yield. Bp. Hall.

15. —a soft tongue breaketh the bone.] A gentle and submissive answer softens and renders supple the hardest and most inflexible heart. Bp. Horne.

18. —is a maul,] Or hammer—to beat down a man's fame, or break in pieces his estate. Bp. Patrick.

Solomon very fully and elegantly expresses the destructive nature of this sin; he intimates that, among all the instruments of ruin and mischief which have been devised by mankind, none is of more pernicious consequence to human society than perjury and breach of faith. It is a pestilence that usually walketh in darkness, a secret stab and blow, against which, frequently, there is no possibility of defence. Abp. Tillotson.

20. As he that taketh away a garment &c.] He that offers musick to a man in deep heaviness does it as unseasonably as he that takes away a covering in extreme cold weather. Bp. Hall.

—— as vinegar upon nitre,] By the natron or nitre of the ancients is not meant what we now call nitre, or saltpetre, but the (mineral) alkali, called soda by chemists, which occasions a strong fermentation with all acids. Thus, in the passage before us, the unsuitableness of the singing of songs to a heavy heart is very finely compared to the opposition which subsists between vinegar and nitre. For the nitre of the ancients, see further, Jer. ii. 22. Dr. Shaw.

22. —thou shalt heap coals of fire &c.] If he have the least spark of goodness in him, it will work a change in his mind, and make him throw off all his enmities; or, if it have the contrary effect, he shall have so much the sorer punishment, and thou shalt not lose thy reward, which the Lord Himself will give thee. Bp. Patrick.

23. The north wind driveth away rain: &c.] It appears, from the version given in the margin, that these words admit of two opposite senses. Either, "as the north wind scatters clouds and drives away rain, so a severe countenance puts a stop to a slanderous tongue;" or, "as the north wind begetteth rain, so a backbiting tongue raiseth up anger and indignation." Bp. Patrick.

27. —is not glory.] Proves at last not honourable, but reproachful, to them. Bp. Patrick.

28. —that hath no rule over his own spirit] Or over his passions, is thereby exposed to innumerable dangers, like a city without walls. Dr. Wells.

Chap. XXVI. ver. 2. As the bird by wandering, &c.] The meaning of this verse has been variously explained. Curses which fly out of men's mouths causelessly, shall no more fall where they intend, than a swallow which wanders uncertainly, or a dove which flies away swiftly, will settle according to their direction. Bp. Patrick. The meaning may perhaps be, that evils, natural or moral, owe not their being to chance, like the accidental flight of birds in this or that direction, but are all directed by the will of an all-wise superintending Providence. Dr. Durell.

3. — a bridle for the ass,] According to our English notions, we should rather say, A bridle for an horse, and a whip for an ass. It should be considered, however, that the Eastern asses, particularly those of the Arabian breed, are much larger, more beautiful, and better goers, than those in our cold northerly countries, and so, no doubt, they were anciently in Palestine, where, as we find from many passages, they were the beasts on which people usually rode. See Job xxxix. 7. Parkhurst.

4, 5. Answer not a fool &c.] In the first of these verses the meaning is, Enter not into contest with a fool. In the second, Suffer not his folly to go unreproved: both to be determined by times and circumstances.

6. He that sendeth a message &c.] He that sends a witless man, or one that minds nothing but his pleasure, to treat about his business, will be sure not only to miscarry in it, but to suffer great damage by his ill management. Bp. Patrick.

7. The legs of the lame &c.] A wise saying as ill becomes a fool, as dancing does a cripple: for, as his lameness never so much appears as when he would seem nimble, so the other's folly is never so ridiculous as when he would seem wise. Bp. Patrick.

8. As he that bindeth a stone &c.] The application of this comparison to the moral sentiment seems to be sufficiently obvious; the honour bestowed upon a fool is thrown away, as the stone from a sling. Dr. Durell. Or, the sense of the marginal translation is good and clear, "As he that putteth a precious stone in a heap of stones, &c." The precious stone in the one case, and the honour in the other, is thrown away and lost. Parkhurst.

9. As a thorn goeth up] It is no more fit for fools to meddle with a wise speech, than for a drunken man to handle a bush of thorns. Bp. Hall.

They hurt themselves by the interpretation and application of it, as a drunken man does his hand with a hook or thorn, which he has not steadiness to handle. Parkhurst.

11. As a dog returneth to his vomit, &c.] As a dog which has often vomited by eating too much food which is nauseous to his stomach, yet will do the like again, and so make himself vomit again, so a fool that is not to be reclaimed returns to his folly, though he has suffered often for it before. Dr. Wells. It is said, that, of all animals, the dog is the only one known that will return to eat food which it has vomited. Calmet.

12. Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit?] Pride makes men impatient of good advice and instruction, and that renders them incorrigible in their vices. Dr. S. Clarke.

13. The slothful man &c.] See before at chap. xxii. 13.

16. The sluggard &c.] The sluggard will not be beaten out of his sloth; and, however many wise men may endeavour to persuade him out of his dull idleness, yet he persists in his errour, and thinks himself herein wiser than them all. Bp. Hall.

19. — the man that deceiveth his neighbour, &c.] That is, who leads his neighbour into any mischief. Dr. S. Clarke.

21. As coals are to burning coals, &c.] Provoking language as quickly passes into quarrels, as dead coals do into burning coals, and wood into fire, when they are applied the one to the other. Bp. Patrick.

22. The words of a talebearer] See chap. xviii. 8.

23. Burning lips &c.] "Warm lips," that is, lips making warm and eager professions, and a bad deceitful heart. Parkhurst.

Before CHRIST about 700.

25 When he † speaketh fair, believe him not: for there are seven abominations in his heart.

26 ‖ Whose hatred is covered by deceit, his wickedness shall be shewed before the whole congregation.

27 [h] Whoso diggeth a pit shall fall therein: and he that rolleth a stone, it will return upon him.

[a] James 4. 13, &c.

2 Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth; a stranger, and not thine own lips.

3 A stone is † heavy, and the sand weighty; but a fool's wrath is heavier than them both.

4 † Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous; but who is able to stand before ‖ envy?

† Heb. Wrath is cruelty, and anger an overflowing.

5 Open rebuke is better than secret love.

6 [b] Faithful are the wounds of a friend; but the kisses of an enemy are ‖ deceitful.

[b] Ps. 141. 5.

7 The full soul † loatheth an honeycomb; but [c] to the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet.

[c] Job 6. 7.

8 As a bird that wandereth from her nest, so is a man that wandereth from his place.

9 Ointment and perfume rejoice the heart: so doth the sweetness of a man's friend † by hearty counsel.

Before CHRIST about 700.

† Heb. from the counsel of the soul.

10 Thine own friend, and thy father's friend, forsake not; neither go into thy brother's house in the day of thy calamity: for [d] better is a neighbour that is near than a brother far off.

[d] Chap. 17. 17. & 18. 24.

11 [e] My son, be wise, and make my heart glad, that I may answer him that reproacheth me.

12 [f] A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself; but the simple pass on, and are punished.

[f] Chap. 22. 3.

13 [g] Take his garment that is surety for a stranger, and take a pledge of him for a strange woman.

[g] Chap. 20. 16.

14 He that blesseth his friend with a loud voice, rising early in the morning, it shall be counted a curse to him.

15 [h] A continual dropping in a very rainy day and a contentious woman are alike.

[h] Chap. 19. 13.

16 Whosoever hideth her hideth the wind, and the ointment of his right hand, which bewrayeth itself.

17 Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend.

18 Whoso keepeth the fig tree shall eat the fruit thereof: so he that waiteth on his master shall be honoured.

19 As in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man.

20 Hell and destruction are † never full; so [i] the eyes of man are never satisfied.

[i] Eccles. 1. 8.

21 [k] As the fining pot for silver, and the furnace for gold; so is a man to his praise.

[k] Chap. 17. 3.

25. — there are seven abominations] There is a great variety of secret wickedness in his heart. Bp. Hall.

26. — shewed before the whole congregation.] Openly exposed to the view of all the world. Bp. Patrick. Made to appear before a publick court of judicature. Dr. Wells.

28. A lying tongue hateth &c.] A man of a lying tongue hates those whom he has wronged, from a consciousness of his injurious conduct, and from a knowledge that he has deserved their hatred. Bp. Hall.

Chap. XXVII. ver. 3. — is heavier than them both.] Is more intolerable, is more troublesome to bear. Bp. Hall.

5. Open rebuke is better than secret love.] He that rebukes others freely, when need requires, is a more valuable friend than he who from fear of offending has not courage to tell them of their faults. Bp. Patrick.

6. — the wounds of a friend;] The reproofs of a friend, however sharp and cutting. Dr. Wells.

8. — that wandereth from his place.] From his home or country. Dr. Durell.

10. — neither go into thy brother's house &c.] Neither go to thy brother's house for shelter and relief in the day of thy calamity, only because he is thy brother, unless thou art well assured beforehand that he is thy true friend as well as brother: for better is a neighbour that is near to one in true friendship and affection, than a brother that is only near in kin, but far off in affection. Dr. Wells.

14. He that blesseth his friend &c.] That is, lavishes on him flattering and unseasonable commendations. Dr. Isham.

16. Whosoever hideth her &c.] A contentious woman can no more be hid, than the wind which bloweth on the face, or the perfume of the ointment on the hand; these both will be perceived: so will the unquiet spirit of a contentious woman. Bp. Hall.

17. — so a man sharpeneth the countenance] So a man imparts to his friend alacrity and spirits. Dr. Durell. So, by the conversation of one friend with another, are the good parts and faculties of men improved. Bp. Hall.

18. Whoso keepeth] That is, diligently looks after it and preserves it from injury.

—— he that waiteth on his master] He that faithfully defends his master's person or reputation, and takes care of his estate, "shall be honoured;" shall be duly rewarded. Bp. Patrick.

19. — so the heart of man to man.] So he that looks into his friend's heart sees there his own heart. Bp. Hall.

20. Hell and destruction &c.] Meaning the grave, the state of the dead. See the note on Job xxvi. 5, 6.

—— so the eyes of man &c.] So the eyes of man, and also his desires, are never satisfied, but require some new object to please them. Dr. Wells.

21. — so is a man to his praise.] There is no way so sure of trying a man's discretion and temper, as by praising him: if he be vain and light, he will be puffed up with it; if he be wise and solid, he will not be moved by it. Bp. Hall.

Before CHRIST about 700.

22 Though thou shouldest bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him.

23 Be thou diligent to know the state of thy flocks, and † look well to thy herds.

24 For † riches are not for ever: and doth the crown endure † to every generation?

† Heb. strength. † Heb. to generation and generation?

25 The hay appeareth, and the tender grass sheweth itself, and herbs of the mountains are gathered.

26 The lambs are for thy clothing, and the goats are the price of the field.

27 And thou shalt have goats' milk enough for thy food, for the food of thy † Heb. life. houshold, and for the † maintenance for thy maidens.

CHAP. XXVIII.

General observations of impiety and religious integrity.

[a] Lev. 26. 36.

THE [a] wicked flee when no man pursueth: but the righteous are bold as a lion.

2 For the transgression of a land many are the princes thereof: but ‖ by a man of understanding and knowledge the state thereof shall be prolonged.

3 A poor man that oppresseth the poor is like a sweeping rain † which leaveth no food.

4 They that forsake the law praise the wicked: but such as keep the law contend with them.

5 Evil men understand not judgment: but they that seek the LORD understand all things.

Before CHRIST about 700.

6 [b] Better is the poor that walketh in his uprightness, than he that is perverse in his ways, though he be rich.

[b] Chap. 19. 1.

7 [c] Whoso keepeth the law is a wise son: but he that ‖ is a companion of riotous men shameth his father.

[c] Chap. 29. 3. ‖ Or, feedeth gluttons.

8 [d] He that by usury and † unjust gain increaseth his substance, he shall gather it for him that will pity the poor.

9 He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination.

10 [e] Whoso causeth the righteous to go astray in an evil way, he shall fall himself into his own pit: but the upright shall have good things in possession.

[e] Chap. 26. 27.

11 The rich man is wise † in his own conceit; but the poor that hath understanding searcheth him out.

† Heb. in his eyes.

15 As a roaring lion, and a ranging bear; so is a wicked ruler over the poor people.

16 The prince that wanteth understand-

22. — in a mortar among wheat] Before there were any publick mills, it was usual for those who could not afford the expense of a handmill in their houses to beat their corn with a pestle in a mortar. Calmet. The meaning is, So incurable is the folly and wickedness of some men, that though to reproofs and chidings you should add stripes and blows, they would not grow wiser or better. Bp. Patrick.

24. — and doth the crown endure] Even the crown itself will not continue to many generations, without due care to preserve its revenue. Bp. Patrick.

25. The hay appeareth,] Rather, "the herbage." See the note on Isaiah xv. 6.

26. — the goats are the price of the field.] "Are for the price of the field:" by selling thy goats, thou wilt pay for the cultivation of thy land, or purchase it for thyself. Calmet.

Chap. XXVIII. ver. 2. — many are the princes thereof:] The wickedness of a land is the cause of many changes in the princes and governours thereof, whereby both the people and princes, conspiring in evil, are punished. Bp. Hall. "Many are the princes;" that is, none reign long, or many reign together, opposing and thrusting out one another. Bp. Patrick.

3. A poor man &c.] A rich oppressor leaves a man poor, but a poor oppressor leaves to him nothing. Bp. Hall.

4. They that forsake the law praise the wicked:] They that willingly break and cast off the law of God, by so doing, give approbation and encouragement to wickedness. Bp. Hall.

5. — understand all things.] Understand their whole duty to God. Bp. Hall.

8. — he shall gather it for him that will pity the poor.] According to this remarkable saying of the wise man, the reason why so many estates are blasted so soon, and brought to nothing, is, that men do not render to God the duty and tribute which He has charged upon their estates for Himself and the poor; and then it is no wonder if God in His providence turn them out of their possession, and give their estate to others, who will be better tenants, and more careful to pay the duties He requires. Bp. Beveridge.

9. — from hearing the law,] That is, from obeying it. "Even his prayer shall be abomination;" however men of impious lives may trust to the forms of outward devotion, frequenting the church and service of God, and hearing His word and receiving His sacrament; let them not deceive themselves: God is not mocked. All this is so far from making amends for the impiety of their lives, that, on the contrary, the impiety of their lives spoils all the acceptance of their devotions. Abp. Tillotson.

If we live like Heathens or Infidels, our Christian prayers do but affront God's majesty. Lord Clarendon.

11. — searcheth him out.] Discovers his weakness. Dr. Isham.

12. — a man is hidden.] Good men are forced to hide themselves. Dr. Wells.

13. He that covereth his sins &c.] Here the blessing of God's mercy is declared to sinners, on the condition of their confessing and forsaking their sins; and this condition contains the whole nature of that great and necessary duty of repentance, without which none can have a reasonable hope of the mercy of God. Abp. Tillotson.

14. — the man that feareth] That is, who is cautious always: "but he that hardeneth his heart," that is, who is careless and negligent, shall fall into mischief. Dr. S. Clarke.

25 [p] He that is of a proud heart stirreth up strife: but he that putteth his trust in the LORD shall be made fat.

26 He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool: but whoso walketh wisely, he shall be delivered.

[b] Chap. 10. 1. & 15. 20. & 27. 11.

3 [b] Whoso loveth wisdom rejoiceth his father: [c] but he that keepeth company with harlots spendeth his substance.

[c] Chap. 5. 9. & 28. 7. Luke 15. 13.

4 The king by judgment establisheth the land: but † he that receiveth gifts overthroweth it.

5 A man that flattereth his neighbour spreadeth a net for his feet.

6 In the transgression of an evil man there is a snare: but the righteous doth sing and rejoice.

[d] Job 29. 16.

7 [d] The righteous considereth the cause of the poor: but the wicked regardeth not to know it.

‖ Or, set a city on fire.

8 Scornful men ‖ bring a city into a snare: but wise men turn away wrath.

9 If a wise man contendeth with a foolish man, whether he rage or laugh, there is no rest.

† Heb. Men of blood.

10 † The bloodthirsty hate the upright: but the just seek his soul.

11 A fool uttereth all his mind: but a wise man keepeth it in till afterwards.

12 If a ruler hearken to lies, all his servants are wicked.

13 [e] The poor and ‖ the deceitful man meet together: the LORD lighteneth both their eyes.

---

17. — let no man stay him.] Or, "no man shall stay him." Dr. Wells. He that murders a man shall never think himself safe, being pressed by his conscience, or pursued by the avenger of blood, and shall lead a restless life to his grave: all men shall refuse to succour him, and though they see him falling unawares into the pit, they shall not stop him. Bp. Patrick.

21. To have respect of persons &c.] For a judge to incline to consider the quality of the person, and not the merits of the cause that is brought before him, "is not good." Bp. Patrick.

22. — hath an evil eye,] Hath a covetous eye and a base niggardly heart; and "considereth not," &c. that is, knows not that through the just judgments of God this his immoderate eagerness will be punished with want and beggary. Bp. Hall.

24. — is the companion of a destroyer.] Is, for the heinousness of his sin, in the next degree to a murderer. Bp. Hall.

25. — shall be made fat.] Shall thrive and abound with plenty of all good things. Bp. Patrick.

27. — he that hideth his eyes] He that regards not the miseries of others, and is not willing so much as to know them. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. XXIX. ver. 1. — hardeneth his neck,] Refuses to be guided by reproofs, and to submit to them. The expression is taken from oxen in the yoke. Bp. Patrick.

5. — spreadeth a net for his feet.] Is so far from being a true friend, as he imagines, that he is a traitor to him, and leads him unawares into danger. Bp. Patrick.

6. In the transgression &c.] Rather, "The wicked is snared by transgression;" so these words are rendered at chap. xii. 13. Dr. Durell.

—— doth sing and rejoice.] Has always cause to be cheerful on account of his righteousness. Dr. Wells.

8. — bring a city into a snare:] Bring down judgments upon the city where they live. Bp. Hall.

9. — whether he rage or laugh, there is no rest.] Whether a wise man deal with him seriously and severely, or jestingly, he will not be able to prevail, either for his own peace or the other's reformation. Bp. Hall.

10. — seek his soul.] Labour to preserve him. Dr. Isham.

12. If a ruler hearken to lies, &c.] If a prince listen to the false suggestions of others, or too easily believe, without any examination, all the stories and accusations that are brought to him by others, he will fill his whole court with wicked men. Bp. Patrick.

13. The poor and the deceitful man &c.] The innocent poor man, and the crafty griping usurer, meet both together; and the Lord causeth His sun to shine on them both, maintaining them both in life, doing good outwardly even to the worst-deserving. Bp. Hall.

Before CHRIST about 700.

14 [f] The king that faithfully judgeth the poor, his throne shall be established for ever.

15 [g] The rod and reproof give wisdom: but [h] a child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame.

16 When the wicked are multiplied, transgression increaseth: [i] but the righteous shall see their fall.

17 [k] Correct thy son, and he shall give thee rest; yea, he shall give delight unto thy soul.

18 Where there is no vision, the people ‖ perish: but he that keepeth the law, happy is he.

19 A servant will not be corrected by words: for though he understand he will not answer.

20 Seest thou a man that is hasty ‖ in his words? there is more hope of a fool than of him.

21 He that delicately bringeth up his servant from a child shall have him become his son at the length.

22 [l] An angry man stirreth up strife, and a furious man aboundeth in transgression.

23 [m] A man's pride shall bring him low: but honour shall uphold the humble in spirit.

24 Whoso is partner with a thief hateth his own soul: he heareth cursing, and bewrayeth it not.

25 The fear of man bringeth a snare: but whoso putteth his trust in the LORD † shall be safe.

26 [n] Many seek † the ruler's favour; but every man's judgment cometh from the LORD.

Chap. XXX. ver. 1. — Agur] See the Introduction.

—— even the prophecy:] Even the weighty sentences. Dr. Wells. The lesson or charge. Dr. Durell.

2. Surely I am more brutish &c.] It would appear that his scholars came to him admiring his wisdom, and desiring to be resolved in many difficulties; to whom Agur modestly and humbly replied, Do not call me wise, for I am so far from that acuteness which is natural to one excelling in wisdom, that I am stupid in comparison with such a person; nay I cannot arrogate to myself the understanding of a comman man. Bp. Patrick.

3. — nor have the knowledge of the holy.] The knowledge of Divine things, of heavenly truths. Calmet.

4. Who hath ascended &c.] Indeed what can man do? How poor and impotent creatures we all are! Is any of us able to ascend up into heaven, and to descend thence again? Have we power to command any thing in these lower regions? Have we the rule of the winds, the waters, or the earth? Shew me the man who can or dares arrogate this power to himself. Bp. Hall.

—— who hath bound the waters in a garment?] Who can confine the waters of the sea within their proper limits, as if he had tied them "in a garment?" Calmet.

6. — thou be found a liar.] Be found guilty of the worst of forgeries in counterfeiting Divine inspiration. Dr. Wells.

7. Two things have I required of thee; &c.] Agur seems here to answer a question of his scholars respecting prayer, and enjoins them to pray as he himself was wont to do, I humbly beg only two things of Thee, O God, which I most earnestly beseech Thee I may not want, as long as I remain in this world. Bp. Patrick.

8. — give me neither poverty nor riches;] We must not consider Agur as praying absolutely against riches, or absolutely against poverty; for poverty and riches are of themselves things indifferent, and the blessing of God may go with them both; but it is a prayer of choice, or a comparative prayer: as if he had said, Give me, O God, if it be Thy will, the middle between both, and feed me with food convenient for me. For though all the three conditions be so far indifferent that a man may be good, and ought to be contented or resigned, in any of them, yet, if it were matter of choice, the middle is the easiest and most desirable. Dr. Jortin.

—— feed me with food convenient for me:] "With bread sufficient for me:" in the Syriack, "with the bread of my sufficiency or convenience." Dr. Hales.

This "convenient food" is in the original, "the bread of my competent allowance." It is even that "sufficient bread," that "daily bread," which Christ our Lord in His prayer hath taught us all to pray for. By "bread," or "food," the Hebrews understand all provisions for the use of life. Jos. Mede.

9. Lest I be full, &c.] That is, lest too much plenty make me worldly-minded, profane, and irreligious. To say in a contemptuous manner, Who is the Lord? is to deny the being or the providence of God. We may deny these by our words, or by our behaviour. To deny them by words, is to utter a lie; and to deny them by behaviour, may be called, to act a lie, and a lie of the most detestable kind. Dr. Jortin.

—— take the name of my God in vain.] That is, have recourse to perjury to clear myself from the charge of theft. Dr. Wells. Lest poverty tempt me to steal, and stealth involve me in perjury. Abp. Tillotson. It will illustrate this expression to mention, that the danger of perjury, on committing a theft, was greater among the Jews than among us, by reason of a custom or law amongst them, to tender an oath to those who were suspected of theft, and who were thus to clear themselves. Dr. Jortin.

10. — lest he curse thee, and thou be found guilty.] Lest in the bitterness of his soul he curse thee, and God hearing him should punish thy guiltiness. Bp. Hall.

11. There is a generation &c.] There are four descriptions of men (ver. 11—14.) worthy of our avoidance and detestation; the first is of graceless children who curse their parents, the next of false hypocrites and self-pleasers, the third of proud men who are exalted in their own opinions, the fourth of cruel oppressors who kill and devour the poor, &c. Bp. Hall.

13. — O how lofty are their eyes!] Who superciliously overlook other men, as if they were not worthy of the least regard from them. Bp. Patrick.

15. The horseleach &c.] This verse has considerable difficulty in it. It seems to contain an answer to a question which the disciples of Agur had propounded to him, after the manner of enigmatical discourses or riddles, what is most insatiable; to which he answers, The horseleach, which sucks the blood of other creatures till it bursts, as those wicked men (mentioned at ver. 14.) do the livelihood of the poor, till they ruin themselves. And as to this perpetual craving of more, the "horseleach has two daughters;" that is, there are two things so like to her in this, that they may be called her daughters, as they always cry, Give more. Bp. Patrick, Dr. Wells.

—— There are three things &c.] This he expresses after the manner of the Hebrews, who often, when intending to mention several things, separate them at first, beginning with a lesser number, and proceeding then to the greater. There are examples of this at Amos i. 3, 6, 9, &c. and also at Prov. vi. 16. and in this chapter, ver. 18, 21, &c. Bp. Patrick.

17. — the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, &c.] Meaning, they shall come to an infamous end, and their dead bodies shall be exposed, and become a prey to the ravens and eagles. Bp. Patrick.

18. There be three things &c.] In these words he resolves another riddle, which it appears had been proposed to him, namely, what things are most obscure and unaccountable, though ordinary and common. Bp. Patrick.

19. — the way of a serpent upon a rock;] A serpent seems here to be specified rather than any other animal, because he would be more likely to discover himself by the marks left behind him on the dust; but upon a rock he leaves no more trace than the eagle in the air, or the ship in the sea. Dr. Durell.

—— the way of a man &c.] In the Latin translation, the words are rendered with a very different sense, "The way of a man in his youth," alluding to the secret and imperceptible manner in which he advances from the feebleness, mental and bodily, of childhood, to the strength and stature of manhood. Calmet.

20. — she eateth, &c.] A modest way of expressing her unlawful commerce. Dr. Durell.

26. The conies &c.] See note at Levit. xi. 5. That the animal meant is "Israel's lamb," otherwise called Ashkoko, is confirmed by this passage in Proverbs, where they are described to be "a feeble folk," an expression probably alluding to their feet, which appear very inadequate to the work of digging holes in the rock: these feet are frequently round, very pulpy or fleshy; notwithstanding which, they build houses on the very hardest rocks, more inaccessible than those of the rabbit, in which they abide in greater safety, not by exertion of strength, (for, in Solomon's words, they are altogether "a feeble folk,") but by their own sagacity and judgment. Bruce.

27. The locusts &c.] See the notes on Exod. x. 4, and 15; and on Joel ii. 2, &c.

31. A greyhound;] The words in the Hebrew signify literally, "girt or narrow in the loins." Some suppose a horse to be meant. Bochart applies it to the greyhound. Dr. Russell says, that the greyhounds at Aleppo are of a very light slender make, and remarkably fleet. It is probable they had the same breed in Judea. Parkhurst.

2. What, my son? &c.] "What terms shall I employ, my son? &c." To shew her son what anxiety she feels to see him wise and happy, she expresses that she knows not how to begin to point out to him his duties, and the dangers he ought to avoid. Calmet.

6. Give strong drink &c.] Rather, give strong drink to the man that is dejected in spirits, and near to perishing, through extremity of affliction. Bp. Hall.

8. Open thy mouth &c.] Speak thou for them that are not able to speak for themselves, and plead thou for them that are undeservedly marked out for destruction. Bp. Hall.

10. Who can find a virtuous woman?] The instructions of Lemuel seem to end here; and a lesson for daughters begins, ranged in verses according to the letters of the Hebrew alphabet, with which each verse successively begins, for the convenience of the memory.

13. She seeketh wool, &c.] She loves to be always employed in some piece of useful housewifery suitable to her condition. Dr. Wells.

This description of a virtuous woman consists of twenty-two verses. It is well worthy of observation, that eleven of these verses, half the number, are taken up in setting forth her industry, and the effects of it. A variety of magnificent language is made use of to describe her different employments, to recommend simplicity of manners, and make good housewifery and honest labour to be admired in the rich and noble, as well as in the poor and obscure, among women. In works of the several kinds here mentioned, queens and princesses of old time disdained not to be occupied. Bp. Horne.

20. She stretcheth out her hand to the poor;] This is another good effect of her economy and management. She is not only able to provide plentifully for her household, but has always something in store for the poor. A charitable disposition avails little, where vanity, folly, and extravagance, have taken away the power to exert it. Bp. Horne.

21. She is not afraid of the snow &c.] She is careful to provide what is requisite for her family in the severest part of the year, and sufficient clothing in the coldest weather. Dr. Wells.

—— are clothed with scarlet.] Or, "with double garments," as in the margin. The Hebrew word signifies literally, "double;" and when applied to clothes, signifies either double in quantity and texture, or "double-dyed;" hence, as the purple and scarlet were the most usual dyes among the Hebrews, the word came to signify, a purple or scarlet dye. Parkhurst. As the sentence seems to refer to a security against cold, it seems better to translate here "double garments." Dr. Durell.

23. Her husband is known in the gates,] That is, he is known as her husband; as a man blessed with such a wife; as indebted, perhaps, for his promotion, to the wealth acquired by her management at home; for the splendour and elegance of his apparel, to the labour of her hands; and, it may be, for the preservation and establishment of his virtue and integrity, to the encouragement, in all that is holy and just and good, furnished by her example as well as by her conversation. Bp. Horne.

24. —girdles] Girdles curiously wrought, which she sells to the merchant. Bp. Patrick. Curiously wrought or embroidered girdles are still an essential part of Eastern finery, both to men and women. Parkhurst. Maillet informs us, that the Arab women have been accustomed to deal in buying and selling things woven of silk, cotton, &c. and simple linen cloth; which is precisely what is here said of the industrious Israelitish women. Harmer.

25. Strength and honour are her clothing;] See the note on Job xxix. 14.

29. Many daughters have done &c.] Her husband will extol her worth and virtue above other women, saying, Other wives have done and deserved well, but thou surpassest them all. Bp. Hall. Happy the children of such a mother; they will be living proofs of the care taken by her in their education, when she taught them to walk, by the paths of honour and virtue, to the mansions of rest and glory. Happy the husband of such a wife, who sees all things prosper under her direction, and the blessing of Heaven derived to his family through her. They will all join in proclaiming, that, among women who do well, honour is chiefly due to the virtuous and diligent wife, the affectionate and sensible mother. Bp. Horne.

30. Favour] A handsome shape and graceful behaviour. Bp. Patrick.

31. Give her of the fruit of her hands; &c.] Let every one extol her virtue; let her not want the just commendations of her pious labours in the greatest assemblies, where, if all men should be silent, her own works will declare her excellent worth. Bp. Patrick.

The picture which is drawn in this chapter of a good housewife is perhaps the most finished of all antiquity. It is drawn at full length, and equally pleasing in every point of view. Dr. Durell.

ECCLESIASTES;

OR,

THE PREACHER.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Book of Ecclesiastes is called in Hebrew "Coheleth," a word which signifies one who speaks in publick; and which indeed is properly translated by the Greek word Ecclesiastes, or the Preacher. It is unquestionably the production of Solomon, who for the great excellency of his instructions is emphatically styled, "the Preacher:" for the writer of it styles himself, "the son of David, king of Jerusalem," chap. i. 1; he describes too his wisdom, his riches, his writings, and his works, in a manner which is applicable only to Solomon; and by all tradition, Jewish and Christian, the Book is attributed to him. It is said by the Jews to have been written by him, upon his awakening to repentance, after he had been seduced, in the decline of life, to idolatry and sin; and, if this be true, it affords valuable proofs of the sincerity with which he regretted his departure from righteousness.

The main scope and tendency of the Book have been variously represented by different writers. It may be considered as a kind of inquiry into the chief good; an inquiry conducted on sound principles, and terminating in a conclusion which all on mature reflection will approve. The great object of Solomon appears to have been, from a comprehensive consideration of the circumstances of human life, to demonstrate the vanity of all secular pursuits. He endeavours to illustrate, by a just estimate, the insufficiency of earthly enjoyment; not with design to excite in us a disgust at life, but to influence us to prepare for that state where there is no vanity. With this view, the Preacher affirms, that man's labour, as far as it has respect only to present objects, is vain and unprofitable; that however prosperous and flattering circumstances may appear, yet, as he could from experience assert, neither knowledge, nor pleasure, nor magnificence, nor greatness, nor uncontrolled indulgence, can satisfy the desires of man; that the solicitude with which some men toil and heap up possessions for descendants often unworthy, is especial vexation; that it is better far to derive those enjoyments from the gifts of Providence which they were designed to furnish, by being rendered subservient to good actions. Solomon, at chap. iii. 16, proceeds to observe, that in this life iniquity usurps the place of righteousness; that man appears in some respects to have "no pre-eminence above the beast" that perishes; and that the consideration of these circumstances may at first sight lead to wrong conclusions concerning the value of life; but that God should not be hastily arraigned, for that "He that is higher than the highest regardeth:" that even here, those who "pervert judgment" are not satisfied by abundance, but that "the sleep of a labouring man is sweet," chap. iii.—vi.: that though the hearts of men be encouraged in evil by the delay of God's sentence, and though the days of the sinner may be prolonged on earth, yet, finally, it shall be well only with them who fear God, chap. viii. 11—13. Solomon then sums up his exhortations to good deeds, and to a remembrance of the Creator in the days of youth, "or ever the silver cord (of life) be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken," chap. xii. 6, 7, when "the dust shall return to the earth, and the spirit unto God who gave it." And the inspired teacher bids us "hear the conclusion of the whole matter," which is, to "fear God, and keep His commandments; for this is the whole duty of man." Dr. Gray.

It has been objected against the Book of Ecclesiastes, that some passages in it savour of irreligion, others of immorality. But these are, in truth, either innocent, when rightly interpreted; or else express, not the wise king's sentiments, but the false opinions of others, in whose name he speaks, in order to confute them; or, however, are not his deliberate sentiments, but such hasty wrong notions as, during the course of his inquiry after happiness, rose up successively in his mind, and were on mature consideration rejected by him, in order to fix at last on the true basis, "the conclusion of the whole matter; to fear God and keep His commandments." Abp. Secker.

The doctrine of a future retribution forms the great basis, and the leading truth, of this Book. In it, the Royal Preacher expatiates on the transitory condition of mankind, if considered as confined to the present state of existence; the vanity and vexation of spirit attending all present human enjoyment, which his own experience had so abundantly proved; the apparent inequality of Providence, (except under the Jewish dispensation,) by which there appears one event to the righteous and to the wicked. But in all the difficulties and perplexities, all that vanity and vexation of spirit, which this partial view of human nature implies, the Royal Preacher brings forward the prospect of a future life and just retribution, as the solution and the remedy, the consolation and the cure. See chap. iii. 17; viii. 11; xi. 9; xii. 14. Dr. Graves.

The style of this Book is different from that of others; the diction is for the most part plain, but particularly obscure; often vague and prosaick; nor is there much of poetick character in the composition and structure of it, which perhaps may be properly attributed to the nature of the argument. The Jews are unwilling to have it reckoned among the poetical Books; and if their authority availed much in matters of this kind, we might perhaps in this particular be disposed to agree with their opinion. Bp. Lowth.

The Book may be divided into two general parts; the first, comprising the six first chapters, in which Solomon shews that all things relating to this world only are vain and perishing, and therefore can afford no true, or solid, or lasting satisfaction or happiness; the second, comprising the six last chapters, in which he shews that piety is the only means, by which we can attain true and lasting happiness. Dr. Wells.

I cannot but exhort all men to study this Book diligently, and with great intention of mind; both for the author's sake and for the matter of it. For he handles his subject in such a manner as first to draw us from the desire and love of earthly things, and from the perverse use of them; and then to lead us to the true and lawful use of them; without either offence to God or injury to ourselves. And he teaches us how we may, without an excessive solicitude and anxiety about events, enjoy all things in the fear of God, with tranquillity and satisfaction of mind at present; and at last, by the same fear of God and observance of His commandments, arrive at a never-ending felicity. Bp. Patrick.

CHAP. I.

Before CHRIST about 977.

1 The preacher sheweth that all human courses are vain: 4 because the creatures are restless in their courses, 9 they bring forth nothing new, and all old things are forgotten, 12 and because he hath found it so in the studies of wisdom.

THE words of the Preacher, the son of David, king of Jerusalem.

2 [a] Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher, vanity of vanities; all is vanity.

3 [b] What profit hath a man of all his labour which he taketh under the sun?

4 One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh: [c] but the earth abideth for ever.

5 The sun also ariseth, and the sun goeth down, and † hasteth to his place where he arose.

6 The wind goeth toward the south, and turneth about unto the north; it whirleth about continually, and the wind returneth again according to his circuits.

7 [d] All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full; unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they † return again.

8 All things are full of labour; man cannot utter it: the eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing.

9 [e] The thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done: and there is no new thing under the sun.

10 Is there any thing whereof it may be said, See, this is new? it hath been already of old time, which was before us.

11 There is no remembrance of former things; neither shall there be any remembrance of things that are to come with those that shall come after.

12 ¶ I the Preacher was king over Israel in Jerusalem.

13 And I gave my heart to seek and search out by wisdom concerning all things that are done under heaven: this sore travail hath God given to the sons of man ‖ to be exercised therewith.

14 I have seen all the works that are done under the sun; and, behold, all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

15 [f] That which is crooked cannot be made straight: and † that which is wanting cannot be numbered.

16 I communed with mine own heart, saying, Lo, I am come to great estate, and have gotten [g] more wisdom than all they that have been before me in Jerusalem: yea, my heart † had great experience of wisdom and knowledge.

17 [h] And I gave my heart to know wisdom, and to know madness and folly: I perceived that this also is vexation of spirit.

18 For in much wisdom is much grief: and he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow.

Chap. I. ver. 1. The words of the Preacher,] See the Introduction.

—— king of Jerusalem.] The Greek renders, King of Israel in Jerusalem.

2. Vanity &c.] In the eleven first verses, Solomon lays the foundation of his following discourses, and makes his way to the proof of what he intends, that nothing here can make us permanently happy, by shewing how empty all things are, how short a time man has to possess them; and that, while this time lasts, he can only enjoy the same empty things over and over again, till he be cloyed with them. Bp. Patrick.

In this expression that "all is vanity," the wise man principally refers to the labours of mankind, about the things of the present world; and must be understood, not as absolutely condemning the things themselves, or our pursuits about them, but only as the one may be in some cases unsuitable, and the other irregular or excessive. Dr. J. Balguy.

4. — but the earth abideth for ever.] That is, constantly, notwithstanding these fluctuations. Script. illust.

5. The sun also ariseth, &c.] The sun in a settled course observes its times of rising and setting, whereas man, when he goes down to the earth, cannot, like the sun, return again. The author is representing, in this and the two next verses, by four comparisons, with the earth, the sun, the wind, and the sea, man to be more subject to vanity than other things. Bp. Patrick.

8. All things are full of labour;] He now proceeds to consider more particularly what he said in general words, (ver. 3,) of man's vain endeavour to satisfy himself in worldly designs and contrivances, in which he is tired, and comes to no end of his desires; and how indeed should he, when his whole business here is only to enjoy the same things over and over again, as all men have done before us, and will do after us? ver. 9—11. Bp. Patrick.

9. — there is no new thing under the sun.] This expression of the Preacher is only to be understood as a general inference from what he had said, namely, that there is nothing among the appearances of nature which happens now otherwise than it has done for some generations before; and, in the moral world, men being subject to the same passions and affections as heretofore, it is no wonder the same causes should operate in the production of the same effects. Dr. Durell.

15. That which is crooked &c.] The shortness of human wit, however improved, is here represented by two things; first, that it cannot remove what is inconvenient; secondly, that it cannot supply what is deficient, in any condition of life. Bp. Patrick.

17. — to know madness and folly:] Referring perhaps to all the idle speculations in which men of parts and wit are apt to employ themselves. Bp. Patrick.

18. For in much wisdom &c.] Meaning that, though knowledge is the most excellent of earthly goods, yet the possession of it is insufficient for our happiness, and is often attended with trouble and vexation. Bp. Patrick.

Before CHRIST about 977.

I SAID in mine heart, Go to now, I will prove thee with mirth, therefore enjoy pleasure: and, behold, this also is vanity.

2 I said of laughter, It is mad: and of mirth, What doeth it?

[a] Chap. 1. 17.

3 [a] I sought in mine heart † to give myself unto wine, yet acquainting mine heart with wisdom; and to lay hold on folly, till I might see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under the heaven † all the days of their life.

† Heb. to draw my flesh with wine.

4 I made me great works; I builded me houses; I planted me vineyards:

5 I made me gardens and orchards, and I planted trees in them of all kind of fruits:

6 I made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees:

† Heb. sons of my house.

7 I got me servants and maidens, and had † servants born in my house; also I had great possessions of great and small cattle above all that were in Jerusalem before me:

[b] 1 Kings 9. 28. & 10. 14.

8 [b] I gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces: I gat me men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as † musical instruments, and that of all sorts.

9 So I was great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem: also my wisdom remained with me.

10 And whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them, I withheld not my heart from any joy; for my heart rejoiced in all my labour: and this was my portion of all my labour.

11 Then I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labour that I had laboured to do: and, behold, all was [c] vanity and vexation of spirit, and there was no profit under the sun.

[c] Chap. 1. 3.

12 ¶ And I turned myself to behold wisdom, [d] and madness, and folly: for what can the man do that cometh after the king? ‖ even that which hath been already done.

[d] Chap. 1. 17. & 7. 25.

‖ Or, in those things which have been already done.

13 Then I saw † that wisdom excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness.

† Heb. that there is an excellency in wisdom more than in folly, &c.

14 [e] The wise man's eyes are in his head; but the fool walketh in darkness: and I myself perceived also that one event happeneth to them all.

15 Then said I in my heart, As it happeneth to the fool, so it † happeneth even to me; and why was I then more wise? Then I said in my heart, that this also is vanity.

† Heb. happeneth to me, even to me.

16 For there is no remembrance of the wise more than of the fool for ever; seeing that which now is in the days to come shall all be forgotten. And how dieth the wise man? as the fool.

17 Therefore I hated life; because the work that is wrought under the sun is grievous unto me: for all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

18 ¶ Yea, I hated all my labour which I had † taken under the sun: because [f] I should leave it unto the man that shall be after me.

19 And who knoweth whether he shall be a wise man or a fool? yet shall he have rule over all my labour wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have shewed myself wise under the sun. This is also vanity.

20 Therefore I went about to cause my

Chap. II. ver. 2. I said of laughter,] Meaning excessive laughter, dissolute and frantick merriment. Bp. Patrick.

3. — and to lay hold on folly, &c.] That is, not altogether to follow the study of wisdom, nor yet altogether to pursue pleasure, but to mix them together; "till I might see," &c. that is, till I might sufficiently try whether herein lay that so much desired good, which men pursue here all their lives. Dr. Wells.

6. — the wood that bringeth forth trees:] That is, the nurseries of young trees. Desvoeux.

7. I got me servants and maidens,] The servants among the Hebrews were chiefly slaves, either bought or taken in war. Dr. Hodgson.

8. — the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces:] That is, I procured whatever was choice and precious in other kingdoms, and especially in those countries which were subject to me. Dr. Wells.

12. — for what can the man do that cometh after the king?] For who is there that can give a better account than I the king, who have had such advantages, beyond any private man, to know the history of former times, as well as my own; so that, I am confident, they who come after can pass no better judgment on things than I do now. Bp. Patrick.

13. — as far as light excelleth darkness.] Meaning, that religion and virtue are as much more excellent and profitable to men than wickedness, as it is possible for one thing to be preferable to another. Dr. S. Clarke.

14. The wise man's eyes &c.] A wise man, looking around him and before him, is cautious and well aware of danger, into which the fool, blinded with the sottish love of pleasure, falls rashly and inconsiderately. Yet, with all his circumspection, he is not able to avoid many calamities which are common to all mankind. Bp. Patrick.

17. Therefore I hated life; &c.] I became quite out of love with this life, because the toil attending it is grievous; and yet, after all, it affords no solid or lasting satisfaction. Dr. Wells.

18. — because I should leave it unto the man that shall be after me.] Solomon seems here to speak with a melancholy reflection on his own son Rehoboam. "Who knoweth," he adds, "whether he shall be a wise man, or a fool?" He appears to speak doubtfully, but he had a very shrewd guess, what kind of man his son would make, for he speaks more despondingly in the words which follow; and he feelingly expresses how much the very fear and apprehension of this embittered the fruit of all his labour. Abp. Tillotson.

20. Therefore I went about &c.] Therefore I bent my thoughts to do away all hope of any good issue to all my earthly labours and endeavours. Bp. Hall.

heart to despair of all the labour which I took under the sun.

25 For who can eat, or who else can hasten hereunto, more than I?

26 For God giveth to a man that is good † in his sight wisdom, and knowledge, and joy: but to the sinner he giveth travail, to gather and to heap up, that [d] he may give to him that is good before God. This also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

10 I have seen the travail, which God hath given to the sons of men to be exercised in it.

11 He hath made every thing beautiful in his time: also he hath set the world in their heart, so that no man can find out the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end.

12 I know that there is no good in them, but for a man to rejoice, and to do good in his life.

13 And also that every man should eat and drink, and enjoy the good of all his labour, it is the gift of God.

14 I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him.

15 [f] That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth † that which is past.

[f] Chap. 1. 9. † Heb. that which is driven away.

24. There is nothing better for a man, &c.] He here teaches, that all the benefit of mere human labour is the moderate or sober enjoyment of what we have acquired by it. Dr. Wells. For the truth of which, he says in the next verse, you may rely on my experience. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. III. ver. 1. To every thing there is a season, &c.] Solomon proceeds to shew that the vicissitude of the seasons, and of all earthly things, teaches us that we should enjoy what we get, as well as labour to get it; and that it also adds to the vanity of all things connected with human life. Dr. Wells.

3. A time to kill.] A time, whether in a just war, or in a peaceable execution of justice, in which it is warrantable to kill. Bp. Hall.

5. A time to cast away stones, &c.] This may signify, "A time to cast away stones with a sling, and a time to collect them again in a bag;" or, "a time to cast stones on a field to render it barren, and a time to collect stones out of a field to render it fertile;" or, "a time to cast away stones improper for building, and to collect proper ones." Calmet.

7. A time to rend, and a time to sew;] The "rending" here mentioned undoubtedly refers to the Oriental mode of expressing sorrow, by rending the clothes. The "sewing" is designed as the opposite to it, and may mean the making up of new garments; for in the East it is thought essentially necessary for the due solemnization of a time of rejoicing, to put on new clothes. Harmer.

9. What profit hath he, &c.] What stability or lasting profit can a man expect from that which he does, since there is such a changeable vicissitude in all actions and events? Bp. Hall.

11. — he hath set the world in their heart,] Solomon here declares not obscurely, that God has framed the mind of man as a mirrour capable of the image of the whole world, not only delighted in beholding the variety of things and the changes of times, but ambitious to find out and discover the immovable and settled laws and decrees of nature. And, though he intimates that this whole economy of nature (which he calls "the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end") cannot be found out by man, it does not derogate from the power and capacity of his mind, but is to be imputed to the impediments of human learning. &c. Lord Bacon.

12. — but for a man to rejoice, and to do good] So true it is that the pleasure of doing good remains after a thing is done, the thoughts of it lie easy in our minds, and the reflection upon it afterwards ministers to us, ever after, joy and delight. In this passage Solomon, after all his experience of worldly pleasures, pitches at last upon this as the greatest happiness of human life, and the only good use which is to be made of a prosperous fortune. Abp. Tillotson.

ver. 1. For that which befalleth, &c.] Among the passages of this book with which, for want of discerning the true design and scope of it, vain and wicked persons would encourage themselves in their follies and impiety, is this, from ver. 19 to 21. "that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts," &c. as if the end of man and beasts were the same, and therefore men might lead sensual lives, as beasts do, without concern for the future; whereas Solomon, speaking of "the estate of the sons of men," (ver. 18,) not in the next world but in this, pursues his main purpose, in shewing the vanity of earthly things and designs, that, whatever content or satisfaction men may propose to themselves in this world, all is but vanity, they are in many respects like beasts, they draw in the same air, their breath will fail them, they will die and be turned to dust as well as the beasts. Yea, so vain is man, and so like the beasts as to outward appearance that, although when he dieth "his spirit shall return unto God," and he shall be judged in order to be rewarded suitably to his deeds, [ver. 17, and chap. xii. 7, 14,] yet no one knoweth "the spirit of man that goeth upward," &c. that is, no one can experimentally, or by sense and reasoning, discern a man's soul that ascends or goes upwards, any more than that of the beast which descends or goes downwards: so great is man's ignorance of such matters. This thought should wean us from too much care for the future, and make us thank God for our portion in this world, disposing us to do good with it to others, and to enjoy it without solicitude. Calmet.

Who knoweth the spirit of man &c.] The sense may be, How few men live as if they knew that the soul of man is immortal, and that, when the body dies, it goeth upward to God to be judged by Him; and that the spirit of the beast dying with the body, and going downward to the earth, there utterly perishes. Dr. Wells.

22. —that a man should rejoice in his own works:] That he should make a cheerful use of God's good blessings, as the only true and allowed means which the earth will afford of all his painful labours here. Sir. Raleigh.

Chap. IV. ver. 1. So I returned,] He proceeds to consider the power which many times falls into the hands of unjust and cruel men, and to represent the miserable estate of those that are subject to them, as a further argument of the vanity and vexation to which all men are liable in this troublesome world; and, having noted some of the principal mischiefs of this sort, he concludes this chapter with some animadversions on the condition of the greatest and best of princes, who are not so happy as the world is apt to think them. Sir. Patrick.

2. Wherefore I praised the dead &c.] Considering the various oppressions which were so frequent in the world, Solomon considered those persons happier who were out of it, than those who still lived in it. Sir. Raleigh.

5. —eateth his own flesh.] Consumes his own substance.

8. There is one alone, &c.] In opposition to the character of the fool, he here introduces (ver. 8—12) the character of an indefatigable covetous man, who, having nobody with whom to share his fortune, cannot resolve either to leave off heaping up riches, or quietly to enjoy what he has already acquired. Dimock.

9. —because they have a good reward for their labour.] How much wiser Solomon says, is he who not only enjoys what he has himself, but takes others into his society, for purposes of common counsel and mutual assistance, and of mutual protecpation in the good things which God has given him! Bp. Patrick. "Two are better than one;" implying generally, that society is productive of much comfort and benefit. Bp. Hall.

13. Better is a poor and a wise child &c.] He proceeds to shew, that still it is not society alone which will make men happy, without wisdom or virtue. For who are better attended or guarded than kings? and yet the poorest man that is, if he be wise and good, is far happier than the wealthiest prince on earth who foolishly abuses his power. Bp. Patrick.

14. For out of prison &c.] For it has been known that he who was poor and abject as the vilest slave in a prison has come to reign by singular prudence, while he that is born of royal ancestors is sometimes through his folly deserted by his subjects, loses his kingdom, and "becometh poor." By the expression "out of prison," it is not improbable that Solomon has here respect to the case of Joseph in Egypt. Dr. Wells.

15. I considered all the living &c.] If what is mentioned at ver. 13, 14. happen not to a king, I have seen, he adds, another great unhappiness which more usually befalls kings; namely, their being left with only the bare title of royalty, while the hearts and affections of the kingdom incline to "the second son," that is, to the child who was second to him, or heir of the kingdom. Dr. Wells.

16. There is no end of all the people,] There will be no end of this disposition in all mankind, so deeply is it rooted in them; for, as it has always been the disposition "of all that have been before them" to be weary of what they have long enjoyed, and pleased with novelty, and therefore to slight an old king and court his successor, so "they that come after shall not rejoice in him;" that is, shall in like manner slight the present heir when he comes to be old, and pay court to his son or heir, as they now do to him. Dr. Wells.

Chap. V. ver. 1. Keep thy foot when thou goest &c.] Beware how thou treadest, be always on thy guard, in the house of God. Let thy carriage be adjusted to the ideas of His presence whose courts thou enterest: let thy whole deportment there be such as best suits the sacredness of the place, and the majesty of Him to whom it is dedicated. Archdeacon Sharp.

——and be more ready to hear, &c.] The meaning is, Be more ready to hear practically, that is, to obey the commandments of God: a similar expression to that of 1 Sam. xv. 22, "To obey is better than sacrifice." Have a care rather to approach the Divine Majesty with an offering of an obedient disposition, than with the bare rites of outward service. Jos. Mede.

——to give the sacrifice of fools:] That is, barely to offer outward sacrifice, without giving due care to lead also a holy life. Dr. Wells.

2. Be not rash with thy mouth,] That is, when thou art going to pray, recollect thyself, consider that thy Creator is great, and wise, and good above all, and thou a poor dependant mortal being; weigh thy expressions, think before thou speakest, and take heed to use few words, and to ask for nothing improper. Dr. Jortin.

——for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth:] God is in heaven, a great, infinite, eternal, all-glorious, incomprehensible Being; heaven is His throne, and earth His footstool: thou art a poor silly worm, a creeping, crawling, sinful dust and ashes: have therefore a care what thou sayest unto Him, and fear to speak any thing amiss before Him. Bp. Beveridge.

3. For a dream cometh &c.] For, as in a multitude of business, there will be troublesome and confused dreams, so in a multitude of words there will be futility and errour. Bp. Hall.

CHAP. VI.

1 The vanity of riches without use. 3 Of children, 6 and old age without riches. 9 The vanity of sight and wandering desires. 11 The conclusion of vanities.

THERE is an evil which I have seen under the sun, and it is common among men:

2 A man to whom God hath given riches, wealth, and honour, so that he wanteth nothing for his soul of all that he desireth, yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof, but a stranger eateth it: this is vanity, and it is an evil disease.

3 ¶ If a man beget an hundred children, and live many years, so that the days of his years be many, and his soul be not filled with good, and also that he have no burial; I say, that an untimely birth is better than he.

4 For he cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkness, and his name shall be covered with darkness.

5 Moreover he hath not seen the sun,

11. — they are increased that eat them:] He implies, that it is but a small portion of his wealth that a rich man can enjoy personally; since, as his riches increase, he must maintain a greater family and retinue, who have a greater share than himself in the daily provision that is made by his expenses. Bp. Patrick.

14. But those riches perish &c.] Besides, these riches often perish by some disaster, so that the son, whom he thought to have left possessed of abundance of wealth, hath nothing at all left to support him. Bp. Patrick.

—— there is nothing in his hand.] He is a beggar, hath nothing in his possession. Jos. Mede.

17. All his days also he eateth in darkness,] He deprives himself of all comfort, through the too eager pursuit of wealth, and pinches his body, and tortures his mind with many vexations and discontentments. Bp. Hall.

18. — it is good and comely — to eat and to drink,] When Solomon utters this expression, it is sufficiently obvious his meaning cannot be that we should give way to sensuality and pleasures. We cannot ascribe such a thought to him, if we consider what he has just said, of the reverence with which we ought to present ourselves before God, of the judgments which God will pass on those who judge others, and of the joy which He sheds abroad in the hearts of good men. His meaning is only this, that, when God gives us wealth, we ought to be content with it, to receive it and possess it as His gracious gift, and use it with sobriety and gratitude. Ostervald.

20. For he shall not much remember &c.] For such an one will not think his life here tedious or irksome, because God gives him his very heart's desire, in enjoying comfortably the fruits of his honest labours. Dr. Wells. Otherwise it may be rendered, "He will not be anxious about the duration of his life, since God blesseth him with cheerfulness of heart." Dr. Hodgson.

Chap. VI. ver. 2. — God giveth him not power to eat thereof,] God, in His just judgment, permits him to be so far overruled by his covetous temper, that he has not power or heart to eat thereof for fear he should come to want; and so he leaves his wealth, and perhaps a stranger becomes master of it, and "eateth it," or lives plentifully upon it. Dr. Wells.

3. — and his soul be not filled with good,] And he will not allow himself what is fitting while he lives. Dr. Wells.

—— also that he have no burial;] In opposition to the blessings of a numerous progeny and long life, are placed want of contentment in this life, and want of burial after death, which, Solomon says, are such abatements of happiness, that abortion would have been preferable to life under such circumstances. Dr. Durell.

4. For he cometh in with vanity, &c.] For the stillborn child comes into the world without noise, and to no use, and passes away obscurely without notice; and, as he lived not to have a name, so the memory of him vanishes into darkness and oblivion: still (ver. 5.) "this hath more rest than the other;" that is, he is freed by so early a death from those vexations which an old covetous man draws on himself. Bp. Hall.

7. All the labour of man &c.] All the labour of man that is necessary to be taken is only for his mouth, or what is required to sustain him; and yet the appetite of the covetous is never satisfied. Dr. Wells.

8. — knoweth to walk before the living?] Knoweth to behave himself among men suitably to his condition, and to be contented with it. Dr. Wells.

9. Better is the sight of the eyes &c.] The meaning is, It is better to make a wise use of what lies before us, and to enjoy quietly and contentedly what we have, than to let our desires be continually running out after fresh objects, and shifting from point to point; such restless pursuits being not only vain and unprofitable, but creating abundance of needless trouble and perplexity. Dr. J. Balguy.

10. That which hath been &c.] The sense seems to be, What if a man be renowned? It is known that he is but man, made out of dust, and therefore subject to much evil which he cannot overcome. Bp. Patrick.

12. — all the days of his vain life &c.] The reflections which Solomon here makes are very proper to moderate the heat of men's pursuit after earthly goods. The vanity of their labours appears not only in their not knowing how to enjoy the good things which they so eagerly pursue, but chiefly in this, that they often deprive themselves of the greatest blessing of life, which is ease and a contented mind, and cannot secure themselves any thing for the future. The gospel gives us clearer directions on this head, when we are told that "godliness with contentment is great gain," 1 Tim. vi. 6. Osterwald.

Chap. VII. Having discoursed, in the foregoing part of the book, of the courses which men usually take to make themselves happy; the Preacher now seems to proceed to prescribe the best remedies that can be found against that vanity to which we are subject, by setting down many wise precepts for our direction, comfort, and support in a troublesome world. Of this nature are the doctrines which begin this chapter, quite opposite to the common opinions of the world; but they are the maxims of true wisdom and policy, which must be learnt in order to the settlement of our minds in peace and tranquillity, notwithstanding the vanity that is in all things. Bp. Patrick.

Ver. 1. — and the day of death than the day of one's birth.] The day of a good and faithful man's death is better than the day of his birth; for his death puts an end to those miseries which his birth begins, and opens that more perfect happiness, of which the present life is not capable. Bp. Hall.

As death to a good man is more advantageous than life, so to a wise man the contemplation of the former is more desirable than all the enjoyments of the latter. Bp. Atterbury.

2. It is better to go &c.] When the wise man bids us go to the house of mourning, when he tells us that sorrow is better than laughter, he is not to be understood as prohibiting all mirth, as requiring us to wear a perpetual cloud on our brow, and to sequester ourselves from every cheerful entertainment of social life. His true meaning is, that there is a certain temper and state of mind which is of far greater consequence to real happiness, than the habitual indulgence of giddy and thoughtless mirth; that, for the attainment and cultivation of this temper, frequent returns of grave reflection are necessary; that, upon this account, it is profitable to give admission to those views of human distress, which tend to awaken such reflections in the mind; and that thus, from the vicissitudes of sorrow which we either experience in our own lot, or sympathize with in the lot of others, much wisdom and improvement may be derived. Dr. Blair.

6. — as the crackling of thorns under a pot,] Like a blaze, noisy but soon spent. In the East they commonly use the dung of animals for fuel, which burns very slow: the burning of thorns and furze affords a striking contrast to this, and it is probably this contrast which gives energy to the comparison. Harmer.

7. — a gift destroyeth the heart.] A bribe destroys, or tends to corrupt the heart. Dr. Wells.

8. Better is the end of a thing] Better is it, toward the right conduct of life, to consider what will be the end of a thing, than what is the beginning of it; for what promises fair at first may prove ill, and what seems at first a disadvantage, may prove very advantageous. Dr. Wells.

---

10. Say not thou, What is the cause &c.] Be not discontented and complaining at the present condition of things, so as to murmur at the providence of God; for this would be foolish and unjust: rather, in a humble thankfulness and submission, make use of the present. Bp. Hall.

13. Consider the work of God: &c.] Complain not of times and events; but consider well the wise, just, and powerful proceedings of God: for when He has thought good, for the punishment of men's sins, to give them up to disorder, it is not in the power of human means to rectify them. Bp. Hall.

14. In the day of prosperity &c.] In the day of prosperity rejoice: yet have an eye towards the day of adversity; for the Lord hath placed the one near unto the other, "that man should find nothing after him," that is, that he should be uncertain what next may befall him. Dr. Hodgson.

15. — there is a just man that perisheth] There is an innocent and just man that miscarries, notwithstanding his righteousness, through the cruelty and injustice of others. Bp. Hall.

16. Be not righteous over much; &c.] Perhaps the meaning may be, Do not exercise justice with too much rigour. Dr. Waterland. These expressions must by no means be understood as a caution against being too wise or too good, since no man can possibly be wise or good enough, or can use sufficient endeavours to become so. But Solomon speaks these words against those, who, when insisting on their own right, or passing judgment on others, proceed with the utmost rigour and severity, not observing the rules of moderation and equity, and are so presumptuous as busily to intermeddle with what does not concern them. Ostervald.

17. Be not over much wicked,] Let not impunity tempt any man to grow enormously wicked, and foolish in following the lewdest opinions; for this may awaken publick justice, or the Divine vengeance, so as to cut him off before he come to the natural term of life. Bp. Patrick.

18. — he that feareth God shall come forth of them all.] The Greek translators render it, "To him that feareth God, all things shall succeed." Dr. Wall.

26. — the woman, whose heart is snares and nets,] The following method of ensnaring travellers, sometimes practised by robbers in Eastern countries, affords a lively comment on these words of Solomon. They send out a handsome woman upon the road, with her hair dishevelled, and in tears, who seems to be in the deepest distress, complaining of some misfortune which she pretends had befallen her. She easily draws the traveller into conversation with her, and engages him to assist her; but he has no sooner taken her up on horseback behind him, than she throws a snare about his neck, and strangles him; or, at least, stuns him, till the robbers, who are lying in wait, come running to her aid, and complete what she has begun. Thevenot.

28. — but a woman among all those &c.] That which Solomon here says should be well understood. As the Scriptures often speak of women illustrious for their virtues, and Solomon himself praises such, (Prov. xii. 4; xviii. 22; xxxi. 10,) he could not mean that a virtuous woman was no where to be found. There is, in this respect, no difference between the two sexes. But Solomon's meaning is, that, having searched out the reason of all the wickedness that passes in the world, ver. 25, he had found that there was nothing more dangerous and wicked than a disorderly woman, such as he describes at ver. 26, whose malice and artifice are scarcely to be conceived; nor can they, who have suffered themselves to be surprised by her, without great difficulty escape her snares. Solomon therefore does not here speak of women in general, but of such as he had been describing. One reason, no

Before CHRIST about 977.

10 And so I saw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the holy, and they were forgotten in the city where they had so done: this is also vanity.

11 Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil.

12 ¶ Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that [c] it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him:

[c] Ps. 37. 11, 18, 19.

13 But it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, which are as a shadow; because he feareth not before God.

14 There is a vanity which is done upon the earth; that there be just men, unto whom it [d] happeneth according to the work of the wicked; again, there be wicked men, to whom it happeneth according to the work of the righteous: I said that this also is vanity.

Hall.*

Chap. VIII. ver. 1. Who is as the wise man? &c.] What creature under heaven is so excellent as a wise man? He only can find out the secrets of nature and of art: his wisdom makes him gracious, and respected of all men; it alters and improves his disposition and his carriage, and from rude and harsh makes him gentle and ingenious. Bp. Hall.

—— maketh his face to shine,] Gives him fair reputation and honour.

3. Be not hasty &c.] Let not thy passion transport thee to shew the least disrespect to him; if thou hast offended him, let thy care be, not to persist obstinately in the errour, but to humble thyself, and beg his pardon; for his power is so great, that it will one time or other lay hold on thee and punish thee. Bp. Patrick.

5. — a wise man's heart &c.] The heart of the wise man discerneth both the time when every thing should be done, and the best method of doing it. Bp. Hall.

6. Because to every purpose] Because God has so ordered things, that to every purpose there is a proper time, and judgment or proper manner of doing what is intended, and therefore the misery of man is often great upon him, because he does not duly observe the said time and manner. Dr. Wells.

8. There is no man that hath power &c.] No man hath power to keep his soul when God calls for it, neither hath he power to protract the day of death; there is no possibility of avoiding that last conflict; the bold and presumptuous wickedness of men cannot deliver them from it. Bp. Hall.

10. — who had come and gone from the place of the holy,] Who had been honoured as gods while they were living, because they were God's ministers, and sat in the judgment seat, in that very place where He Himself is present. Bp. Patrick.

11. Because sentence against an evil work &c.] Because the punishment does not immediately follow the offence.

—— therefore the heart — is fully set in them] In the original, "their heart has filled them," they are presumptuous, to do evil. Dr. S. Clarke.

15. Then I commended mirth, &c.] Then I resolved that it is good for man to be cheerful in his calling, and in the good and holy use of God's blessings. Bp. Hall. We must well remember, that when he in this manner "commends mirth," he speaks of reasonable pleasures, which proceed from a moderate and lawful use of the good things which God has given us, which have nothing in them irregular and contrary to piety. Ostervald.

† Heb. I gave, or, set to my heart.

FOR all this † I considered in my heart even to declare all this, that the righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of God: no man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them.

[a] Mal. 3. 15. Ps. 73. 3, 12, 13.

2 [a] All things come alike to all: there is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked; to the good and to the clean, and to the unclean; to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not: as is the good, so is the sinner; and he that sweareth, as he that feareth an oath.

3 This is an evil among all things that are done under the sun, that there is one event unto all: yea, also the heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart while they live, and after that they go to the dead.

Before CHRIST about 977.

4 ¶ For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope: for a living dog is better than a dead lion.

5 For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten.

6 Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun.

7 ¶ Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart; for God now accepteth thy works.

17. — that a man cannot find out &c.] For there is little or nothing that any man can know of the secrets of God's counsels, or of any of His works; which are inscrutable to us, whatever pains we take: nay, though the wisest man in the world make it his constant business, he will still be forced to confess his ignorance; and the height of his knowledge will be to know, that God's ways are past finding out. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. IX. ver. 1. — no man knoweth either love or hatred] No man knows or can know the love or hatred of God towards particular individuals, "by all that is before them;" that is, by all that befalls them visibly. Dr. Wells.

2. All things come alike to all:] There is no certain and constant distinction made between one man and another, in the distribution of things in this world; but they all fare alike in publick calamities especially. Bp. Patrick.

—— and he that sweareth,] The character of "him that sweareth" is here mentioned as blameable; but Solomon does not mean to disapprove the taking of an oath on any occasion whatever; but only to commend the fearing or avoiding of any oath, whenever it can be avoided, consistently with other obligations. Abp. Secker.

3. This is an evil &c.] There is this evil in all which is done under the sun, that "there is one event" unto all men; whence arise errours in their notions concerning the living, and with respect to the dead hereafter. Dr. Hodgson.

4. For to him that is joined &c.] If we compare the state of the living and the dead, with respect to the present world, that of the living is the best; for, while we here live, we may still be in hope, either of amending or of receiving further graces and blessings, both of which are cut off from the dead: and, according to a common proverb, the most vile and contemptible animal, as a dog, that is alive, is better than the most generous of all beasts, the lion, when dead. Bp. Hall.

5. — but the dead know not any thing,] When men are gone from this world, they become perfect strangers to all things here, and can no longer enjoy any benefit of their labour, the fruit of which falls into the hands of other men, who think not what is become of them. Bp. Patrick.

—— neither have they any more a reward;] It is not meant that there is no reward after death for the righteous in heaven; but that, after death, there will be no enjoyment of any worldly felicity, as he himself explains in the next verse. Collyer.

7. Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy,] Therefore, shaking off all anxious cares and perplexing thoughts about God's providence, excite thyself, by the remembrance of death, to a cheerful enjoyment of those good things present which thou possessest; believing, that if thou hast approved thyself to God in the rest of thy works, it is acceptable to Him that thou shouldest thus rejoice in those gifts which His benevolence has afforded thee. Bp. Patrick. Solomon's design is, that we should improve the advantages of life, and make a wise use of what we have in possession; but we must beware of abusing this notion, and imagining ourselves to be at full liberty to indulge in worldly joys and pleasures, and to say with the ungodly, "Let us eat and drink, for to morrow we die." Ostervald.

8. Let thy garments be always white;] In opposition to the habit of mourners. The meaning is, Live not sordidly and sadly, but entertain thyself at all seasonable times. Bp. Patrick.

10. Whatsoever thy hand &c.] That is, the work that is before thee, which is most proper for thee to propose to thyself, as the great end and design of thy life, the province and charge appointed to thee. "Do it with thy might;" that is, set about it with great care, use all possible diligence and industry for effecting and accomplishing it. He enforces his precept by the consideration that this life is the proper season of activity and industry, of designing and doing those things which tend to our future happiness; and, when this life is ended, there will be no further opportunity of working, and nothing will remain but to receive the recompense of that which we have before done. Abp. Tillotson.

11 ¶ I returned, and saw under the sun, that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all.

12 For man also knoweth not his time: as the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare; so are the sons of men [c] snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them.

[c] Prov. 29. 6.

13 ¶ This wisdom have I seen also under the sun, and it seemed great unto me:

14 There was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it:

15 Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man.

[d] Prov. 21. 22. ch. 7. 19.

16 [d] Then said I, Wisdom is better than strength: nevertheless the poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.

17 The words of wise men are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools.

18 Wisdom is better than weapons of war: but one sinner destroyeth much good.

11. I returned, and saw under the sun, &c.] I saw and observed that here on earth all things do not fall out according to the probability of second causes, but by the appointments of an over-ruling Providence: the swiftest does not always win the race, nor the strong prevail in battle, &c. but every one in his time hath a several issue, according to the determination of the Almighty, beyond or contrary to his own hopes. Bp. Hall.

—— neither yet bread to the wise,] Meaning, that the most learned and able men are not always secured against poverty and want. Abp. Tillotson.

—— but time and chance happeneth to them all.] That is, There is a secret providence of God, which sometimes presents men with unexpected opportunities, and interposes accidents which no human wisdom can foresee; which grants success to very improbable means; and defeats the swift, the strong, the learned, the industrious, and those who are best versed in men and business, of their several ends and designs. Abp. Tillotson.

15. — yet no man remembered that same poor man.] This little parable sets forth the depraved and malignant nature of mankind, who in extremities and straits commonly fly to men of wisdom and courage, whom they before slighted; but, as soon as the storm is over, they become unthankful wretches to their preservers. Lord Bacon.

17. The words of wise men &c.] The words of a wise poor man, though spoken softly, out of a fearful and lowly kind of bashfulness, are worthy of more respect than the imperious loud clamours of him that ruleth among fools. Bp. Hall.

Chap. X. ver. 1. Dead flies cause &c.] This is a well known fact, especially in hot climates, that dead insects cause syrups, and other such preparations, to ferment and putrefy, which makes it necessary to be careful in preventing flies from coming to them. Scheuchzer.

—— so doth a little folly] In the same manner, in however good reputation a man may be for wisdom and honour, yet some one foolish humour and weak miscarriage of his will mar and stain his reputation. Bp. Hall. A little folly in a very wise man, a small sin in an honest man, and a slight indecency of manners in a man of courtly behaviour, often greatly derogate from their fame and reputation. Lord Bacon.

2. A wise man's heart is at his right hand;] That is, ready to be employed with dexterity and effect. Parkhurst. Herein a truly wise man's worth is discovered, that his judgment never fails him in the greatest difficulties, in which he not only resolves right, but takes things by the right handle; whereas a fool mistakes in his aim, and stumbles so much in the easiest business, that he commonly miscarries. Bp. Patrick.

3. Yea also, when he that is a fool &c.] Yea, let a fool but walk by the way, and his very motion and gesture shew what he is, and proclaim his want of sense; much more do his words and actions betray him. Bp. Hall.

4. If the spirit of the ruler &c.] If thy prince be angry with thee, quit not the duty of a subject. Bp. Patrick.

5. — an error which proceedeth from the ruler:] An errour which proceeds from princes in the ill choice which they make of those whom they promote; for (ver. 6.) "folly is set in great dignity, and the rich sit in low place;" that is, those who are truly able, both for their parts and their estates, and are well worthy of eminent places, are neglected and disregarded. Bp. Hall.

7. — servants upon horses,] In the East, to ride on a horse is deemed an honourable circumstance, and ideas of stateliness are always attached to it. The Turks at this day, when they ride on horseback, proceed in a very stately manner: it is contrary to their dignity to advance beyond a footpace, and they are attended by a number of servants. Harmer.

8. — whoso breaketh an hedge, a serpent shall bite him.] By this men are warned, that the overthrowing of an established government and settled laws is often fatal to those that attempt it. Other proverbs to the same effect are given at ver. 9. Dr. Wells.

11. Surely the serpent &c.] Surely the serpent will bite, if it be not hindered by enchantments: and a babbler, or one that secretly traduces his governours, and irritates the people against them, is no better; for he injures thereby his governours as much as the serpent does one whom he bites. Dr. Wells.

12. — the lips of a fool will swallow up himself.] The words of a fool will be the occasion of his own undoing. Bp. Hall.

15. — because he knoweth not how to go to the city.] Because out of simplicity he wanders about over untracked ways, and does not so much as know the beaten road to the city. Bp. Hall.

18. By much slothfulness the building decayeth;] In like manner a whole kingdom is ruined by the sloth and inattention of those who have the government of it. Dr. Wells.

19. A feast is made &c.] There are proper times for the feasting and mirth of kings, and those who have the care of the government; but then care must be taken that too much money be not spent on such occasions, so as not to leave enough for the publick supplies of the kingdom. Dr. Wells.

Chap. XI. ver. 1. Cast thy bread &c.] Bestow thy beneficence on those from whom there is no probability of a return of kindness; for He that seeth in secret will, when thou hast forgotten it, restore it unto thee with a happy increase. Bp. Hall.

2. Give a portion to seven, &c.] Be not narrow and confined in thine alms, but bestow them liberally on all that have need. Bp. Hall. See the note on Job v. 19.

3. If the clouds be full of rain, &c.] In this verse, Solomon illustrates the duty of charity, and the reason for the timely exercise of it: the former by the clouds, which are a fit emblem of charity, in pouring down general plenty on the earth; the latter by the trees, which can bring forth fruit no longer than they continue joined to the earth by their roots, as man can no more be fruitful in good works, when he has ceased to live. Bp. Patrick.

4. He that observeth the wind shall not sow;] Let not every circumstance of vain fear discourage thee from doing good and distributing; he, that is too curious in observing every wind that blows, will never find an opportunity of sowing. Bp. Hall.

6. In the morning sow thy seed, &c.] That is, take all proper occasions of exercising thy charity, as long as thou livest; for thou knowest not what occasion may suit to do the greatest good to others, and to bring the greatest blessing on thyself; and whether all occasions may prove equally beneficial. Dr. Wells.

9. Rejoice, O young man, &c.] When thou art inclined, O young man, to rejoice in thy youth, &c. know, that is, remember, that for every sin committed "God will bring thee into judgment."

Chap. XII. Solomon, to prove that a future state of retribution was the object which he held out through the whole of his exhortation, as the only adequate sanction of virtue, the only sure prop of religion, closes this admirable work with the solemn admonition, "Remember now thy Creator," &c. Then, after describing, with singular beauty and philosophick precision, the symptoms of decay preceding that awful hour, when "the dust shall return to the earth as it was," &c. he imprints upon the heart, in the two last verses, that great truth which it was his chief object to promulgate and enforce. Dr. Graves.

Ver. 1. Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth,] "Remember thy Creator;" that is, honour, fear, love, obey, and serve Him; in a word, act as becomes one who is mindful of God, and bears Him continually in his thoughts. Abp. Tillotson.

—— thy Creator] The Hebrew is, "thy Creators," in the plural. The plural is employed to shew the plurality of Persons in the unity of essence, namely, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. For these three Divine Persons consulted together concerning the creation of man, Gen. i. 26. Jones of Nayland, Parkhurst.

2—7. While the sun, &c.] The striking description of old age which here follows may thus be paraphrased. Before thine eyes grow dim with age, so that thou dost not clearly discern the sun, moon, and stars; and before the evils and miseries of age succeed one another in a woful vicissitude: before the time that thine arms, which are the guard of this thy house of clay, shall tremble with palsies; and thy legs, which are thy strong supporters, shall bow themselves; and thy teeth grind slowly and with difficulty, because they are few; and thine eyes, which are as glasses in the windows of the head, are dusky and darkened: when the street doors shall be shut upon thee, as now retired to thine own home, without care of others' visits or business; when thy slow feeding shall make thee unfit for other men's tables: when every little noise, even that of a bird, shall wake thee out of thy sleep; and when thy spirits shall be so dull and dejected, that thou shalt take no pleasure in hearing the most melodious musick: when thy decrepit age shall make thee so unfit to move, that thou shalt be afraid of every rub or clod that lies in thy way; when the white blossoms of age shall cover thy head, and every light thing (though it be but the weight of a grashopper) shall seem burdensome to thee; and all those lusts and desires, which haunted thy stronger times, are now gone and past; for there is no way but this one; man goeth to his long home the grave, and the mourners in hired formality go about the streets: before all thy natural and vital spirits be utterly exhausted, and all the functions and offices of life be quite discharged, which shall be in the last act of death; for, as when the cord is loosed and the bucket broken, and the pitcher broken at the well, or the wheel at the cistern, no water can any more be drawn; so, when these vital parts fail, there can be no further prolongation of life: when this frame of man's body shall thus be dissolved; then shall the dust, of which it was formed, return to the earth, and the soul or spirit shall return to the God who gave it. Bp. Hall.

Hence let us learn to bestow on each part of our composition that portion of our time and attention, which, on a just consideration of their relative value, they may be found to deserve. Bp. Horne.

6. Or ever the silver cord &c.] The expressions of this verse are by many understood (in a sense differing from that of Bp. Hall, just given) to bear allusion to different parts of the human body. The "silver cord" is thought to mean the thread of life, the spinal marrow; "the golden bowl" to express the heart; and "the wheel at the cistern" the tubes and arteries about it. Bp. Horne, Dr. Hodgson.

11. The words of the wise &c.] The words of the wise, and so these instructions, are intended, and ought to excite men to virtue, as goads excite the ox to go forward: and, as nails fastened in a board stick fast, so should these instructions stick fast in the minds of men; which they will the less fail to do, if duly inculcated by "the masters of assemblies," or those who rule and govern in the sacred assemblies; which masters or teachers are appointed and directed by "one Shepherd" or Supreme Governour, namely, God. Dr. Wells.

12. And further, by these, my son, be admonished: &c.] Therefore be advised, my son, (or whoever thou art that shalt read these things, whose happiness I wish as my own,) be advised by me, and not only believe these things, but rest contented with such useful knowledge, and do not trouble thyself with composing or reading many books; for all that is needful to instruct men how to be happy may be comprised in a few wise precepts; and, if thou extendest thy desires beyond this, thou mayest turn over infinite volumes, which are continually increasing, and serve only to distract thy mind and tire thy spirits, and impair thy health, but yield little profit after the expense of much time and labour. Bp. Patrick.

13. Let us hear the conclusion &c.] Solomon, to whom God gave a wise and understanding heart, so that before him there was none like him, neither shall any like him arise after him, who had carefully considered, and thoroughly examined, all things under the sun, and was therefore most likely to give a true judgment, gives his clear opinion in this affectionate conclusion of his book, "Fear God, and keep His commandments; for this is the whole," the whole duty and happiness, "of man;" this is that alone which will carry him securely through the world, and lead him without errour to his final happiness. Dr. S. Clarke.

THE SONG OF SOLOMON.

INTRODUCTION.

THIS Book was written by Solomon, to whom it is expressly ascribed by the Hebrew title. It is almost universally allowed to have been a marriage song of that monarch, composed on the celebration of his nuptials with a very beautiful woman, called "the Shulamite," the daughter, as has been supposed, of Pharaoh, and the favourite and distinguished wife of Solomon.

Solomon was eminently skilled in the composition of songs, and he is related to have produced above one thousand, 1 Kings iv. 32; out of which number, probably, this alone was attributed to the suggestion of the Holy Spirit; for this alone has escaped the waste of time, by being preserved in the sacred volume, into which it was received as unquestionably authentick; and it has uniformly been considered as canonical by the Christian Church.

The royal author appears, in the typical spirit of his time, to have designed to render a ceremonial appointment descriptive of a spiritual concern; and this Song is accordingly considered by judicious writers to be a mystical allegory of that sort which induces a more sublime sense on historical truths, and which, by the description of human events, shadows out Divine circumstances. The sacred writers were, by God's condescension, authorized to illustrate His strict and intimate relation to the Church by the figure of a marriage; and the emblem must have been strikingly becoming and expressive to the conceptions of the Jews, since they annexed ideas of peculiar mystery to this appointment, and imagined that the marriage union was a counterpart representation of some original pattern in heaven. Hence it was performed among them with very peculiar ceremonies and solemnity, with every thing that could give dignity and importance to its rites. Solomon therefore, in celebrating the circumstances of his marriage, was naturally led, by a train of correspondent reflections, to consider that spiritual connexion which it was often employed to symbolize; and the idea must have been the more forcibly suggested to him, as he was at this period preparing to build a temple to God, and thereby to furnish a visible representation of the Hebrew Church. The spiritual allegory, thus worked up by Solomon to its highest perfection, was very consistent with the prophetick style, which was accustomed to predict evangelical blessings by such parabolical figures: and Solomon was more immediately furnished with a pattern for this representation by the author of the forty-fifth Psalm, who describes, in a compendious allegory, the same future connexion between Christ and His Church.

But though the work be certainly an allegorical representation, many learned men, in an unrestrained eagerness to explain the Song, even in its minutest and most obscure particulars, have too far indulged their imaginations; and, by endeavouring too nicely to reconcile the literal with the spiritual sense, have been led beyond the boundaries which a reverence for the sacred writings should ever prescribe. The ideas which the sacred writers furnish concerning the mystical relation between Christ and His Church, though well accommodated to our apprehensions by the allusion of a marriage union, are too general to illustrate every particular contained in this poem; which may be supposed to have been intentionally decorated with some ornaments appropriate to the literal construction. When the general analogy is obvious, we are not always to expect minute resemblance, and should not be too curious in seeking for obscure and recondite allusions. Solomon, in the glow of an inspired fancy, and unsuspicious of misconception or deliberate perversion, describes God and His Church, with their respective attributes and graces, under colourings familiar and agreeable to mankind, and exhibits their ardent affection under the authorized figures of earthly love. No similitude could indeed be chosen so elegant and apposite for the illustration of this intimate and spiritual alliance, as a marriage union; if considered in the chaste simplicity of its first institution, or under the interesting circumstances with which it was established among the Jews.

This poem may be considered, as to its form, as a dramatical poem of the pastoral kind. There is a succession of time; and a change of place, to different parts of the palace and royal gardens. The persons introduced as speakers, are the bridegroom and bride, and their respective attendants. The interchange of dialogue is carried on in a wild and digressive manner, but the speeches are adapted to the persons with appropriate elegance. The companions of the bride compose a kind of chorus, which seems to bear some resemblance to that afterwards adopted in the Grecian tragedy. Solomon and his queen assume the pastoral simplicity of style which is favourable to the communication of their sentiments. The poem abounds throughout with beauties, and presents every where a delightful and romantick display of nature, painted at its most interesting season, and described with every ornament that an inventive fancy could furnish. It is justly entitled A Song of Songs, or most excellent song, as being superiour to any that an uninspired writer could have produced, and tending, if properly understood, to purify the mind, and to elevate the affections from earthly to heavenly things. Dr. Gray.

It was the practice of the Jews to forbid their children the reading of this Book till their judgment was sufficiently matured; lest, in the fervour of youth, they should give too wide a scope to fancy, and interpret to a bad sense the spiritual ideas of Solomon. This was a very prudent and judicious precaution; and may well serve to restrain the practice, which has unfortunately prevailed among some Christians of modern times, of applying in an indecorous manner the strong figurative expressions which occur throughout this poem. Dr. Gray, Edit.

Chap. I. ver. 1. The song of songs,] This title denotes the excellence of the song, not only in its structure and composition, but more particularly in regard to the subject of which it treats, as representing the earnest desire of the Church of God, which is the spouse or bride of Christ, to enjoy the great blessing of Christ's coming, as being her bridegroom; or He, by whose merits all the faithful are blessed or made happy. Bp. Patrick, Dr. Wells.

For a general notion of the allegorical sense conveyed by the different parts of this book, the reader is referred to the heads of the several chapters.

2. Let him &c.] The bride here breaks out into expressions of tenderness, and addresses him when absent, as if he were present; being interrupted at times by the bridemaids who attend her, ver. 4, 8. Bp. Percy.

3. — the savour of thy good ointments] Fragrant ointments were especially used at nuptials, and on other festival occasions; see Ps. xlv. 8; Prov. vii. 17; Amos vi. 6: hence the odour of sweet ointments became a common metaphor to express the extensive acceptableness of a good name. Bp. Percy.

5. — as the tents of Kedar,] Volney says, the tents of the Bedoween Arabs, woven of goats' or camels' hair, are black or brown. Parkhurst. The tents of the wild Arabs are to this day of a very dark or black colour, being made of the shaggy hair of their black goats. D'Arvieux.

—— as the curtains of Solomon.] Rather, "as the tapestry of Solomon:" perhaps comparing her to one of the beautiful figures on fine tapestry. Dr. Hodgson.

"I am black but comely," &c. The expressions are to be divided, as is sometimes the case in Hebrew diction, "I am black as the tents of Kedar, but comely as the curtains of Solomon." Bp. Lowth.

6. Look not upon me, &c.] Do not despise me, by considering my outward hue, for my brothers and sisters have done me injury by making me a slave to the meanest employments, in which I was exposed to the rays of the sun, and could not preserve my beauty. Bp. Patrick.

7. — where thou makest thy flock to rest at noon:] In hot countries, the shepherds and their flocks are always forced to retire for shelter during the burning heats of noon.

9. I have compared thee, &c.] The bridegroom, seeing perhaps, at some little distance, the bride anxiously seeking for him, here commends her conjugal affection by various compliments to her charms, and the dialogue is thus carried on to chap. ii. 8, in a very poetical, but unconnected, manner. Bp. Percy.

—— to a company of horses] This comparison will not be deemed coarse or vulgar, when it is considered what beautiful and delicate creatures the Eastern horses are, and how highly they are valued. It is very remarkable that a Greek poet, Theocritus, has made use of a similar comparison to a Thessalian steed, to express the beauty of Helen. Bp. Percy.

10. — comely with rows of jewels, &c.] Olearius supposes the head-dress of the bride here referred to, to be the same with that which is now frequently used in the East. He says that all the head-dress of the Persian ladies consists in two or three rows of pearls, which are not there worn about the neck, but round the head, beginning at the forehead, and descending down the cheeks, and under the chin, so that their faces seem to be set in pearls. Harmer.

12. — my spikenard] Spikenard, or nard, is a plant growing in the East, whose root is very small and slender; it puts forth a long small stalk, and has several ears or spikes even with the ground; whence it has the name of spike-nard. Calmet.

14. — as a cluster of camphire] Interpreters have been much puzzled by these words which we translate "cluster of camphire." That which we call camphire was then unknown; and therefore the word is better translated in the margin by "cypress;" not meaning the tree known by that name, but an aromatick plant, (properly called cyprus,) known in the East, which produced a sweet-scented bush of flowers, and also berries, not much differing from the fragrancy of spikenard. These shrubs seem to have been cultivated at En-gedi near Jericho, after the manner of vines; and hence probably the nurseries of them are here called vineyards. Bp. Patrick.

15. — thou hast doves' eyes.] To understand the force of this expression, we must not refer it to our common doves or pigeons, but to the doves of Syria, which have large and beautiful eyes. Those, who have seen the fine Eastern bird, the carrier pigeon, will require no further commentary on this verse. Sir T. Brown. Or perhaps, as the dove is always considered as emblematick of conjugal tenderness and affection, the comparison to "doves' eyes" may bear reference to the soft qualities which the eyes of the bride expressed. Harmer. But see note at chap. v. 12.

17. The beams of our house are cedar,] Perhaps the translation should be, "The beams of our house are cedar, and fir our roof;" and the expression, concurring with that of the last verse, may shew, that they were not in a house, but in a grove, where the heads of the firs and the cedars are poetically called the beams and roof of their chamber. Dr. Hodgson.

Chap. II. ver. 1. — rose of Sharon,] Sharon, or Saron, was a town which gave name to a spacious and fruitful valley, reaching from Cesarea to Joppa. Dr. Wells. It is meant, "I am a mere rose of the field." The bride now speaks, and seems with becoming modesty to represent her beauty as nothing extraordinary, as a mere common wild flower: this the bridegroom in the next verse denies, insisting that she as much surpasses the generality of maidens, as the flower of the lily does that of the bramble. Bp. Percy.

—— lily of the valleys.] Not the beautiful flowers known among us by the name of "lily of the valley," but probably a Syrian plant of the lily kind, wont to grow in low lands. Harmer.

3. As the apple tree among the trees] Perhaps rather, according to the Chaldee paraphrase, "as the citron tree." Parkhurst.

5. Stay me with flagons,] This verse is a description of one falling into a swoon; in which it is usual to call for strong reviving smells. Bp. Patrick.

7. I charge you, — by the roes, &c.] This is a rural form of adjuring. The bride entreats her virgin companions by those delicate and sprightly creatures, which add so much to the beauty of the sylvan scenes, and in pursuit of which, as nymphs fond of rural sports, they may be supposed to have taken frequent pleasure. It is natural to conjure a person by whatever is most affecting, dear, or valued. Bp. Percy.

"By the roes." The animal designed seems rather the gazelle or antelope. Parkhurst.

8. The voice &c.] The bride here takes up the discourse to chap. iii. 6. Bp. Percy.

— The voice of my beloved!] This would be more intelligible, if we were to supply, as in the old version, "It is the voice." Dr. Durell.

—— he cometh leaping &c.] Allusion is here still made to the roes, ver. 7.

9. — behold, he standeth behind our wall, &c.] The Eastern buildings generally surrounded a square inner court. The bridegroom seems here to be described as entering the outward apartments, and gradually seen, as he made his approach; first behind the wall, then looking through the window, and lastly putting his head through the lattice. Bp. Percy.

12. — the turtle] This bird is in some sense, and sometimes, if not always, a bird of passage, as appears from Jer. viii. 7, where it is said to "know its time." Aristotle, Varro, and Cicero say the same. Script. illust. Expos. Ind.

13. — the vines with the tender grape] In many versions these words are rendered, "the vines in blossom." That the blossom of the vine may give a fragrant smell in hot countries, is shewn by the practice of the ancients, who used to put the dried flowers of the vine into their new wine, in order to give it fragrancy and a pure or flosculous spirit. Bp. Percy.

14. — in the clefts &c.] Solomon having in the language of affection called her his dove, nothing was more natural, in an Oriental imagination, than the immediate comparing of the then residence of the Jewish queen to the rocky clefts in which their doves were wont to build. It appears that doves in those countries usually take up their abode in the hollow places of rocks and cliffs. The word, which we translate "stairs," occurs but once more; namely in Ezek. xxxviii. 20, and there is translated "steep places." It might be better perhaps here to translate the word, "steep places or lofty cliffs." Harmer.

15. — foxes, that spoil the vines:] As foxes in England do not destroy vines, this passage has sometimes been objected to; but we learn from Dr. Shaw, that "jackalls of the lesser kind eat roots and fruits, and frequent the gardens every night." So Hasselquist says, "There is plenty of these animals near the convent of St. John, in the desert, about vintage time; insomuch that the owners are obliged to set guards over the vines, to prevent these creatures from destroying them." These then are clearly the animals, which are here meant. Fragments to Calmet.

17. Until the day break,] "Until the day breathe," literally; or, "till the day blow fresh." There is peculiar beauty in this expression: in those warm climates the dawn of day is attended with a fine refreshing breeze, of the most delightful kind. Bp. Percy.

—— turn, — and be thou like a roe] That is, come to me with the swiftness of a roe or antelope, from thy lurking places. Dr. Durell.

—— upon the mountains of Bether.] In the margin, "mountains of division," "craggy, intersected mountains;" which is preferable perhaps to considering Bether as a proper name. Parkhurst.

Chap. III. ver. 6. Who is this &c.] The dialogue seems to be taken up by the companions of the bride; afterwards (ver. 11.) by the bride, and (chap. iv. 1.) by the bridegroom. Bp. Percy.

—— like pillars of smoke,] It is customary at Eastern marriages for virgins to lead the procession with silver-gilt pots of perfumes. In the present instance, so liberally were these rich perfumes burnt, that, at a distance, a pillar or pillars of smoke arose from them; and the perfume was so rich, as to exceed in value and fragrancy all the powders of the merchant. Burder.

10. — the midst thereof &c.] The words may be rendered, "the middle of it" (that is, the couch of the palanquin or litter) "spread with love by the daughters of Jerusalem;" that is, with needlework or loomwork, wrought by the daughters of Jerusalem in token of their love and regard to Solomon. The Jewish women were famous for these curious works. See Judg. v. 30; Prov. xxxi. 22, 24. Parkhurst.

11. — the crown wherewith his mother crowned him] It was usual with many nations to put crowns or garlands on the heads of new-married people. It seems from this passage, that among the Jews this ceremony was performed by one of the parents. Among the Greeks, the bride was crowned by her mother. With the Greeks and Romans, the nuptial crowns were only chaplets of leaves and flowers. With the Hebrews they were sometimes also of richer materials, as gold, silver, &c. according to the rank of the persons. Bp. Percy.

Chap. IV. ver. 1. — thy hair is as a flock of goats,] Thy hair is as fine as that of a flock of goats: it seems to be a comparison with the hair of the Eastern goats, which is of a delicate silky softness, and bears a great resemblance to the fine curls of a woman's hair. Bochart. Some of them had a fleece so fine, that it was almost as soft as silk; such as was that spun by the women for the use of the tabernacle, Exod. xxxv. 26. To this hair allusion seems here to be made in respect to its softness, as well as length and thickness. Bp. Patrick.

—— that appear from mount Gilead.] The sense of the whole may be, "Thy hair is like a flock of ascending goats, which is seen from mount Gilead;" and the point of comparison may chiefly turn on the head being covered with fine flowing locks, as mount Gilead was with the shaggy herd, reaching in an extended line from its foot to its summit. Michaelis.

2. Thy teeth are like a flock of sheep] By this comparison are admirably expressed the evenness, whiteness, just proportions, and unbroken series of the set of teeth. Bp. Lowth.

—— thy temples are like a piece of a pomegranate] Rather, Thy cheeks are like a piece of pomegranate within thy locks: expressing that her cheeks, partially shaded by her hair, looked more beautiful, like the seeds of the pomegranate (whose colour is white mixed with red) in the midst of the divided rind. Bp. Lowth.

4. Thy neck is like the tower of David] Her neck, tall and slender, erect, and moulded according to the most elegant proportions, and adorned with gold and jewels, is happily compared with a tower of well-known elegance and distinction in the citadel of Zion, adorned with every variety of splendid armoury. Bp. Lowth.

6. — to the mountain of myrrh, &c.] Myrrh and frankincense were among the most valued perfumes of the East. The bridegroom therefore concludes his compliments on the bride's person, by comparing her to an entire heap of those precious essences. Bp. Percy.

8. Come with me — my spouse,] Here begins a new representation, the style of the bridegroom being altered towards the bride, whom he had before called by the name of "love," but now for the first time addresses under that of "spouse." Bp. Patrick.

——from the top of Amana,] Amana was a part of mount Libanus; Shenir and Hermon were parts of the same ridge of mountains. Bp. Patrick. This invitation of the bridegroom is not to be taken literally, but the words are to be understood in a figurative sense. He invites the bride to his arms, as to a place of safety, and encourages her to look down in security amidst any dangers with which she was threatened. Lebanon, Amana, Shenir, and Hermon, were all places where some dangers were to be apprehended; and it is an usual beauty in poetry, to represent a general idea by particulars that largely partake of it. Bp. Percy.

9. — my sister, my spouse;] Or, perhaps, more literally, "my sister spouse." "Sister" seems here used as a term of endearment. Bp. Percy.

—— with one of thine eyes,] The words may be translated, "with one glance of thine eyes." Bp. Percy.

—— with one chain of thy neck.] The Latin translation is not inelegant, "with one curl or ringlet of thy neck." Bp. Percy.

11. Thy lips, — drop as the honeycomb:] Expressing her sweet and melting words; a metaphor common to Greek and Oriental writers. Bp. Percy.

——like the smell of Lebanon.] The trees which grew upon mount Lebanon produced many aromatick gums and spices, and frankincense among others. Bp. Patrick.

12. — a fountain sealed.] This alludes no doubt to what was sometimes practised in the East, in order to secure the water of fountains to the proper owners. Parkhurst.

13. Thy plants are &c.] The bridegroom, having in the foregoing sentence called the bride an "inclosed garden," here carries on the metaphor, and compares her virtues and accomplishments to all the choicest productions of an Eastern orchard. Bp. Percy.

14. — calamus] Sweet-scented cane. Parkhurst.

——and aloes,] By "aloes" here seems plainly meant the lign-aloes or wood-aloes, the finest sort of which is the most resinous of all the woods with which we are acquainted. Its scent, while in the mass, is very fragrant and agreeable. The smell of the common aloe wood is also pleasant, but not so strongly perfumed as the former. Parkhurst.

Chap. V. ver. 1. I am come into my garden, &c.] The bridegroom here returns an answer to the invitation of the bride in the latter part of the foregoing chapter; and testifies his acceptance by coming to taste and feast upon the fruit of his garden; and, after the manner of those countries, he calls his friends and companions to be partakers of it with him. His receiving fruit from the garden is expressed by these words, "I have gathered my myrrh," &c. Then follows the feast, (which they always made when they gathered the fruits of the earth,) in these words; "I have eaten my honeycomb with my honey," &c. Honey is mentioned in preference to other things, because in Eastern countries it was a principal and favourite food, as appears from its having been among the presents sent to Joseph, when governour of Egypt, Gen. xliii. 11, and among those brought to David by the great men of his country, 2 Sam. xvii. 29. As honey comprehends all the royal dainties which were to be eaten, so the wine and milk mentioned comprehend all the liquors given at the feast. Bp. Patrick.

2. — my undefiled:] Rather, "My perfect one;" so the Hebrew word properly signifies, one possessed of all accomplishments, both of mind and body. Bp. Percy.

11. His head is as the most fine gold,] Though the ancients prized golden or flaxen locks, yet this cannot be the sense here, as his hair is said to be black. The expression probably alludes to the custom which then prevailed of using a powder of a golden colour, as also golden ornaments in the hair. Dr. Durell. Allusion may perhaps be made to the Eastern custom of tinging the hair and face with a vegetable substance called henna, which gives them a yellowish or golden tincture. Michaelis. Or it is only a metaphorical expression to denote consummate excellence and beauty. Sanctius.

12. His eyes are as the eyes of doves &c.] In the original, "His eyes are like doves." The most common pigeon in the East is of a deep blue colour; and the meaning here seems to be, "His eyes are like blue pigeons by the foam of waters," by which the blue iris of the eye, surrounded by the white, is compared to a pigeon amidst the white foam of waters. But, as if the foam of water was not sufficient to satisfy the poet, it is added, "washed in milk," "dipping themselves in milk," thus further contrasting the blue centre of the eye with the surrounding white. Fragments to Calmet.

13. His cheeks are as a bed of spices,] The word translated "spices," sometimes signifies odoriferous plants and flowers of the garden. Perhaps then it may here mean, "roses;" and the words may convey a comparison of the pleasing ruddiness which health diffused over his cheeks to the colour of a bed of roses. Harmer.

—— his lips like lilies,] According to some, this comparison is made from the fineness and delicate softness of his lips; but Pliny mentions lilies of a deep red colour, which, he says, were much esteemed in Syria; and to this perhaps allusion is made: or perhaps the comparison may be not to the colour, but to the odoriferous sweetness of the lily. "Dropping sweet smelling myrrh;" that is, from which words flow, more precious and more pleasant than the richest and most fragrant myrrh. Bp. Patrick, Parkhurst. Allusion seems to be made to honeydrops, observable in inverted-flowered lilies, similar to the standing sweet dew on the crown imperial, now common among us. Sir T. Brown.

14. His hands are as gold rings] His hands are as gold finely turned, beset with a chrysolite. Bp. Percy. Or the meaning may be, that "he had on his fingers golden rings, set with a chrysolite." Bp. Patrick.

—— bright ivory overlaid with sapphires.] Perhaps, "is as an ivory plate, enclosed with sapphire," meaning to express the white skin covered with a purple robe. Michaelis.

15. His legs are as pillars of marble,] Alluding perhaps to the strength and firmness of his stature; or else to the colour of the garments. Bp. Patrick.

—— his countenance is as Lebanon,] Of the two celebrated mountains in Judea, Lebanon and Carmel, the former was celebrated for its height, ruggedness, and the abundance of its vast and towering cedars; the latter for its richness and fertility, abounding with vineyards, olive grounds, and corn fields. Hence the former is here employed to express masculine dignity, as the latter is (chap. vii. 5.) to convey an idea of female beauty. Bp. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 1014.

WHITHER is thy beloved gone, O thou fairest among women? whither is thy beloved turned aside? that we may seek him with thee.

2 My beloved is gone down into his garden, to the beds of spices, to feed in the gardens, and to gather lilies.

[a] Chap. 2. 16. & 7. 10.

3 [a] I am my beloved's, and my beloved is mine: he feedeth among the lilies.

4 ¶ Thou art beautiful, O my love, as Tirzah, comely as Jerusalem, terrible as an army with banners.

5 Turn away thine eyes from me, for ‖ they have overcome me: thy hair is [b] as a flock of goats that appear from Gilead.

‖ Or, they have puffed me up.

[b] Chap. 4. 1, 2.

6 Thy teeth are as a flock of sheep which go up from the washing, whereof every one beareth twins, and there is not one barren among them.

7 As a piece of a pomegranate are thy temples within thy locks.

8 There are threescore queens, and fourscore concubines, and virgins without number.

9 My dove, my undefiled is but one; she is the only one of her mother, she is the choice one of her that bare her. The daughters saw her, and blessed her; yea, the queens and the concubines, and they praised her.

10 ¶ Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners?

11 I went down into the garden of nuts to see the fruits of the valley, and to see whether the vine flourished, and the pomegranates budded.

12 † Or ever I was aware, my soul ‖ made me like the chariots of Ammi-nadib.

† Heb. I knew not.

‖ Or, set me on the chariots of my willing people.

13 Return, return, O Shulamite; return, return, that we may look upon thee. What will ye see in the Shulamite? As it were the company ‖ of two armies.

‖ Or, of Mahanaim.

CHAP. VII.

1 A further description of the church's graces. 10 The church professeth her faith and desire.

HOW beautiful are thy feet with shoes, O prince's daughter! the joints of thy thighs are like jewels, the work of the hands of a cunning workman.

2 Thy navel is like a round goblet, which wanteth not † liquor: thy belly is like an heap of wheat set about with lilies.

3 [a] Thy two breasts are like two young roes that are twins.

4 Thy neck is as a tower of ivory; thine eyes like the fishpools in Heshbon, by the gate of Bath-rabbim: thy nose is as the tower of Lebanon which looketh toward Damascus.

Chap. VI. ver. 4. — beautiful — as Tirzah,] Tirzah was a beautiful situation in the tribe of Judah, chosen by Jeroboam for the seat of his kingdom. The name implies "a delightful city." Bp. Patrick.

—— comely as Jerusalem,] Jerusalem was esteemed the most charming place in all Palestine, and is called by Jeremiah, "the perfection of beauty," Lam. ii. 15. Bp. Percy.

—— terrible as an army with banners.] These words may be rendered, "dazzling as bannered hosts." The word translated "terrible," properly signifies "amazing," exciting awe and consternation. Bp. Percy. Some refer the expression to the gravity, or rather severity, of her countenance, which forbade all near approaches to so great a beauty. Bp. Patrick.

8. There are threescore queens, &c.] It is the common opinion that Solomon here alludes to the number of his own wives, and that he composed this song before he multiplied his wives to the prodigious extent related at 1 Kings xi. 1, &c. But it is more probable that he alludes generally to the custom of other princes in the East, who, besides their principal wives that were solemnly espoused and endowed, had also others who were called concubines. The terms "threescore" and "fourscore" are probably used for an uncertain number. Bp. Patrick.

12. — ever I was aware,] The meaning of this verse seems to be, that the spouse, hearing such high commendations of herself, both from the bridegroom, and from the persons mentioned at ver. 10, says with great humility, that she was not conscious to herself of such perfections, (for so the first words appear to signify in the Hebrew, "I did not know it," or "I did not think so,") but is incited thereby to make the greatest speed, so as to preserve the character which he had given her; and to go along with him into his garden, (which she had neglected before, ver. 2,) there to give a good account of her proficiency. For which purpose she seems on a sudden to take leave of her friends, (who had charitably accompanied her to seek him,) that she might for some time enjoy his society alone; which is the ground of their calling upon her to return, in the next verse. This is the best account I can give of these two last verses. It is supposed that Ammi-nadib was some great captain, who industriously pursued his victories or advantages with very swift chariots. Bp. Patrick.

Chap. VII. ver. 1. — thy feet with shoes,] Rather perhaps, "thy feet within thy sandals." The Hebrew women were remarkably nice in adorning their sandals, and in having them fit so neatly as to display the fine shape of the foot. Thus Judith's sandals are mentioned, together with the bracelets and other ornaments of jewels, with which she set off her beauty when she went to captivate the heart of Holofernes, (Judith x. 4.) and it is expressly said, that "her sandals ravished his eyes," chap. xvi. 9. Bp. Percy.

—— the joints &c.] The Greek translators render this word, "the whole proportion," or "model." The expression here seems to refer to the clothing which the bride wore; which agrees with the words which follow, "the work of the hands of a cunning workman." Bp. Patrick.

2. — an heap of wheat set about with lilies.] It was usual with the Jews, when their wheat had been threshed out and fanned, to lay it in heaps, (Ruth iii. 7; Hagg. ii. 16.) and, as their threshing-floors were in the open air, in order to keep off the cattle, they stuck them round with thorns, (Hos. ii. 5, 6.) These, in compliment to the spouse, are here converted into a fence of lilies. Or we may suppose that Solomon here alludes to a custom, which they might have in Palestine, of strewing flowers round the heaps of corn after it was winnowed. Bp. Percy.

4. — thine eyes like the fishpools] "Thine eyes are clear and serene as the pools in Heshbon by the gate of Bath-rabbim," (which was one of the gates of Heshbon:) "thy nose is finely formed as the tower of Lebanon which looketh toward Damascus." Bp. Percy.

5 Thine head upon thee is like ‖ Carmel, and the hair of thine head like purple; the king is † held in the galleries.

6 How fair and how pleasant art thou, O love, for delights!

7 This thy stature is like to a palm tree, and thy breasts to clusters of grapes.

8 I said, I will go up to the palm tree, I will take hold of the boughs thereof: now also thy breasts shall be as clusters of the vine, and the smell of thy nose like apples;

9 And the roof of thy mouth like the best wine for my beloved, that goeth down † sweetly, causing the lips ‖ of those that are asleep to speak.

† Heb. straightly. ‖ Or, of the ancient.

10 ¶ [b] I am my beloved's, and his desire is toward me.

[b] Chap. 2. 16. & 6. 3.

11 Come, my beloved, let us go forth into the field; let us lodge in the villages.

12 Let us get up early to the vineyards; let us see if the vine flourish, whether the tender grape † appear, and the pomegranates bud forth: there will I give thee my loves.

13 The [c] mandrakes give a smell, and at our gates are all manner of pleasant fruits, new and old, which I have laid up for thee, O my beloved.

CHAP. VIII.

1 The love of the church to Christ. 6 The vehemency of love. 8 The calling of the Gentiles. 14 The church prayeth for Christ's coming.

Before CHRIST about 1014.

† Heb. they should not despise me.

2 I would lead thee, and bring thee into my mother's house, who would instruct me: I would cause thee to drink of [a] spiced wine of the juice of my pomegranate.

[c] Chap. 2. 7. & 3. 5. † Heb. why should ye stir up, or, why, &c.

5 [d] Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness, leaning upon her beloved? I raised thee up under the apple tree: there thy mother brought thee forth: there she brought thee forth that bare thee.

[d] Chap. 3. 6.

6 ¶ Set me as a seal upon thine heart, as a seal upon thine arm: for love is strong as death; jealousy is † cruel as the grave: the coals thereof are coals of fire, which hath a most vehement flame.

10 I am a wall, and my breasts like

5. — the hair of thine head like purple;] Meaning perhaps the colour which we call auburn. Dr. Hodgson. The meaning of the word translated "hair" is not certain: it may admit the sense "hair lace," "a fillet or bandage." Bp. Patrick, Dr. Durell.

7. — thy stature is like to a palm tree,] The palm tree is remarkable for its slenderness and height. At present there are but few palms to be seen in Judea; but formerly, it is probable, they were very abundant, as they are stamped on the Roman coins which belonged to this country, and are much spoken of by Roman writers, when they treat of this country. Harmer.

8. I said, I will go up to the palm tree,] The comparison is made to the palm tree, because that tree rises straight as well as high, and therefore sets forth that part of comeliness which consists in stature. Sir T. Brown has ingeniously observed, that the expression "I will go up, and take hold of the boughs," is peculiarly appropriate, since the palm tree bears its boughs only at the upper part. Some understand by the words which we translate "clusters of grapes," dates, which are the fruit of the palm. Bp. Patrick. The word for "boughs" is rendered in the Latin translation "fruits," and, in the Greek, to the same sense, "tops," since the clusters or fruit in the palm tree really grow on the top of the stalk. Parkhurst.

9. — the roof of thy mouth &c.] The word literally signifies, "thy palate," which is here figuratively put for "thy speech," which issues thence. Bp. Percy.

13. The mandrakes give a smell,] The Hebrew word, translated "mandrakes," occurs only here and at Gen. xxx. 14. Conjectures about its meaning have been most various.

—— at our gates] It has been supposed that this passage relates to the custom of decking the gates of new-married persons with festoons of fruits and flowers. Or perhaps the meaning may be, "in our hoards." As the gates in Judea were usually large buildings, it is not improbable that the repositories for fruit were either over them, or near them. Bp. Percy.

Chap. VIII. ver. 2. — to drink of spiced wine] This is thought to allude to a custom of the parties drinking wine from the same cup in one part of the marriage ceremony. We know that spiced wine was a great delicacy in the East. It was not peculiar to the Jews; the Romans lined their vessels with odoriferous gums, to give the wine a warm bitter flavour; and it is said, that the Poles and Spaniards have a similar method of giving their wines a favourite relish. The word rendered "juice" by our translators, is properly new wine or must; and "the juice of the pomegranate" is either new wine made acid with the juice of pomegranates, which the Turks about Aleppo still mix with their dishes for this purpose; or rather wine made of the juice of pomegranates, of which, Sir J. Chardin says, they still make considerable quantities in the East. Harmer.

6. Set me as a seal &c.] These are the words of the bride, beseeching her beloved to keep her always in mind: for that was the purpose of having the name or picture of a beloved person engraven on a seal or jewel, and wearing it near the heart, to testify great esteem, and a constancy of affection. Bp. Patrick. O set me as a seal, &c.; that is, place me so that I may never slip out of thy memory or affection: this request I make out of fervent love, which is strong and irresistible as death, especially when heightened by jealousy, or a fear of losing the beloved object. Bp. Percy.

towers: then was I in his eyes as one that found † favour.

† Heb. peace.

11 Solomon had a vineyard at Baal-hamon; he let out the vineyard unto keepers; every one for the fruit thereof was to bring a thousand pieces of silver.

12 My vineyard, which is mine, is before me: thou, O Solomon, must have a thousand, and those that keep the fruit thereof two hundred.

Before CHRIST about 1014.

13 Thou that dwellest in the gardens, the companions hearken to thy voice: cause me to hear it.

14 ¶ † Make haste, my beloved, and be thou like to a roe or to a young hart upon the mountains of spices.

11. Solomon had a vineyard &c.] The bride now promises her diligence, in this and the next verse, to do him the best service, and to make the greatest improvement she could, of the talents committed to her. For whereas Solomon, as she here says, let out his vineyard, which he had in Baal-hamon, a place near Jerusalem, (where abundance of people had vineyards, and he a very large one,) "unto keepers," each for a thousand pieces of silver, or shekels, and every one of whom made two hundred pieces for his own profit, she implies that much greater would be the increase which she was likely to make by her own care and diligence. Bp. Patrick.

14. — upon the mountains of spices.] Upon the mountains where spices grow: what particular mountains are meant, cannot be ascertained. Bp. Patrick.

Thus, the nuptial ceremony being finished, the poem concludes with a few pastoral expressions of mutual tenderness and affection. Bp. Percy.

The opinion that the whole of this poem is allegorical, is confirmed by the consent and authority both of the Jewish and Christian churches, and by the analogy which it bears to other parts of Scripture, confessedly allegorical. But in tracing the allegorical sense through the several parts, great caution is required; and it is especially necessary that we should be extremely careful how we pursue the allegory too far into every particular expression. If this caution be not well observed, there is considerable risk of impairing the dignity of Holy Writ. Bp. Lowth.

END OF THE FIRST VOLUME.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

TO

THE PROPHETS.

IT is universally acknowledged, that the remaining books of the Old Testament, namely, the sixteen prophetical books, and the Lamentations of Jeremiah, were written by the persons whose names they bear. The Prophets profess themselves to be the respective authors of these books: and this internal testimony is confirmed both by Jewish and Christian tradition. Bp. Tomline.

The Prophets were those illustrious persons, who were raised up by God among the Israelites as the ministers of His dispensations. They flourished in a continued succession for above a thousand years, (Luke i. 70,) reckoning from Moses to Malachi: all co-operating in the same designs, and conspiring in one spirit to deliver the same doctrines, and to prophesy concerning the same future blessings. Moses, the first and greatest of the Prophets, having established God's first covenant, those who followed him were employed in explaining its nature, in opening its spiritual meaning, in instructing the Jews, and in preparing them for the reception of that second dispensation which it prefigured. Their pretensions to be considered as God's appointed servants were demonstrated by the unimpeachable integrity of their characters; by the intrinsick excellence and tendency of their instructions; and by the disinterested zeal, and undaunted fortitude, with which they persevered in their great designs. These were still further confirmed by the miraculous proofs which they displayed of Divine support, and by the immediate completion of many less important predictions which they uttered. Such were the credentials of their exalted character, which the Prophets furnished to their contemporaries: and we, who, having lived to witness the appearance of the second dispensation, can look back to the connexion which subsisted between the two covenants, have received additional evidence of the inspiration of the Prophets in the attestations of our Saviour and His Apostles; and in the retrospect of a germinant and gradually maturing scheme of prophecy, connected in all its parts, and ratified in the accomplishment of its great object, the coming of the Messiah. We have still farther incontrovertible proofs of their Divine appointment in the numerous prophecies, which in these latter days are fulfilled, and still under our own eyes continue to receive their completion. Dr. Gray.

The prophetical writings present us with the worthiest and most exalted ideas of the Almighty, the justest and purest notions of piety and virtue, the most awful denunciations against wickedness of every kind, publick and private, the most affectionate expostulations, the most inviting promises, and the warmest concern for the publick good. And, besides all this, they contain a series of predictions relating to our blessed Lord, in which all the remarkable circumstances of His birth, life, ministry, miracles, doctrines, sufferings, and death, are foretold in so minute and exact a manner, (more particularly in the prophecy of Isaiah,) that it might almost be thought they were describing all these things after they had happened, if it were not known, that these prophecies were confessedly written many hundred years before Christ came into the world; and were, during all that time, in the possession of the Jews, who were the mortal enemies of Christianity, and therefore would never set themselves to forge prophecies, which most evidently prove Him to be what He professed to be, and what they denied Him to be, the Messiah, and the Son of God. It is to this part of Scripture that our Lord particularly directs our attention, when He says, "Search the Scriptures; for they are they which testify of Me," John v. 39. No testimony can be more satisfactory and convincing than this, to any one that reads them with care and impartiality, and compares their predictions concerning our Saviour, with the history of His life given by those who constantly lived and conversed with Him. Bp. Porteus.

The language of the Prophets is remarkable for its magnificence. Each writer is distinguished for peculiar beauties; but their style in general may be characterized as strong, animated, and impressive. Its ornaments are derived, not from accumulation of epithet, or laboured harmony, but from the real grandeur of its images, and the majestick force of its expressions. It is varied with striking propriety, and enlivened with quick but easy transitions. Its sudden bursts of eloquence, its earnest warmth, its affecting exhortations and appeals, afford very interesting proofs of that lively impression, and of that inspired conviction, under which the Prophets wrote, and which enabled them among a people, not distinguished for genius, to surpass in every variety of composition the most admired productions of Pagan antiquity. If the imagery employed by the sacred writers appears sometimes to partake of a coarser nature, it must be recollected, that the Eastern manners and languages required the most forcible representations; and that the masculine and indignant spirit of the Prophets led them to adopt the most energetick and descriptive expressions. No style is perhaps so highly figurative as that of the Prophets. Every object of nature and of art, which could furnish allusions, is explored with industry: every scene of creation, and every page of science, seems to have unfolded its rich varieties to the sacred writers, who in the spirit of Eastern poetry delight in every kind of metaphorical embellishment.

It remains to be observed, that the greatest part of the prophetick books, as well as those more especially styled poetical, were written in some kind of measure or verse: this is evident, not only from the peculiar selection of unusual expressions and phrases, but also from the artificial arrangement and regular distribution of many sentences, which run in parallel divisions, and correspond, as it were, in equal periods; but whether this resulted from the observance of certain definite numerical feet, or was regulated by the ear and the harmony of lines of similar cadence, is uncertain. The sententious modulation however, which in consequence obtained, was so strong, as to be transfused, and to predominate, in our translation.

The Prophets probably collected their own prophecies into their present form: indisputably the prophecies were composed and published by those Prophets whose names they severally bear. As their genuine productions, they were received into the Jewish canon; and were read in the Jewish synagogues after the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, when the reading of the law was interdicted; and they continued so to be read to the days of our Saviour, from whose time they have formed a part of the service in the Christian churches. They are with great propriety received into our churches as illustrating the grand scheme of prophecy, and as replete with the most excellent instruction of every kind. The predictions which they contain were principally accomplished in the appearance of Christ. Some however, which referred to the dispersion and subsequent state of the Jews, as well as to the condition of other nations, still continue under our own eyes to be fulfilled, and will gradually receive their final and consummate ratification in the restoration of the Jews, in the universal establishment of Christ's kingdom, and in the second advent of our Lord, to "judge the world in righteousness." Dr. Gray.

Concerning the order in which all the Prophets are supposed to have flourished, see the following Table, taken from Dr. Gray's Key to the Old Testament.

The Prophets in their supposed order of time, arranged according to Blair's Tables, with but little variation.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET ISAIAH.

INTRODUCTION.

ISAIAH was of the tribe of Judah, and it is supposed that he was descended from a branch of the royal family. He was the earliest of the four great Prophets, and entered upon his prophetick office in the last year of Uzziah's reign, about 758 years before Christ. It is uncertain how long he continued to prophesy: some have thought that he died in the fifteenth or sixteenth year of Hezekiah's reign, and in that case he prophesied about forty-five years: but it appears more probable that he was put to death by command of Manasseh, in the first year of his reign; in which case he prophesied more than sixty-one years. It is said that he was sawn asunder with a wooden saw: and that mode of his death is supposed to be alluded to in the Epistle to the Hebrews, chap. xi. 37. Bp. Tomline.

The name of Isaiah is, as Vitringa has remarked, in some measure descriptive of his character, since it signifies "the salvation of Jehovah." He has always been considered as a Prophet of the highest eminence, and looked up to as the brightest luminary of the Jewish church. He has been emphatically styled, "the Evangelical Prophet," so copiously and clearly does he describe the Messiah, and characterize His kingdom; favoured, as it were, with an intimate view of the Gospel state, from the very birth of our Saviour to be "conceived of a virgin," to that glorious and triumphant period, when every Gentile nation shall bring a clean offering to the Lord, and "all flesh shall come to worship before Him," chap. lxvi. 20, 23. The author of Ecclesiasticus, in his fine and discriminating encomium on the Prophets, says of Isaiah, that "he was great and faithful in his vision;" and that "in his time the sun went backward, and he lengthened the king's life. He saw by an excellent spirit what should come to pass at the last;" Ecclus. xlviii. 22, 25. It is certain that Isaiah, in addition to his other prophetick privileges, was invested on some particular occasions with the power of performing miracles, 2 Kings xx. 11; 2 Chron. xxxii. 31. It is remarkable, that his wife is styled a prophetess, chap. viii. 3. He himself appears to have been raised up, as a striking object of veneration among the Jews; and to have regulated his whole conduct in subserviency to his sacred appointment. His sons likewise were for types and figurative pledges of God's assurances, chap. viii. 18; and their names and actions were intended to awaken a religious attention in the persons, whom they were commissioned to address and to instruct. See chap. vii. 3; viii. 1. Dr. Gray.

Though Isaiah gives so copious and circumstantial an account of the promised Messiah, and His kingdom, that he has been emphatically called "the Evangelical Prophet," his Book is not confined to prophecies relative to our Saviour: it contains many other predictions, and likewise several historical relations. It may be considered under six general divisions. The first division consists of the first five chapters, containing a general description of the state and condition of the Jews in the several periods of their history, the promulgation of the Gospel, and the coming of Christ to judgment. The second division consists of the seven next chapters, containing in the seventh the promise to Ahaz, which was predictive of Christ, whose nature, birth, and kingdom, are distinctly described in the ninth chapter: the denunciations of punishment upon the Assyrians, in the tenth chapter, seem an interruption to this glorious subject, which is resumed in the eleventh, where the Prophet breaks out into a hymn of praise, celebrating the future triumphant state of the Church. The third division, which reaches from the thirteenth to the twenty-seventh chapter inclusive, begins with a very remarkable prophecy of the destruction of Babylon, which is considered as a type of Antichrist: it then describes the fate of the Jews, Assyrians, Moabites, Philistines, Arabians, Syrians, and Egyptians; and concludes in a manner similar to the last. The fourth division, which extends from the twenty-eighth to the thirty-fifth chapter inclusive, contains predictions relative to the then approaching invasion of Sennacherib: but it is interspersed with severe reproofs and threats against the Jews for disobedience and wilful blindness, and also with consolatory promises to those who should remain faithful in the service of God, alluding frequently to the times of the Gospel. The thirty-sixth and two following chapters, which constitute the fifth division, give an historical account of the invasion of Sennacherib, and of the prolongation of Hezekiah's life. The sixth division reaches from the thirty-ninth chapter to the end of the Book: here the Prophet generally addresses his countrymen as being actually in the captivity which he had previously foretold; he predicts the total destruction of the empire of Babylon, and the restoration of the Jews to their own land by their great deliverer Cyrus, whom he represents the Almighty as calling upon by name to execute His will, about 200 years before he was born. In this latter part of the Book are principally contained the numerous prophecies already noticed, concerning the birth, ministry, death, and religion of Christ, together with a variety of circumstances, which were to precede and follow His incarnation. Bp. Tomline.

In some of his prophecies concerning Christ and the Christian church, Isaiah is so particular, that his discourse in certain parts looks more like a history of things past, than a prediction of that which was to come. St. Jerome, who had often read him, and considered him very carefully, says, "he deserves the name of an Evangelist rather than of a Prophet:" and indeed he is more frequently quoted through the New Testament than any other of the Prophets. For this reason it is, that this Book, by ancient and immemorial custom, is appointed to be read in our churches at a particular season of the year, as being the best preparative for the advent of our Lord, the foundation of the Evangelists and Apostles, the portraiture of the nature, person, and offices of the Messiah, and of the great things which He hath done and suffered for us. Reading.

The style of Isaiah has been universally admired as the most perfect model of the sublime: it is distinguished for all the magnificence, and for all the sweetness, of the Hebrew language. The variety of his images, and the animated warmth of his expressions, characterize him as unequalled in point of eloquence: and if we were desirous of producing a specimen of the dignity and beauties of the Scripture language, we should immediately think of having recourse to Isaiah. St. Jerome speaks of him as conversant with every part of science: and indeed the marks of a cultivated and improved mind are stamped in every page of his Book: but these are almost eclipsed by the splendour of his inspired knowledge. In the delivery of his prophecies and instructions, he utters his enraptured strains with an elevation and majesty, which unhallowed lips could never have attained. See chap. vi. 6, 7. From the grand exordium in the first chapter, to the concluding description of the Gospel; to "be brought forth" in wonders, and to terminate in the dispensation of eternity; from first to last there is one continued display of inspired wisdom, revealing its oracles and precepts for the instruction of mankind. Dr. Gray.

Chap. I. ver. 1. The vision of Isaiah &c.] The vision, or revelation of the will of God made known to Isaiah by the Holy Spirit of prophecy, related chiefly to the kingdom of Judah, and the spiritual circumstances of the Jewish church: but he does incidentally also speak of the ten tribes, of the Moabites, Egyptians, &c.; the kingdom of Judah being a good deal concerned in the good or ill that befell their neighbours; and the vision does not only pertain to the Jewish church, but extends to the Christian also, the New Jerusalem. W. Lowth, Wogan.

The prophecy contained in this first chapter stands single and unconnected, making an entire piece of itself. It contains a severe remonstrance against the corruptions prevailing among the Jews of that time; powerful exhortations to repentance; grievous threatenings to the impenitent; and gracious promises of better times, when the nation shall have been reformed by the just judgments of God. Bp. Lowth.

2. Hear, O heavens, &c.] God is introduced as entering upon a solemn pleading, before the whole world, against His disobedient people. The same scene is more fully displayed in the opening of the fiftieth Psalm. Bp. Lowth. See Deut. xxxii. 1, and the notes there.

5. Why should ye be stricken any more?] God complains here that His judgments (as He had before done, ver. 2, respecting His mercies) had no effect upon His people Israel, and that nothing that He could do would bring them to consideration and make them better. Abp. Tillotson.

6. From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness] The whole frame of the Jewish church is corrupted. W. Lowth.

7—9. Your country is desolate, &c.] The Prophet speaks (as Prophets often do) of things future as present. See the note from Bp. Lowth on Deut. xxxii. 15. The passage may relate immediately to the times of Ahaz and Hezekiah: but it must have a farther reference to the devastations made by the Chaldeans and by the Romans. Bp. Newton.

8. —as a cottage in a vineyard, as a lodge &c.] Little temporary huts, covered with boughs, straw, turf, or the like materials, for a shelter for the watchman who guarded the fruit against foxes, jackalls, &c. See Cant. ii. 15. Fruits of the gourd kind are in great request in the Levant for their cooling quality. Bp. Lowth. See note from Hasselquist on Numb. xi. 5.

10. —ye rulers of Sodom;—ye people of Gomorrah.] The incidental mention of these places in the preceding verse suggested to the Prophet this spirited address to the rulers and inhabitants of Jerusalem, under the character of princes of Sodom, and people of Gomorrah. Bp. Lowth.

11. To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices &c.] Those hypocritical services which had no godliness, no sincerity, no true love of God in them, were not the services which God required, (ver. 12,) or took delight in. God would not accept of vain compliments, nor be bribed with pretended gifts, offered only to excuse from duty, to compound for sin, and to palliate unjust dealing. Dr. Waterland.

15. —I will hide mine eyes from you:—I will not hear:] What is the reason of all this? Because they were defective in the moral duties of religion; as it follows, "your hands are full of blood," &c. No instituted service, no positive part of religion whatsoever, was ever acceptable, when moral duties were neglected: nay, so far from this are they, that God rejects them with abhorrence and disdain. We see from this what was acceptable to God for itself and its own sake in the Jewish religion: and under the Gospel our Saviour prefers a moral duty before any gift, Matt. v. 23, 24. Abp. Tillotson.

What God says here to the Jews for their overmultiplied fasts, and uncommanded sacrifices, He will say to all, who do any thing that agrees not with His laws, however specious and plausible, however good and acceptable, it may seem to them. God "cannot away with" any thing but the performance of His own will! Bp. Beveridge.

16. Wash you, make you clean;] This refers to the preceding verse, "your hands are full of blood," and alludes to the legal washings commanded on several occasions. Bp. Lowth. The pardon of sin upon repentance is expressed in Scripture by cleansing and purifying, to denote that the outward cleansing of the flesh was designed to put men in mind of the inward purification from sin and unrighteousness. Dr. Jenkin.

16, 17. — cease to do evil; Learn to do well;] The order, in which these words are placed, was evidently designed to teach us that the foundation of acting right is the avoiding of every thing wrong: several parts of Scripture lay down the same rule in almost the same terms, (see Amos v. 15, and places there quoted in the margin,) and many express or imply the same doctrine. Scarce any words are strong enough to express how much good bare cessation from doing evil would produce, and how great is the importance of the plain humble duty of an inoffensive life; in proportion as we root out hurtful inclinations, right ones will not fail to shoot up, and bring forth fruit, if in less quantity, yet such as will be accepted, but probably in plenty. Abp. Secker.

21. How is the faithful city become an harlot!] See the note on Exod. xxxiv. 16.

22. Thy silver is become dross,] Those good graces, which thou didst once profess to have, are now utterly corrupted and depraved; thine obedience, which was once sincere and pure, is now adulterated with abominable wickedness. Bp. Hall.

—— thy wine mixed with water:] An image used for the adulteration of wine, with more propriety than may at first appear, if what Thevenot says of the people of the Levant of late times was true of them formerly: he says, "they never mingle water with their wine to drink, but drink by itself what water they think proper for abating the strength of the wine." Whereas the Greeks and Latins by mixed wine understood wine diluted and lowered with water: the Hebrews generally mean by it, wine made stronger by the addition of higher and more powerful ingredients. Drunkards are accordingly described, Prov. xxiii. 30, as "seeking mixed wine;" and Isai. v. 22, as "mighty to mingle strong drink." Such was the "spiced wine," mentioned Cant. viii. 2. And hence the Psalmist took that highly poetical and sublime idea of the cup of God's wrath, (see Ps. lxxv. 8,) called by Isaiah, "the cup of trembling," chap. li. 17. Bp. Lowth.

24. — Ah, I will ease me of mine adversaries,] See the notes on Gen. vi. 6.

25. — take away all thy tin:] A very small quantity of tin makes silver extremely brittle, and it is difficult to separate these two metals: this gives peculiar force to the expression of the Prophet in this passage, as he had employed an allusion to silver at ver. 22. Parkhurst.

26. — I will restore thy judges as at the first, &c.] This relates, at least in its primary sense, to the restoration of the Jews after the seventy years of captivity. The promise contained in the latter part of this verse, taken in its full extent, relates to more flourishing times of the Church than the world has yet seen. W. Lowth.

29. For they shall be ashamed of the oaks &c.] The sacrificing in groves and shady places was an ancient rite of idolatry. This kind of worship is expressly forbidden in the law, Deut. xii. 2, 3; xvi. 21: and yet prevailed so much in the times of idolatrous kings, that the practice was not quite laid aside under religious princes. See 1 Kings xv. 14; xxii. 43. W. Lowth.

30. — as a garden that hath no water.] To enter into the energy of this comparison, we must consider, that in the hotter parts of the Eastern countries, a constant supply of water is necessary for the cultivation and even to the existence of a garden. There are none therefore without such a certain supply, either from some neighbouring river, or reservoirs collected from springs, or filled with rain-water in the proper season. when it overflowed, for such uses, are well known: Solomon mentions his own works of the kind, Eccles. ii. 5, 6. All the gardens of Aleppo, according to Dr. Russell, are on the banks of the river that runs by that city, or on the sides of the rill that supplies their aqueduct; and Maundrell informs us, that at Damascus there is not a garden that has not a fine quick stream running through it. Harmer, Bp. Lowth.

31. — and the maker of it] The marginal reading, "and his work," expresses the sense better, namely, that the idolaters and their devices shall perish together, however supported by secular power, or recommended by worldly grandeur. W. Lowth.

The same sense is conveyed by understanding the text in the following manner: And that mighty idol, whereto ye trust, shall be as tow; and the maker and worshipper of that idol shall be as a spark; and both of them shall burn together with unquenchable fire. Bp. Hall.

Chap. II. The prophecy, contained in the second, third, and fourth chapters, makes one continued discourse. The first five verses of this chapter foretell the kingdom of Messiah, the conversion of the Gentiles, and their admission into the Church. From the sixth verse to the end is foretold the punishment of the unbelieving Jews for their idolatrous practices, their confidence in their own strength, and distrust of God's protection; and moreover the destruction of idolatry in consequence of the establishment of Messiah's kingdom. The whole of the third chapter, with the first verse of the fourth, is a prophecy of the calamities of the Babylonian invasion and captivity; with a particular amplification of the distress of the proud and luxurious daughters of Zion. Chap. IV. 2—6, promises to the remnant, which shall have escaped this severe purgation, a future restoration to the favour and protection of God. This prophecy was probably delivered in the time of Jotham, or perhaps in that of Uzziah. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. The word that Isaiah — saw] That is, the vision. W. Lowth.

2. And it shall come to pass in the last days,] "The last days" signify in the Prophets, the times of the Messiah. This phrase by no means necessarily imports the speedy end of this material world; but only that, how long soever God shall suffer it to endure, He hath no subsequent dispensation in reserve; but hath fixed the Christian for that doctrine, and service, and trial, by which mankind are to express their obedience to Him, so long as there shall continue to be any state of discipline or obedience at all. W. Lowth, Dean Stanhope.

—— the mountain of the Lord's house &c.] From the situation of the Jewish temple on mount Moriah, a mountain is made to stand for the Christian Church: of the exaltation of which, and its wonderful prosperity and enlargement, this passage is a prophetical promise. Bp. Hurd, Jos. Mede. As we see the glorious characters here set forth in part brought to pass long ago, by the enlarging of the Messiah's dominion over the many and distant countries where His doctrine hath been received; so have we reason to embrace those gradual advances of His kingdom in men's hearts, as so many earnests and undoubted pledges of that absolute and unbounded conquest, which He shall make over ignorance and errour, when the season of exerting His grace more plentifully shall come, and effectually prepare, as well as proclaim, the nearer approaches of His kingdom of glory. Dean Stanhope.

3. — Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord,] That is, Let us join ourselves to the Christian Church. The phrase alludes to the Jews going up in companies to Jerusalem at the three solemn feasts of the year. W. Lowth.

4. — nation shall not lift up sword against nation, &c.] Throughout the Prophets, the time of the Messiah is represented as a time of universal peace and godliness, in which the natures of men should be changed, and all malice and ill-nature rooted out. He Himself is called "the Prince of Peace," chap. ix. 6. The spiritual sense implies Christ's being the Great Peace-maker; who should reconcile both Jews and Gentiles to God, and to each other. But if we look upon this and the like prophecies, as foretelling the outward peacefulness of the kingdom or Church of Christ, they seem to relate to some future flourishing state of the Church, when, after having subdued all His enemies, He shall give rest unto His faithful servants, 2 Thess. i. 7. Dr. T. Burnett, W. Lowth. See notes on chap. ix. 6.

6. Therefore thou hast forsaken thy people — because &c.] This might more clearly be translated, "For this reason Thou hast forsaken Thy people, because" &c. W. Lowth.

—— they be replenished from the east, and are soothsayers &c.] Chaldea and Syria, situated to the east of Judea, were famous for pretenders to divination, &c. (see chap. xlvii. 13; Numb. xxiii. 7;) as were the Philistines, who lay to the west, 1 Sam. vi. 2. The Jews invited and encouraged these. W. Lowth. Now the consulting of wizards and diviners, as was practised by the nations of Canaan, paying any regard to those pretenders to Divine knowledge, or suffering such to live among them, is prohibited, Deut. xviii. 10—14; as also filling the land with horses, gold and silver, (ver. 7,) is in direct contradiction to God's command in the law, Deut. xvii. 16, 17. Dr. Berriman, Bp. Lowth. God there forbids His people the use of horses and chariots, Deut. xx. 1, 4; He promises that He will be to them instead. This law, therefore, was to be a standing trial of prince and people, whether they had confidence in God their Deliverer. He had taken the defence of Israel upon Himself, and, whenever the people took it out of His hands, they were sure to be undone. There was no moral evil in having a country full of horses, but the kings of Israel were exalted to the throne on condition that they should renounce such assistance, and depend on God for success in the day of battle. Joshua, the Judges, and David, observed this law; and Solomon, for a time; but in his reign things quickly changed; and his successors followed his example. Bp. Sherlock. See the notes on Deut. xvii. 16; Josh. xi. 6; 1 Kings x. 28; 2 Kings xxiii. 29.

9. — forgive them not.] That is, Thou wilt not forgive them. The imperative is here taken for the future. See the like instances, chap. vi. 10; xxiii. 16; Zech. xiii. 7. God's judgments are sometimes foretold as imprecations: many of those in the Psalms may be understood as so many predictions. W. Lowth. See notes at Ps. v. 10; Ps. cix.

10. Enter into the rock, &c.] The remainder of the chapter is a prediction of some general judgment, ending in the utter destruction of the Jewish land and government. Such was that of the captivity: many of the expressions, however, are such as relate to the last judgment; for, all God's particular judgments being earnests of the last and general, the same expressions are common to both. Compare chap. xiii. 10; xxiv. 1; Joel iii. 15; Matt. xxiv. 29; 2 Pet. iii. 10. W. Lowth.

13. — upon all the cedars of Lebanon,] In many other places cedars of Libanus, and oaks of Bashan, are used, in the way of metaphor and allegory, for kings, princes, potentates; mountains and lofty hills, for kingdoms, states, cities; towers and fortresses, for defenders and protectors, whether by strength or counsel; ships of Tarshish, and works of art and invention employed in adorning them, for merchants, men enriched by commerce and abounding in all the luxuries and elegancies of life, such as those of Tyre and Sidon. Bp. Lowth. For ships of Tarshish, see notes at 1 Kings x. 22; xxii. 48.

18. — the idols he shall utterly abolish.] The captivity of the Jews had that good effect, that they scarce ever afterwards relapsed into idolatry; this prophecy was fulfilled in the Gentiles also upon their conversion to Christianity. Christianity is the reverse and direct opposite to idolatry; and we may observe, that whenever the Prophets speak of an entire reformation in the state of the Church, they mention the utter extirpation of idolatry out of it, as if that were one of the last enemies of God and His truth, that was to be destroyed, (see chap. xxvii. 9; xxx. 22; xxxi. 7; xlv. 16;) and the accomplishment of the prophecy accordingly will universally take place in that day, that terrible day of Christ's second advent, when He shall come to judge the world. W. Lowth, Wogan.

Idolatry is the reverse and direct opposite of Christianity. To destroy this was the great end of Christ's coming into the world. But, except He were God, the very and eternal God, of one substance with the Father, His religion would be so far from destroying idolatry, that it would be only a more refined and dangerous species of it. The Prophet, therefore, after describing the humbling effects it would have upon the hearts of all sincere converts, concludes all (that so he might acquit the worship of Christ from all charges of idolatry) with this positive assertion, that it would prove the most effectual means of putting an end to all false and idolatrous worship: "The idols He shall utterly abolish." The like conclusion we meet with in the first Epistle of St. John, where having affirmed that Jesus Christ is "the true God and eternal life," he immediately subjoins, and closes all with this advice, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols," 1 John v. 21. Wogan.

19. And they shall go into the holes of the rocks, &c.] The country of Judea being mountainous and rocky, is full of caverns; some natural, and some artificial and made for the sake of security. See Judg. vi. 2; 1 Sam. xiii. 6; xxiv. 3; Jer. xli. 9. Strabo, Josephus, and modern travellers, give accounts of the caverns, which are to be found in the neighbouring countries. Therefore, "to enter into the rock," &c. is to the Jews a very proper and familiar image to express terrour and consternation. Bp. Lowth.

20. — to the moles and to the bats;] They shall carry their idols with them into the dark caverns, old ruins, or desolate places, to which they shall flee for refuge; and so shall give them up and relinquish them to the filthy animals that frequent such places, and have taken possession of them as their proper habitation. Many travellers speak of bats of an enormous size as inhabiting the Great Pyramid. Bp. Lowth, Harmer. "Casting the idols to the moles and bats" denotes the utmost detestation and abhorrence. Wogan.

22. Cease ye from man,] That is, from valuing man. Compare Prov. xxiii. 4. W. Lowth. This verse is a very apt and most proper conclusion to what is said before of the effect of Christ's coming, namely, that "the lofty looks of man shall be humbled." Happy indeed will be this effect of His first coming, if our pride be thereby humbled, and our lofty looks be brought down:

happy, I mean, if it precede; but fruitless, miserable, and vain, if it follow, His second coming, when the day of grace shall be past, and judgment be begun. Let us conclude, therefore, as the Prophet warns us, to "cease from man, whose breath is in his nostrils," that is, from trusting in mere man; "for wherein is he to be accounted of?" But let us hold fast the profession of our faith in Christ, who is not a mere man, having breath in his nostrils only; but hath life in Himself, yea, is Life itself, and therefore GOD as well as Man. Wogan.

Chap. III. ver. 1. — the whole stay of bread, &c.] Bread is commonly called the "staff of life," Levit. xxvi. 26; Ezek. xiv. 13. This judgment seems to relate to the siege of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans. See Jer. xxxvii. 21; Ezek. iv. 16. The following verses, 2, 3, are very clearly explained by the sacred historian's account of the captivity of Jehoiachin by Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kings xxiv. 14. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

4. — I will give children to be their princes,] This also was fully accomplished in the succession of weak and wicked princes, from the death of Josiah to the destruction of the city and temple, and the taking of Zedekiah, the last of them. Bp. Lowth.

5. — the people shall be oppressed, &c.] The character of a weak government, where faction gets the better of authority, and every one does what is right in his own eyes. Bp. Wilson.

7. — I will not be an healer;] The expression seems to apply to repairing what is destroyed in a kingdom or state. Parkhurst.

—— in my house is neither bread nor clothing: &c.] He alleges that he has not wherewithal to support the dignity of the station, by such liberality and hospitality as the custom required of persons of superiour rank. See 1 Kings iv. 22, 23; Neh. v. 17, 18. The Eastern treasures anciently consisted very much in large quantities of clothing; and princes and great men now are obliged to have a large stock in readiness, for presents on all occasions. Bp. Lowth, Sir J. Chardin.

10, 11. Say ye to the righteous, &c.] Thus do the Scriptures represent to us the different condition of good and bad men, which is often true in this world; and, however that happen, will most certainly and remarkably be made good in the next. Abp. Tillotson.

12. — they which lead thee] Thy weak governours, called metaphorically, (as before, ver. 4,) "children, and women." The margin reads, "they which call thee blessed;" which may mean, the false prophets, who soothe thee in thy sins, and foretell nothing but peace and prosperity. Compare chap. ix. 15, 16. W. Lowth.

15. — grind the faces] The expression and the image is strong, to denote grievous oppression; but is exceeded by the prophet Micah, iii. 1—3. Bp. Lowth.

16. — wanton eyes,] The original gives, as the margin reads, "deceiving with their eyes," or falsifying their eyes. Though the colouring of the eyes with stibium, or al-cahol, the mineral commonly used for that purpose, be not particularly here expressed, yet I suppose it to be implied. See 2 Kings ix. 30; Jer. iv. 30; Ezek. xxiii. 40. The Chaldee paraphrase explains it so. This fashion seems to have prevailed very generally among the Eastern people in ancient times, and they retain it still. Bp. Lowth. See the note on Jer. iv. 30.

—— making a tinkling] Dr. Hunt well explains the word thus translated to mean, "skipping, bounding, dancing along;" and the same word used as a noun, (which occurs at ver. 18,) to signify those ornaments of the feet, chains or rings, which the Eastern ladies wore, and which made a tinkling sound as they moved nimbly in walking. Eugene Roger, and other travellers, speaking of Arabian women, mention them. Bp. Lowth. Rauwolff tells us, that the Arab women, whom he saw in going down the Euphrates, wore rings about their legs and hands, and sometimes a good many together, which in their stepping slipped up and down, and so made a great noise. Sir J. Chardin says, that in Persia and Arabia they wear rings about their ancles, which are full of little bells. Children and young girls take pleasure in giving them motion, and with this view walk quick. Harmer.

17. — the Lord will discover] It was the barbarous custom of the conquerors of those times, to strip their captives naked, and to make them travel in that condition, exposed to the inclemency of the weather, and to the intolerable heat of the sun. This to the women was the height of cruelty and indignity, especially to such as are here described, who had indulged themselves in all manner of delicacies of living, and all the superfluities of ornamental dress. This is always mentioned as the hardest part of the lot of the captives. Compare chap. xx. 4; xlvii. 3; Jer. xiii. 22; Nah. iii. 5. The words, which describe the ornaments in the following inventory, as one may call it, of the wardrobe of a Hebrew lady, must, from its antiquity, and from the nature of the subject, be very obscure. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

20. — tablets,] In the original, as the margin gives it, "houses of the soul," mean perfume boxes. Bp. Lowth. Which refresh the spirits, and restore life to the languid. Vitringa. "Houses of smell;" smelling or perfume boxes, appended by the ladies either to the necklace or girdle. Bp. Stock.

21. — nose jewels,] See Sir J. Chardin's note on Gen. xxiv. 22. His account is confirmed by other Oriental travellers.

24. — instead of sweet smell] Or "perfume." A principal part of the delicacy of the Asiatick ladies consists in the use of baths, and of the richest oils and perfumes: an attention to which is in some degree necessary in those hot countries. See Cant. iv. 10, 11; Esth. ii. 12. Bp. Lowth.

—— instead of a girdle a rent;] "Instead of well-girt raiment, rags." Bp. Lowth.

—— and burning] The old English translation reads, "sunburning," by way of explication, namely, They shall be exposed to the heat of the sun, in slavery or transportation into foreign parts. W. Lowth. "A sun-burnt skin." Bp. Lowth.

26. — shall sit upon the ground.] This was a posture that denoted the deepest mourning and lamentation, chap. xlvii. 1; Job ii. 13; Lam. ii. 10. The passage seems to relate, in its more immediate view, to the destruction of the city by Nebuchadnezzar: however, Judea is thus represented on a medal coined by Vespasian, after the destruction by the Romans. They might have an eye to the customs of the Jewish nation. The Psalmist describes the Jews lamenting their fortune in the same pensive posture, Ps. cxxxvii. 1. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth, Addison.

Chap. IV. The division of the chapters has broken off the Prophet's discourse almost in the middle of the sentence. The meaning is, "The numbers slain in battle shall be so great, that seven women shall be left to one man." The Prophet has described the greatness of this distress, by images and adjuncts the most expressive and forcible. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 2. In that day] This phrase often denotes, not the same time which was last mentioned, but an extraordinary season, remarkable for some signal events of Providence, called elsewhere by way of excellence, "the day of the Lord." Compare chap. ii. 11, 12; x. 20; xvii. 7; xix. 18; and see 2 Thess. i. 10; 2 Tim. i. 12, 18; iv. 8. W. Lowth. "In that day," the day of the blessed restoration of the Church. Bp. Hall.

—— the branch of the Lord] "The Messiah of Jehovah," says the Chaldee paraphrase. "The branch" is an appropriated title of the Messiah; and "the fruit of the earth" means the same great Personage to spring from the land of Judah; or perhaps the blessings consequent upon the redemption procured by Him. Bp. Lowth.

3. — that is written among the living] The phrase alludes to the registers which were kept of the Jewish tribes and families. See Ezra ii. 59, 62. W. Lowth. See the note on Exod. xxxii. 32.

4. — by the spirit of judgment, &c.] The phrase denotes the severe discrimination which God will make between the good and the bad, the pure silver and the dross, (see chap. i. 22, 25;) the better being purified, the worse consumed, in the furnace. See Ezek. xxii. 21; Mal. iii. 2, 3. W. Lowth.

5. —a cloud and smoke by day, &c.] This is a manifest allusion to the pillar of a cloud, and of fire, which attended the Jews in their passage out of Egypt; and to the glory that rested on the tabernacle, Exod. xl. 38. See Zech. ii. 5. Both passages mean, The visible presence of God shall protect the Church. Bp. Lowth.

6. And there shall be a tabernacle &c.] And whereas the Church shall be still subject to the scorching heats and tempestuous storms of persecution, God shall erect a safe tabernacle for her, to shade her from the heat, and shelter her from those violent tempests. Bp. Hall.

Chap. V. This chapter stands single and alone, unconnected with the preceding or following. The subject of it is nearly the same with that of the first chapter. It is a general reproof of the Jews for their wickedness: but it exceeds that chapter in force, in severity, in variety, in elegance; and it adds a more express declaration of vengeance, by the Babylonian invasion. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. Now will I sing to my wellbeloved] The Prophet here speaking in the person of God the Father, directs this hymn, or parable poetically expressed, to His "wellbeloved," that is, Christ. See Matt. iii. 17; xvii. 5; Col. i. 13. W. Lowth, Dr. Wells. Our Lord Christ in the evangelical style is called "the beloved Son of God, in whom He is well pleased." The Church of those times is called here the vineyard of the Son, because, as the Father created all things by Him, so by Him He has always governed all things, and more especially His church. To this agrees that saying of St. Paul, that "Christ accompanied the Israelites in the wilderness;" and that of St. Peter, that "the Spirit of Christ spake by the prophets." Indeed, as the eternal Son of the Father, He presides over all things, "God blessed for ever," as St. Paul speaks, Rom. ix. 5; and has always had the peculiar care and conduct of the patriarchs and chosen people of God. Reading.

2. —built a tower in the midst of it, &c.] To contain all the implements necessary to the culture of the vineyard, and making of the wine. To this image in the allegory, the situation, the manner of building, the use, and the whole service of the temple, exactly answered. Our Saviour in His parable, Matt. xxi. 33; Mark xii. 1, has inserted the "tower," and the "winepress," or vat, as the word should perhaps be translated here, and as St. Mark has it. It means the large open place, or vessel, which, by a conduit or spout, received the must from the winepress. In very hot countries it was very convenient to have this place under ground, or in a cave "hewed" out of the side of the rock for coolness, (see the margin,) that the heat might not cause too great a fermentation, and sour the must. Bp. Lowth.

—— wild grapes.] Not merely unprofitable grapes, but noxious; as, in the explication, (ver. 7,) to judgment is opposed tyranny, and to righteousness oppression. Some of these were of a poisonous quality, as appears from 2 Kings iv. 39—41. Bp. Lowth. The Prophet may here mean the hoary nightshade, which is common in Egypt, Palestine, and the East; the Arabs call it "wolf's grapes;" it grows much in the vineyards, and is very pernicious to them; it likewise resembles a vine by its shrubby stalk. Hasselquist.

3, 4. —judge, I pray you, &c.] The case was so plain, that God might refer it to themselves, although they were parties concerned. W. Lowth.

Let every sinner thoroughly examine his own state and condition, what his natural powers and faculties are, what they are originally capable of, what additional means and opportunities he has had put into his hands to employ and improve them; and then let him shew where the fault lay, and who is to be charged with the evil of sin, and with the consequences of it. Dr. John Clarke.

8. Woe unto them &c.] From hence to the twenty-fifth verse, sundry vices are enumerated, which, as they brought temporal judgments upon the Jews, so at the bar of Christ shall exclude from happiness, and consign all that are found guilty of them to the woes and punishments here denounced: namely, the covetous and unjust; the drunkard and voluptuary; all that wilfully neglect, or impiously despise, the knowledge of God, as well the slothful ignorant, as the proudly wise; all that perversely confound the distinctions of moral good and evil. Wogan.

10. — one bath, — an homer — an ephah.] "A bath" and "an ephah" are the same measure, about seven gallons and a half; they contain but a tenth of an "homer," Ezek. xlv. 11. W. Lowth.

11. — strong drink;] See the note on chap. xxiv. 9.

12. — the harp, and the viol, &c.] Musick universally attends Eastern feasts. Harmer. Wine, and musick, and delicate fare, are such things as God in His goodness hath given to the children of men for their comfort; and they may use them lawfully, and take comfort in them as their portion: but he that uses any of them intemperately, unseasonably, vainly, or wastefully, abuses both them and himself: therefore we often find in Scripture, both the things themselves condemned, and those that use them blamed. Bp. Sanderson.

13, 14. — their honourable men are famished, &c.] As verses 9, 10, have evidently reference to ver. 8, so have these verses to the two preceding. As the houses of the covetous are to be left uninhabited, and the fields to become desolate, so they that indulged in feasting and drinking are to perish with hunger and thirst. Bp. Lowth.

14. Therefore hell hath enlarged herself, &c.] Habakkuk uses the same image with great force, in a comparison of the ambitious and avaricious conqueror, Hab. ii. 5. But hell, or the grave, is here introduced to much greater advantage in person; and placed before our eyes in the form of a ravenous monster, opening wide his immeasurable jaws, and swallowing his prey altogether. Bp. Lowth.

17. Then shall the lambs &c.] Their luxurious habitations shall become a pasture for flocks. Bp. Lowth.

18. — that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, &c.] That are not only drawn to sin by the allurements of the world, but are active and industrious in drawing sin to themselves, or themselves to sin: "with cords of vanity," that is, with vain and deceitful arguments and pretences, whereby sinners generally draw themselves to sin: "with a cart rope," that is, with all their might, as beasts commonly do, that draw carts with ropes. Poole, Bp. Hall. The cause is here put for the effect; "iniquity" and "sin" for the punishment which they provoke. The meaning then is, "Woe unto them who foolishly draw upon themselves the reward of iniquity; nay, set their shoulders to pull it forward, as a beast of burden does a cart rope!" Rosenmüller, Bp. Stock.

20. Woe unto them that call evil good, &c.] The Prophet compares the difference of moral "good and evil" presented to the human understanding with that of "light and darkness" discerned by the eye, of "bitter and sweet" tasted by the palate; that is, as a plain and undeniable truth which forceth its evidence upon a rational mind: to transgress God's commandments, His laws and statutes, delivered by His Prophets, and confirmed by a series of miracles, was a heinous crime; but to "call evil good, and good evil," was to advance a step farther in impiety, to lay the profane axe to the root of righteousness, to destroy all religion, natural as well as revealed, and to sink into mere atheism. Dr. Jortin.

22. — to mingle strong drink:] See notes on chap. i. 22; xxiv. 9.

24. — so their root shall be as rottenness, &c.] So they shall be utterly destroyed; and shall be as a tree, whose root is rotten, and whose blossom flies away like dust. Bp. Hall.

25. — the hills did tremble,] The Prophet refers perhaps to the great earthquake in the days of Uzziah, Amos i. 1; Zech. xiv. 5. Bp. Lowth. But the mountains and the earth itself are often said to tremble at God's judgments; (see Jer. iv. 24; Mic. i. 4; Nah. i. 5; Hab. iii. 10; Ps. lxxvii. 18; cxiv. 7;) which expressions may allude to the thunder which accompanies them; to the trembling of mount Sinai when God came down upon it, Exod. xix. 18; or, to the last general judgment. See note on chap. ii. 10. He says, "did tremble;" but the representing of a thing future, as if already accomplished, is very common with the Prophets. W. Lowth.

26. And he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, &c.] The Prophets call distant countries in the popular language, as here, "the end of the earth;" the Babylonians may be primarily meant here, as chap. xxxix. 3; Jer. v. 15: and as the Medes, with respect to Babylon, are said (chap. xiii. 5.) "to come from a far country, from the end of heaven:" but the Prophet may also look farther, and the threat is probably to be extended to the desolation of Judea by the Romans; to whom the phrases used here will apply better than to the Chaldees. Vitringa.

Though the Babylonians lived at no great distance from Judea, yet many that composed their army did: indeed all foreigners were looked upon as living a great way off by the Jews, because they maintained but little commerce with their neighbours. W. Lowth.

—— and will hiss unto them] "The metaphor is taken from the practice of those who keep bees; who draw them out of their hives into the fields, and lead them back again, by a hiss or whistle;" say Cyril and Theodoret. At chap. vii. 18, the metaphor is more apparent by being carried farther; there the hostile armies are expressed by "the fly," and "the bee." Bp. Lowth.

27. —neither shall the girdle of their loins be loosed,] The Eastern people, wearing long and loose garments, were unfit for action, or business of any kind, without girding their clothes about them: when their business was finished, they took off their girdles. A girdle therefore denotes strength and activity: to unloose the girdle, to deprive of strength, to render unfit for action: it was of course an essential part of a soldier's accoutrement. See 1 Kings xx. 11; Isai. xlv. 1, 5. Bp. Lowth. See the note on Job xii. 21.

30.—they shall roar against them like the roaring of the sea: &c.] What speak I of the roaring of a lion? yea, these Chaldeans, which I will bring upon them, shall come roaring in like a mighty sea in a tempest; with such terrour, that all shall be filled with confusion; the earth shall be darkened with sorrow; and the heavens shall yield no glimpse of comfort to the distressed. Bp. Hall. See notes on chap. xiii. 10, 13.

From this chapter we perceive in what a special manner God blessed His people Israel; how they abused His gifts, and turned His grace into wantonness; and how He threatened to visit their sins with His judgments: the issue and execution of His threatenings we well know. The proper application of all this to ourselves is briefly hinted by St. Paul, "If God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest He also spare not thee," Rom. xi. 21. We, who succeed them in the spiritual vineyard, the Church of the true God, have no reason to flatter ourselves that our bad fruits shall be more indulged than theirs. But rather the judgments, which have befallen them, will make our disobedience the more inexcusable, if we commit the same sins, and are not afraid of the same punishments. Reading.

Chap. VI. ver. 1. In the year that king Uzziah died I saw &c.] As this vision seems to contain a solemn designation of Isaiah to the prophetical office, it is by most interpreters thought to be the first in order of his prophecies. But Isaiah is said (chap. i. 1.) to have prophesied in the time of Uzziah, and the phrase, in the year when Uzziah died, probably means after the death of Uzziah; as the same phrase (chap. xiv. 28.) means after the death of Ahaz. This might be a new designation, to introduce more solemnly a general declaration of the whole course of God's dispensations in regard to His people, and the fates of the nation; which are even now still depending, and will not be fully accomplished till the final restoration of Israel. Bp. Lowth.

—— I saw —the Lord] The Lord, whom Isaiah saw, was the Jehovah, and Lord of hosts, ver. 3, 5; and St. John testifies, in the passage given in the margin, that it was Christ, and Christ's glory, that Isaiah saw; it follows, that, in St. John's account, Christ is Jehovah. Dr. Waterland.

—— sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple.] The ideas are taken from Eastern royalty; the Prophet could not represent the ineffable presence of God by any other than sensible and earthly images. The particular scenery of it is taken from the temple. God is represented as seated on His throne above the ark in the most holy place, where the glory appeared above the cherubim, surrounded by His attendant ministers. See Jer. xvii. 12; Ezek. xliii. 7. Bp. Lowth.

the other. Bp. Lowth. After some such manner was the Divine anthem of Moses sung, Exod. xv. 1, 20, 21. So we read, Ezra iii. 11, at the building of the second temple did the Priests and Levites sing together by course, in praising and giving thanks to the Lord: and this hath been the practice of the Christian church all along, and is still continued among us, as being the most easy and proper way for all sorts of people to join together in setting forth the praises of God, and the best means of keeping our minds intent upon the great work we are about, and to excite one another in the performance of it. Bp. Beveridge.

—— holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts:] The Christian church hath always thought that the doctrine of the blessed Trinity is implied in this repetition; it is intimated in several other parts of the Old Testament, particularly in the form of blessing, which God commanded the priests to use, Numb. vi. 24—26. W. Lowth. See the notes on that passage.

"They are not content," says Origen, "to say it once or twice, but take the perfect number of the Trinity, thereby to declare the manifold holiness of God; which is a repeated intercommunion of a threefold holiness; the holiness of the Father, the holiness of the only begotten Son, and of the Holy Ghost." And that the Seraphim did really celebrate all the three Persons of the Godhead upon this occasion, is no conjecture; but a point capable of the clearest demonstration. The Prophet tells us, ver. 1, he "saw the Lord sitting upon a throne;" and at ver. 5, that "his eyes had seen the King the Lord of hosts." Now if there be any phrase in the Bible to distinguish the true God, it is this of "the Lord of hosts." That in this "Lord of hosts, sitting upon His throne," there was the presence of GOD the FATHER, no one will deny. That there was also the presence of GOD the SON, appears from John xii. 41: "These things said Esaias, when he saw His (Christ's) glory, and spake of Him." And that there was the presence of GOD the HOLY GHOST, is determined by Acts xxviii. 25; "Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers, saying," &c. then follow the words which the Prophet affirms to have been spoken by "the Lord of hosts." Jones of Nayland.

The former part of that noble and sublime hymn, called the Te Deum, which is commonly used after the first lesson at morning service, is an act of adoration to the ever blessed Trinity, being a paraphrase on the song of the heavenly host, recorded here by Isaiah, and by St. John in the Revelation, chap. iv. 8. The same is likewise adopted by our Church into her office for the Communion. Waldo.

4. — and the house was filled with smoke.] Or, a thick cloud; the sign of God's presence, which filled the temple on extraordinary occasions, 1 Kings viii. 10. W. Lowth.

5. — the King, the Lord of hosts.] The same Spirit, which displayed this glorious vision to Isaiah, has given the interpretation of it by the Evangelist St. John. St. John tells us, that Christ was that Jehovah, whom the entranced Prophet saw upon His throne; whose train filled the temple; whose praises were the theme of the seraphick song; whose glory fills the universe. According to the Evangelist, it was Christ's glory that Esaias saw: and to Him, whose glory he saw, the Prophet gives the name of Jehovah, and the worshipping angels gave the name of Jehovah God of Sabaoth. Bp. Horsley.

6. — having a live coal in his hand,—from off the altar:] Signifying the gift of utterance, represented by fiery tongues, (Acts ii. 3,) and the efficacy of God's word in the mouth of the Prophets, compared to fire, Jer. v. 14; xxiii. 29. The use of fire likewise is to cleanse and purify: see the following verse. W. Lowth.

8. — who will go for us?] God speaks here in the plural number, as in the passage from Genesis referred to in the margin; which is justly thought to imply a plurality of Divine persons. W. Lowth. See notes on Gen. i. 26.

9. And he said, Go, and tell this people, &c.] St. Paul (Acts xxviii. 25, 26.) saith expressly, that it was the Holy Ghost who said this; which shews the personality of the Holy Ghost, in words as plain as can be expressed. Bp. Wilson.

10. Make the heart of this people fat, &c.] The Prophet speaks of the event, the fact as it would actually happen; not of God's purpose and act by his ministry. The Prophets are in other places said to perform the thing which they only foretell, Jer. i. 10; Ezek. xliii. 3. Bp. Lowth. Even a blessing foretold is said to come from the foreteller. Rosenmüller, Bp. Stock. All the expressions here used signify no more, than that God, for the former provocations and impenitency of this people, did leave them to their own hardness and blindness, so that they did not desire to understand, and make use of the means of their recovery.

Thus God often punishes great and notorious offenders, by permitting them to fall into temptations; which, meeting with a vicious disposition, are likely to be too hard for them, considering how by a long habit of wickedness, and wilful commission of sin, they have made themselves an easy prey to every temptation, and have driven the Spirit of God from them, and deprived themselves of those aids and restraints of His grace, which He ordinarily affords, not only to good men, but likewise to those who are not very bad. Abp. Tillotson.

This prophecy might relate in some measure to the state of the Jews before the Babylonish captivity; but it did not receive its full completion till the days of our Saviour; and in this sense it is understood and applied by the writers of the New Testament, (John xii. 40; Acts xxviii. 27;) and by our Saviour Himself, Matt. xiii. 14, 15. Bp. Newton.

standing," in "seeing but not perceiving" the Messiah, after the accomplishment of so many prophecies, after the performance of so many miracles? And in consequence of their refusing to "convert and be healed," have not "their cities been wasted without inhabitant?" &c. Have they not been "removed far away" into the most distant parts of the earth? and hath not their removal or banishment been of now 1700 years' duration? and do they not still continue deaf and blind, obstinate and unbelieving? oppressed by men, and forsaken by God? Bp. Newton.

13. But yet in it shall be a tenth, and it shall return, and shall be eaten: &c.] The Hebrew may be translated thus, "But yet in it shall be" left "a tenth, after it is" (or although it is) "again eaten and devoured," &c.; implying, that, notwithstanding the repeated judgments God should bring upon the Jews, still a remnant should be preserved; and the nation, as a tree, sprout out and flourish again from the old stock. "The holy seed" is called here "a tenth," in allusion probably to the tithe under the law, set apart for, and consecrated to, God's service. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

——a teil tree,] Is the same with the linden or lime tree. Dr. Johnson's Dictionary.

——so the holy seed shall be the substance thereof.] So shall the remainder of the holy seed, which for the time seemed to lie dead, sprout forth into an abundant increase. Bp. Hall. This verse, though somewhat obscure, has been made clear by the accomplishment of the prophecy. When Nebuchadnezzar had carried away the greater and better part of the people into captivity, there was yet a tenth remaining in the land; the poorer sort, left to be vinedressers and husbandmen under Gedaliah, 2 Kings xxv. 12, 22; and the dispersed Jews gathered themselves together, and returned to him, Jer. xl. 12: yet even these, fleeing into Egypt after the death of Gedaliah, contrary to the warning of God given by the prophet Jeremiah, miserably perished there. Again, in the subsequent and more remarkable completion of the prophecy in the destruction of Jerusalem, and the dissolution of the commonwealth by the Romans, when the Jews, after the loss of above a million of men, had increased from the scanty residue that was left of them, and had become very numerous again in their country; Hadrian, provoked by their rebellious behaviour, slew above half a million more of them, and a second time almost extirpated the nation. Yet after these signal and almost universal destructions of that nation, and after so many other repeated exterminations and massacres of them, in different times and on various occasions since, we yet see with astonishment, that the stock still remains, from which God, according to His promise frequently given by His prophets, will cause the people to shoot forth again, and to flourish. Bp. Lowth. See the notes on Deut. xxx. 1.

Chap. VII. The king and royal family being in the utmost consternation on receiving intelligence of the designs of Rezin and Pekah, Isaiah is sent to comfort them, by assuring them, that God would make good His promises to the house of David. This makes the subject of this, the following, and the beginning of the ninth chapter. Chapter vii. begins with an account of the occasion of the prophecy; then follows, ver. 4—16, a prediction of the ill success of the designs of the Israelites and Syrians against Judah: and from thence to the end of the chapter, a denunciation of the calamities to be brought upon the king and people of Judah by the Assyrians, whom they had now hired to assist them. Chapter viii. has a pretty close connexion with the foregoing: it contains a confirmation of the prophecy before given of the approaching destruction of the kingdoms of Israel and Syria by the Assyrians; of the denunciation of the invasion of Judah by the same Assyrians: ver. 9, 10, give a repeated general assurance, that all the designs of the enemies of God's people shall be in the end disappointed, and brought to nought: ver. 11, &c. contain admonitions and threatenings, concluding with an illustrious prophecy (chap. ix. 1—6.) of the manifestation of Messiah, the transcendent dignity of His character, and the universality and eternal duration of His kingdom. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1.—could not prevail against it.] Yet they slew many of the people, and carried away many captives out of Judea, 2 Chron. xxviii. 5. W. Lowth.

2.—Ephraim.] This being the chief of the ten tribes, is often put for the whole of them. Bp. Newton.

——his heart was moved,] The word translated "his" relates to the house of David. W. Lowth.

3.—Shear-jashub] This name, signifying as it is explained in the margin, may allude to the promise made, chap. vi. 13; it imports that God will never wholly cut off His people. W. Lowth.

The captives taken by the king of Israel (see note on ver. 1.) were accordingly very speedily sent home: from policy indeed more than compassion, to make friends among the Jews. Bp. Chandler.

——of the conduit of the upper pool] There were two pools which supplied Jerusalem with water: "the upper pool," mentioned here and chap. xxxvi. 2; and "the lower pool," chap. xxii. 9. W. Lowth.

6. —the son of Tabeal:] Who this person was is no where said in Scripture; he may have been some potent and factious Jew, who had revolted from his master, the king of Judah, and stirred up this war against him. Dean Prideaux.

Some have thought a Syrian, set up by Rezin, whose interest and authority was chief in this matter. Vitringa.

8, 9. For the head of Syria is Damascus, &c.] The purport of this prophecy was to assure Ahaz and the house of David, that the kings of Syria and Israel should remain only the heads of their respective cities, they should not prevail against Jerusalem, and within sixty and five years Israel should be broken so as to be no more a people. This prophecy, respecting the utter ruin of the ten tribes, was completed, not in the first deportation by Shalmaneser, (2 Kings xvii. 6,) when the kingdom was abolished; but when the small remnant were overpowered by the numbers brought by Esar-haddon from Cuthah, &c. 2 Kings xvii. 24, compared with Ezra iv. 2: and Ephraim, who had been broken from being a kingdom before, was then broken from being a people. Abp. Usher, Bp. Newton.

9. —If ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established.] That is, Unless ye believe this prophecy of the destruction of Israel, ye Jews also, as well as the people of Israel, shall not remain established as a kingdom and people; ye also shall be visited with punishment at the same time. This clause is much illustrated by considering the captivity of Manasseh as happening at the same time with this predicted final ruin of Ephraim as a people. The near connexion of the two facts makes the prediction of the one naturally cohere with the prediction of the other. The views of the Prophet might also extend to the destruction of the Jews by the Romans, according to that saying of our Saviour, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish," Luke xiii. 3. Dr. Jubb.

12. But Ahaz said, I will not ask, neither will I tempt the Lord.] The words of Ahaz, though they have a shew of piety, (see Deut. vi. 16; Matt. iv. 7,) proceeded really from despair and unbelief, as appears from the Prophet's answer, ver. 13. W. Lowth. He refused to make trial of the indulgence proffered, not because he believed without it; but because he had no confidence in it, nor value for it. Dean Stanhope. Perhaps the solemn offer (ver. 11.) staggered the doubting king; and even the presumptuous incredulity of Ahaz shrunk back at the thought of requiring from God Himself that extreme test of His veracity. Dr. Postlethwaite. To do what God commands is not to tempt Him; but Ahaz was tampering with the Assyrian for help, and depended on him, and not on the Lord, and for that reason declines doing what he is bid. Bp. Wilson.

13. —Is it a small thing for you to weary men, &c.] Is it a small thing for you to reject and contemn me, that am a man like yourselves; but will ye, with your hypocrisy and disobedience, provoke and abuse my God also, whose message I bear? Are ye not ashamed and afraid, under a pretence of piety, to refuse the gracious offer and command of God that sent me? Bp. Hall.

14. Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; &c.] Upon occasion of the terrible fear of the house of David, and the perverseness of Ahaz, refusing to ask a sign, though invited, it pleased God to afford the greatest and most comfortable sign of His mercy to the house of David in particular, and to all mankind in general: a sign, (not indeed exactly in the sense of that which was offered and refused, ver. 11, an emblem or proof of something to follow,) but, as the word is taken to signify in both Old and New Testaments, (Dean Stanhope,) a wonder, namely, the miraculous birth of Him, in whom all God's mercies were to be summed up. The ancient promise made on the fall of man is here repeated, the Messiah is promised to come in due time of the house of David; and it is here added, that He should be born of a pure virgin, and called "Immanuel," that is, "God with us," God and Man in one person; or, a Divine Being made flesh, and dwelling among mankind. The word translated "virgin" is so rendered by the Seventy, and admits of no other signification. Bp. Chandler, Dr. Lightfoot.

The whole passage, ver. 14—16, seems to consist of two distinct parts; the fourteenth and fifteenth verses appear to contain an express and literal prediction of the birth and character of Christ, "Butter and honey shall He eat," &c. signifying that His infancy should require the same tender care as that of the frail offspring of man. The sixteenth, to hold out a prophetick sign, the completion of which, so soon to take place, should give full assurance to Ahaz, and the house of David, that the preceding prophecy concerning the Messiah should in due time be punctually fulfilled. The Prophet plainly expresses himself in this order; Immanuel shall be born of a virgin, for the confederate kings shall be speedily destroyed. Dr. Postlethwaite.

15. Butter and honey shall he eat, &c.] He shall have a true human body; and shall be sustained with that ordinary nourishment wherewith children are wont to be fed; and shall grow up in experimental knowledge, as well as in stature; and shall thus enable Himself, like us, "to refuse the evil, and choose the good." Bp. Hall. See the note from Fragments to Calmet on Job xx. 17.

—— that he may know to refuse] Rather, till He know. W. Lowth.

16. For before the child shall know &c.] Some suppose the Prophet here to point to Shear-jashub, whom he is directed, ver. 3, to take with him; some think "the child" refers to Maher-shalal-hash-baz, (chap. viii. 3;) others to any child of that age. To express the shortness of the time, in which destruction should come upon the two kings, is Isaiah's object here; and, as he has in the preceding verses been mentioning Immanuel, and has Him in a manner before his eyes, he may be understood to say, "In so short a time as it shall take Him to reach years of distinguishing, shall the kings be overthrown." Vitringa.

18. — the Lord shall hiss for the fly &c.] See note from Bp. Lowth, chap. v. 26. Armies are often compared to flies, bees, and other insects, (Deut. i. 44; Judg. vi. 5; Ps. cxviii. 12; Joel ii. 25;) both for their number, and the destruction they make. The Prophet joins here Egypt and Assyria, the two great oppressors of God's people. W. Lowth. Sennacherib, Esar-haddon, Pharaoh-necho, and Nebuchadnezzar, one after another, desolated Judea. Bp. Lowth. As the conquest of Egypt by Sennacherib, foretold ch. xx, took place before his siege of Jerusalem, a great many Egyptians might be his auxiliaries. Abp. Usher.

19. And they shall come, and shall rest &c.] The Prophet pursues the same metaphor, and represents the foreign army as so many flies that lie in shoals in lower grounds, and as bees whose custom is to get into rocks; see Deut. xxxii. 13; Ps. lxxxi. 16; implying that no place should be free from the enemy. W. Lowth.

20. — shall — shave with a rasor that is hired,] The Assyrian is called a "hired rasor," because God often rewards those whom He makes instruments of His vengeance upon sinners, which is expressed by giving them their "wages," Ezek. xxix. 18—20; see also 2 Kings x. 30. And Ahaz had hired the king of Assyria to assist him, 2 Kings xvi. 7, 8; 2 Chron. xxviii. 21. W. Lowth.

—— by them beyond the river,] By way of eminence, the Euphrates. See chap. xxvii. 12; Jer. ii. 18. W. Lowth.

—— the head, and the hair of the feet: and it shall also consume the beard.] The hairs of the head are those of the highest order in the state; those of the feet, or lower parts, are the common people; the beard, the king, the high priest, the very supreme in dignity and majesty. The Eastern people have always held the beard in the highest veneration, and have been extremely jealous of its honour; to pluck a man's beard is an instance of the greatest indignity that can be offered. See 2 Sam. x. 4, 5. Modern travellers give instances to the same purpose. Bp. Lowth.

21. — a man shall nourish a young cow, and two sheep: &c.] The remainder of the chapter is an elegant and expressive description of a country depopulated, and left to run wild; the vineyards and cornfields, before well cultivated, now overrun with briers and thorns; much grass, so that the few cattle that are left have their full range and abundant pasture; so as to yield milk in plenty to the scanty family of the owner; the thinly scattered people living, not on corn, wine, oil, the produce of cultivation, but on milk and honey, the gifts of nature; and the whole land given up to the wild beasts; so that the miserable inhabitants are forced to go out armed with bows and arrows, either to defend themselves against the wild beasts, or to supply themselves with necessary food by hunting. Bp. Lowth.

23. — a thousand silverlings,] Or shekels, as the word is translated in Jer. xxxii. 9, and elsewhere.

25. — on all hills that shall be digged &c.] The sense will run better if we translate here, "All the hills that are (or used to be) digged with a mattock, that the fear of briers and thorns may not come thither;" (that is, to clear them from briers and thorns;) —"shall be for the sending forth of oxen," &c. Ground untilled naturally turns to pasture; therefore these and similar descriptions signify great desolation. Compare chap. xvii. 2; xxvii. 10; xxxii. 14. W. Lowth.

—— the mattock,] Hasselquist observes, that the inhabitants of Nazareth in Galilee "had no spades, but a kind of hoe or ground-ax." And Niebuhr says, that "instead of a spade the Arabs of Yemen make use of an iron mattock to cultivate their gardens and the lands in the mountains, which are too narrow to admit the plough." Parkhurst.

Chap. VIII. ver. 1. — Take thee a great roll,] The Eastern people roll their papers, and do not fold them, because their paper is apt to fret. Sir J. Chardin. The Egyptian papyrus was formerly much used; the brittle nature of it made it proper to roll what they wrote; and the practice may have been continued even with materials, which might safely have been treated in another manner. Harmer. It is directed to be a great roll, probably that the writing of the prophecy might be in large characters, obvious to all; and so most interpreters have understood the term, "a man's pen," to imply such characters as are in ordinary use. Vitringa.

—— and write &c.] The Prophet is commanded to record the prophecy of the destruction of Damascus and Samaria by the Assyrians; the subject and sum of which is here expressed with great brevity in four words, (explained in the margin,) which are afterwards applied as the name of the Prophet's son, who was made a sign of the speedy completion of it. And, that it might be done with the greater solemnity, and to preclude all doubt of the real delivery of the prophecy before the event, he calls witnesses to attest the recording of it, ver. 2. Bp. Lowth.

3. — the prophetess;] The wife of Isaiah is styled a prophetess, and the Rabbies maintain that she had the gift of prophecy. Dr. Gray.

4. — the riches of Damascus &c.] The completion of what is prophesied here, and above, chap. vii. 16, is recorded, 2 Kings xv. 29, 30; xvi. 9. W. Lowth.

6. — this people &c.] Though some refer this to Judah, it may be better understood of Israel. The gentle waters of Siloah, or Shiloah, as in the text, a small fountain and brook just without Jerusalem, which supplied a pool within the city, for the use of the inhabitants, is an apt emblem of the state of the kingdom and house of David, much reduced in its apparent strength, yet supported by the blessing of God; and is finely contrasted with the waters of the Euphrates, great, rapid, and impetuous; the image of the vast and mighty empire, which God threatens to bring down upon all the apostates of both kingdoms; to overwhelm Israel, and to bring Judah into such imminent danger, as is represented (ver. 8.) by that of a man who can but just keep his head above water. The Chaldee renders "reaching to the neck," by "reaching to Jerusalem." Bp. Lowth.

8. — of thy land, O Immanuel.] That is, even over that holy land, which is consecrated to Thy name, O thou Saviour of Thy Church, God and Man. Bp. Hall. A nobler difference could not have been put between Israel and Judah, than at the time that final and speedy ruin is denounced against the one, to give the other a solemn assurance of the birth of Immanuel. Dean Stanhope.

9. Associate yourselves, O ye people, — give ear, all ye of far countries:] The Prophet insults over the confederacy of Israel and Syria against Judah: he addresses perhaps all the enemies of God's people, assuring them that their attempts shall be fruitless, on account of the defence of the promised Immanuel, to whom he alludes, by using His name to express the signification of it, (ver. 10,) "for God is with us:" the most distant times and countries may be fitly said to be concerned in the admonitions here given; the import of which is, that the kingdom of the Messiah will prosper, though all nations combine against it. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

11. For the Lord spake thus to me with a strong hand,] The spirit of prophecy is expressed by the hand of the Lord being upon the Prophet; 2 Kings iii. 15; Ezek. iii. 14; viii. 1. W. Lowth.

—— that I should not walk in the way of this people, &c.] The Prophet is commanded to arm those that heard him against the prevalent fears of the confederacy of Syria and Israel, and exhorts them not to join in the popular cry in that matter, which was full of despondency and distrust of God. The twelfth verse should rather be rendered, "Say ye not, A confederacy, of or concerning all them of whom this people," &c. Vitringa.

14. And he shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling &c.] God and His promises, which should be men's refuge and security, become the occasion of mischief and hurt to unbelievers. W. Lowth.

It is the Lord of hosts who is meant here: but the prophecy is interpreted of Christ by the concurrent testimony of St. Peter and St. Paul: (see the margin.) Christ therefore is one with the Lord of hosts. Dean Stanhope, Bp. Wilson.

—— to both the houses of Israel,] This expression is sufficient to shew, that the Prophet enlarges his views beyond Rezin and Pekah's association, the immediate object of this prophecy; for then Judah and Israel were in different interests, but this verse speaks of them as involved in the same sin and punishment. W. Lowth.

16. Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples.] The Prophets sometimes declare concerning their prophetical discourses and actions, that they were dark and as yet unintelligible, and should be more clearly understood about the latter times, in which they were to find their completion; chap. xxix. 11; Dan. xii. 4. It would be part of the Great Prophet's office to explain the sense of the Scriptures, and to remove the obscurity that was to remain on many prophecies till His coming. Bp. Chandler.

God's faithful servants however, who depended on His word, would lay them up carefully in their memories: of this number Isaiah professes himself to be, ver. 17. W. Lowth, Dr. Wells.

18. Behold, I and the children &c.] See the Introduction.

Isaiah speaks here in the person of Christ as well as his own, as appears from the passage referred to in the margin. Dr. Wells.

19. — that peep, and that mutter: &c.] To "peep" signifies to cry as young birds; (Dr. Johnson;) see chap. x. 14; to chirp or whisper. Those who pretended to familiar spirits spoke inwardly and imperfectly, as if their voice proceeded out of the caverns of the earth. W. Lowth. See note on chap. xlv. 19.

—— for the living to the dead?] That is, Should they seek for the living to the dead? By this may be meant idols; (see Ps. cxv. 5—8;) opposed (1 Thess. i. 9.) to the living God; or allusion may be made to the heathen practice of deifying their heroes, inquiring after oracles, &c.; see chap. lxv. 4. W. Lowth.

20. To the law and to the testimony: &c.] If we would really do good, such as God Himself will accept of, we must not look to our roving fancies, nor to our carnal reason, but to the precepts of God Himself. This is the rule to square our actions by; this the test, whatever is suggested to us, from without or from within, to try the spirits whether they be of God or not; If any thing exalt itself against the obedience of this rule, it is no sweet impulse of the Holy Spirit of God, but a strong delusion of the lying spirit of Satan. Bps. Beveridge and Sanderson.

Chap. IX. ver. 1. Nevertheless the dimness shall not be such as was in her vexation, &c.] Yet, though this calamity shall be exceeding great, it shall not be utterly so extreme and disconsolate, as that former which the land of Israel shall endure, when Tiglath-pileser shall have miserably afflicted it, 2 Kings xv. 29; and when it shall have been conquered and wasted by Shalmaneser. Bp. Hall.

2. The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light:] There is a comfortable assurance of delivery in this miserable captivity: for behold, the Messiah shall certainly come, and by His doctrine and Spirit shall enlighten those that sit in darkness and the shadow of death, beginning His blessed Gospel in those utmost skirts of Galilee. Bp. Hall. The event is true and evident: as these lands had the first share in the calamity, from Assyrian invasion, 2 Kings xv. 29; so had they a prerogative in enjoying the presence of the Messiah. Jos. Mede. The Prophet is particular in naming Zebulun, to which tribe Nazareth belonged; and Naphtali, in which was Capernaum, situate on the sea of Tiberias; both which places were beyond Jordan. Bp. Kidder.

3. Thou hast multiplied the nation,] Namely, the true Israel; which God shall enlarge by adding daily to the Church such as believe the Gospel. Dr. Wells.

—— and not increased the joy:] The marginal reading, "Thou hast increased the joy to him, or to it," seems most agreeable to the context: if we keep the reading of the text, it may be translated by way of interrogation, "Wilt thou not increase the joy?" then follows the answer, "they joy before thee," &c. This various reading originates in the Hebrew, where the particle signifying not is very like, and often mistaken for, the word signifying to him. W. Lowth.

—— joy in harvest, — when they divide the spoil.] These expressions signify great rejoicing; see chap. xvi. 10; 1 Sam. xxx. 16. It is said to be before God, which denotes a religious joy, Deut. xii. 12. W. Lowth.

4. — the staff of his shoulder,] A staff laid across the shoulder, upon the ends of which slaves carried burdens. Parkhurst.

5. — but this shall be with burning and fuel of fire.] The word "this" is not in the original. The sense seems to be, that all instruments of warfare should be destroyed and become fuel for fire, as in Ps. xlvi. 9; where the image is employed to express complete victory and a perfect establishment of peace. See also Ezek. xxxix. 8—10. Bp. Lowth.

6. For unto us a child is born, &c.] The verse may be thus paraphrased: It is not for God's people to rest in the temporal deliverance from their captivity, but to erect their thoughts unto higher hopes, even the happy assurances of salvation by the true Messiah, who is to come into the world: For unto us that Child is born, and unto us that Son of God is given, who shall take upon His shoulder the perpetual government of His Church. Bp. Hall.

——the government shall be upon his shoulder:] That is, the ensign of government; the sceptre, the sword, the key, or the like, borne upon, or hung from, the shoulder. See chap. xxii. 22. Bp. Lowth.

——his name shall be called] That is, He shall be; for all this could not be the proper name of any one; the Messiah will be all this: it does not infer that He shall be commonly known by such title. Bp. Kidder. 'Tis the prophetick method, by the imposition as it were of a name, to declare the quality. Jos. Mede. Thus (chap. i. 26,) it was prophesied that Jerusalem should be "called the city of righteousness." Why? because, as was promised in the words foregoing, "God would restore her judges as at the first," &c.; her manners should answer that title. See too, Luke i. 32, 35; it might be proved by a multitude of instances. W. Lowth, Dean Stanhope.

——Wonderful,] In His birth; in His preservation from Herod and His other enemies; in the favour of God; in His mighty works; in His resurrection, His ascension, and the sending down of His Spirit upon His Apostles, enabling them also to work miracles, as He had done. Reading.

——Counseller,] As knowing the mind of the Lord. Bp. Chandler. Not unlikely called so, saith Dr. Knight, from His being one of that great council when God said, "Let us make man in our image." Bp. Wilson. See St. Chrysostom's observations at Gen. i. 26.

——The mighty God,] The same title which is given to the One Supreme God of Israel, chap. x. 21. Dr. Waterland. This is the doctrine which the Evangelists, Apostles, and ministers of Christ constantly taught of Him, that He was God from all eternity. Reading.

——The everlasting Father,] Or, "Father of eternity," or "of that which is everlasting," a title very applicable to the Messiah, whether we consider Him as "the Author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him," Heb. v. 9, or as the Founder of the new age, or world to come, the Head and Introducer of a dispensation which is to last for ever: agreeably to this last notion, the Septuagint, Vulgate, and others render, "Father of the age to come." Vitringa. The phrase might also be rendered, "the Father of eternity," that is, the Owner of it, the Everlasting; according to the Eastern custom of calling the possessor of any quality the father of it. Bp. Stock.

——The Prince of Peace.] This name does in an eminent manner belong to Christ, inasmuch as He is the sole Mediator between God and man: the end of His coming was not to procure for His followers a visible earthly peace; but peace with Heaven, the peace of God. Wogan. The peace and tranquillity of Christ's government is however set forth by the Prophets in very pompous and magnificent descriptions, as here follows, "of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end;" and as this is partly fulfilled in the inward joy and consolation, which is dispensed at present by the secret influences of the Holy Ghost, and in the conversion of many nations, that had persecuted and opposed it, this may be sufficient to confirm our hopes that it shall hereafter be more perfectly accomplished, and nothing left to disturb the peace and quietness of His reign. Dr. Berriman. Although Christ be indeed "exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour," though He have "all power in heaven and in earth," already vested in the human nature united to His own Divine person, and be at present "Lord of all," and of His Church in a more peculiar manner; yet is not that power so visibly and fully exerted as it shall one day be; nor all those glorious effects as yet accomplished, which the Prophets foretell, when describing the victorious and peaceful, the unlimited and everlasting, dominion of the Messiah. He actually reigns in the hearts of men even now, and by His grace subdues the enemies of our souls; but this empire is not so absolute as it shall be, when every enemy shall have been utterly destroyed. What period is fixed for the perfect and ultimate accomplishment of these things, as it does not seem possible for us to determine, so neither is it material too curiously to inquire. Dean Stanhope.

7. —upon the throne of David,] The Messiah is said to sit upon the throne of David, because all the promises concerning the perpetuity of his family and kingdom did chiefly relate to Christ, and were fulfilled in Him. W. Lowth. David was the shepherd of the natural Israel: Christ is the shepherd of the true Israel, enlarged by the reception of the Gentiles into the fold.

8. The Lord sent a word into Jacob,] Here begins, and ends with chap. x. 4, a distinct prophecy, addressed exclusively to the kingdom of Israel; divided into four parts, each the particular punishment of some grievous offence: after each is repeated a general denunciation of a further reserve of Divine wrath, used before by the Prophet, on a like occasion, (see the margin,) and making, as we call it, the burden of the song. Bp. Lowth.

10. The bricks are fallen down, but we will build with hewn stones: &c.] The Eastern bricks are only clay well moistened with water, mixed with straw, and dried in the sun. Sir J. Chardin. These bricks are properly opposed to hewn stone, so greatly superiour in beauty and durableness: the sycomores, timber of little worth, are with equal propriety opposed to the cedars; "with which," as Dr. Shaw remarks on this passage, "they can stand in no competition at all for beauty and ornament." We meet with the same opposition of cedars to sycomores, 1 Kings x. 27. By this figurative speech, the people of Israel boast that they easily shall be able to repair their present losses, (sustained perhaps by the first Assyrian invasion by Tiglath-pileser,) and to bring their affairs to a more flourishing state than ever. Bp. Lowth.

11. —adversaries of Rezin against him,] When the king of Assyria had subdued the Syrians, he made them join him in invading Israel. W. Lowth.

20. — they shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm:] This, and what goes before, signify that they should plunder and devour those of their own country and blood: compare chap. xlix. 26; Deut. xxviii. 53; 2 Kings vi. 28. Jeremiah in a similar passage, chap. xix. 9, has, "Every one shall eat the flesh of his friend." W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

Chap. X. ver. 3. — in the desolation which shall come from far?] From Assyria. The Assyrians were a distant people compared with the Philistines, Syrians, &c. with whom Israel was principally concerned. Vitringa. But see W. Lowth's note on chap. v. 26.

4. Without me they shall bow down under &c.] That is, Without my aid they shall be taken captive even by the captives, and subdued by the vanquished. Bp. Lowth. See the note on chap. ix. 11; others render simply, "among the prisoners, &c."

5. O Assyrian, the rod of mine anger,] Come hither then, O thou Assyrian, come and execute My just judgment upon My people; for thou art the rod of Mine anger; and the weapons, which are in thy hand, whereby thou fightest against Judah, are wielded by Mine indignation. *Bp. Here begins a denunciation of the judgments of God against the Assyrians in general, and against Sennacherib in particular. See ver. 12. Bp. Newton.

7. Howbeit he meaneth not so,] The Assyrian's design was purely to extend his conquests, and gratify his own ambition; but God, who bringeth good out of evil, makes the wickedness of some nations the means of correcting that of others; and the worst of men, in the worst of their crimes, the undesigning instruments of His righteous purposes. W. Lowth, Abp. Secker.

What a fine instance does the Assyrian afford us of the manner, in which Providence, using the instrumentality of man's free choice foreseen, causes all the schemes of worldly politicians to work together for the accomplishment of His designs, while they are only attending to their own interests! Bp. Horne.

Who can sufficiently admire the wisdom of Almighty God, who so ordered events, that the various instruments of Satan, who combined to bring about the death of our Blessed Saviour, did in fact each contribute to finish the great work of man's redemption, which some of them knew not of, others opposed, and none in the least intended! Dean Stanhope.

9. Is not Calno as Carchemish? &c.] Have not I been equally successful against all these places? "Calno" lay upon the Euphrates; as did "Charchemish," 2 Chron. xxxv. 20. Lowth.* That Hamath and Arpad were cities of Syria, should appear from Jer. xlix. 23. Vitringa.

Hamath as Arpad? is not Samaria as Damascus?

10 As my hand hath found the kingdoms of the idols, and whose graven images did excel them of Jerusalem and of Samaria;

11 Shall I not, as I have done unto Samaria and her idols, so do to Jerusalem and her idols?

12 Wherefore it shall come to pass, that when the Lord hath performed his whole work [c] upon mount Zion and on Jerusalem, I will † punish the fruit † of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks.

13 For he saith, By the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom; for I am prudent: and I have removed the bounds of the people, and have robbed their treasures, and I have put down the inhabitants ‖ like a valiant man:

14 And my hand hath found as a nest the riches of the people: and as one gathereth eggs that are left, have I gathered all the earth; and there was none that moved the wing, or opened the mouth, or peeped.

16 Therefore shall the Lord, the Lord of hosts, send among his fat ones leanness; and under his glory he shall kindle a burning like the burning of a fire.

17 And the light of Israel shall be for a fire, and his Holy One for a flame: and it shall burn and devour his thorns and his briers in one day;

18 And shall consume the glory of his forest, and of his fruitful field, † both soul and body: and they shall be as when a standardbearer fainteth.

19 And the rest of the trees of his forest shall be † few, that a child may write them.

20 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that the remnant of Israel, and such as are escaped of the house of Jacob, shall no more again stay upon him that smote them; but shall stay upon the LORD, the Holy One of Israel, in truth.

21 The remnant shall return, even the remnant of Jacob, unto the mighty God.

22 [d] For though thy people Israel be as the sand of the sea, yet a remnant † of them shall return: [e] the consumption decreed shall overflow ‖ with righteousness.

Hamath was the capital of a part of Syria, bearing the same name; it was situate on the northern frontier of the land of Israel; whence we find frequent mention of "the entrance of Hamath," Numb. xxxiv. 8, &c. Arpad is with good reason held to be the island of Aradus, in the Mediterranean sea, which is not far from the shore, and nearly opposite to Hamath. Dr. Wells, Dr. Blayney. See the note on 2 Sam. viii. 9.

12. — when the Lord hath performed his whole work] When the wicked, whom God makes instrumental in carrying on His designs, have served the purposes of Divine providence, they are justly punished, for their pride and ambition, their cruelty and tyranny to their neighbours: the wickedness of those acts being altogether their own; and the good ends served being beside the intention of the agents, ver. 7, and ascribable only to God. W. Lowth, Bp. Newton. See notes on ver. 7. of this chapter, and on chap. xlvii. 6.

14. — opened the mouth, or peeped.] See note on chap. viii. 19.

15. Shall the ax boast itself &c.] Is not the Assyrian as My ax to hew down Judah, My saw to divide it, My rod to scourge it, My staff to beat it? and shall this ax, this saw, this rod, this staff magnify itself against the hand that useth and wieldeth it? as if the instrument could do ought without or against the arm that moves it. Bp. Hall.

—— as if it were no wood.] Rather render, (as the margin does in part,) "against that which is not wood;" or, to keep still closer to the expression of the original, "against the no-wood." The Hebrews have a peculiar way of thus joining the negative particle to a noun, to signify in a strong manner a total negation of the thing expressed by the noun. So here it means Him who is far from being an inert piece of wood; is an animated and active being; not an instrument, but an agent. Other instances of this form occur at chap. xxxi. 8; lv. 2. See also Job xxvi. 2, 3; Amos vi. 13. Bp. Lowth.

—— shall no more again stay upon him that smote them;] As Ahaz did upon the king of Assyria, (2 Kings xvi. 7, compared with 2 Chron. xxviii. 20,) who afterward proved the worst enemy the Jews had. W. Lowth. To purchase his powerful ally's forbearance, as he had before bought his assistance, Ahaz was forced to strip himself and his people of all the wealth he could possibly raise. Bp. Lowth.

23. — the Lord God of hosts shall make a consumption, even determined, &c.] Such a consumption, determined in the counsels of God, with the preservation of a small remnant, will apply to several periods of the history of the people of God: to the subversion of the kingdom of Israel, with the destruction of a great number of Judah; (see note on chap. viii. 6;) to the Babylonish captivity; to the oppression of Antiochus Epiphanes: but the prophecy received then its ultimate completion, and its fullest intent was then answered, when the bulk of the Jewish nation was rejected, after their rejection of their true Messiah, and given up to the just judgment of God, exhibited in the desolation which the Romans brought upon them; with the preservation of the chosen and holy few, who had embraced the Gospel of Christ. Vitringa.

24, 26. — after the manner of Egypt.] As Sennacherib invested Jerusalem upon his return from his Egyptian expedition, and imitated Pharaoh and the Egyptians in threatening the people of God, so does God promise here to act over again the part He had formerly taken, and to overthrow Sennacherib in as signal a manner as He had done Pharaoh and his host in the Red sea. So both the attack and the deliverance are to be "in the way," or, "after the manner, of Egypt." Bp. Lowth.

The twenty-sixth verse may be thus paraphrased: The Assyrian is My rod to thee; but I will have a scourge for him, that shall plague him: as the Midianites were destroyed by Gideon at the rock of Oreb; (see Judg. vii. 25;) and as I plagued the Egyptians, whom I overthrew and destroyed at the Red sea. Bp. Hall.

27. — because of the anointing.] For the sake of God's chosen people, who are called "His anointed," Ps. cv. 15, and especially for the sake of Christ, or the Anointed emphatically so called, who was to descend from the tribe of Judah. Dr. Wells, W. Lowth. See note on chap. xlv. 1.

28. He is come to Aiath, &c.] Here follows a description of the march of Sennacherib's army, and of the terrour and confusion spreading through the several places in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem, from Ai northward to Nob westward of it; expressed with great brevity, but finely diversified. Bp. Lowth.

32. As yet shall he remain at Nob] Hence probably he might have a prospect of mount Zion; and thus literally shake his hand against it; and stand in a threatening posture, as just ready to assault it. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth.

Chap. XI. The Prophet had described, in the last chapter, the destruction of the Assyrian army under the image of a mighty forest, consisting of flourishing trees growing thick together, and of a great height; of Lebanon itself, crowned with lofty cedars, but cut down, and laid level with the ground, by the ax, wielded by the hand of some powerful and illustrious agent: in opposition to this image he represents the great Person, who makes the subject of this chapter, as a slender twig, shooting out from the trunk of an old tree cut down, lopped to the very root, and decayed; which tender plant, so weak in appearance, should nevertheless become fruitful and prosper. This contrast shews a connexion between this and the foregoing chapter. Here we have a remarkable instance of that method so common with the Prophets, and particularly with Isaiah, of taking occasion, from the mention of some great temporal deliverance, to launch out into the display of the spiritual deliverance of God's people by the Messiah. Thus in the latter part of Isaiah's prophecies, the subject of the great redemption, and of the glories of Messiah's kingdom, arises out of the restoration of Judah by the deliverance from the captivity of Babylon, and is all along connected and intermixed with it. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. — of Jesse,] By mentioning Jesse, who was not a king, but a private person, Isaiah seems to hint at the obscure and weak condition in which Christ should appear; His birth too was fixed to be, not at Zion, which was the place and seat of government in Judah, but at Bethlehem, a town where the family of David lived while they were private persons. Dean Allix.

2. And the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him,] That is, as man He shall be endued with the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, without measure, and at all times. Dr. Wells. The characters here given to the Spirit which was to rest on the Messiah, are the same which we find in the Old Testament applied to the Prophets. Dean Allix. He being the Great Prophet, foretold Deut. xviii. 15, is described as more plentifully endued with these gifts than any other ever was, chap. xlii. 1; lxi. 1; Ps. xlv. 7; John iii. 34; Acts x. 38. W. Lowth.

3. — of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord:] In things pertaining unto holiness, He shall lay hold of all opportunities of promoting true piety, and advancing God's honour: this exactly answers Christ's character of Himself, John iv. 34. W. Lowth.

4. —reprove with equity for the meek of the earth:] To afford protection to the poor and humble, is the constant character of Christ's kingdom; (chap. xxix. 19; lxi. 1; Ps. lxxii. 2, 12;) to them the blessings of the Gospel are peculiarly promised, Matt. v. 3; James ii. 5. W. Lowth.

——he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth,] The "earth" here signifies the ungodly, called by St. John, chap. vii. 7; xvii. 9, the "world;" who make the greatest part of it, and have the greatest share in it: the "rod of His mouth" signifies the "word of God," containing threats and judgments against sinners, which is said to be "sharper than any two-edged sword," Heb. iv. 12; and as such is described, Rev. i. 16, as proceeding "out of the mouth of Christ." St. Paul, in the passage given in the margin, applies this particularly to the destruction of Antichrist. See also Rev. xix. 21. W. Lowth.

5. —righteousness shall be the girdle &c.] The meaning is, that a zeal for justice and truth shall make Him active and strong in executing the great work which He shall undertake. Bp. Lowth. See note on chap. v. 27.

6—8. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, &c.] The expressions here used are plainly designed to shew, in a figurative way, that there should be as great a change wrought upon the world, as there would be, if the natures of the creatures here mentioned were so changed, as the figures represent them. Dr. T. Burnett.

Men's former antipathies shall cease: and they who had used to be the most fierce and ravenous shall yield to the gentle discipline of Christ, and put on the humble spirit of His followers. The persecutions of the heathen world were broken off, when the princes of the earth gave in their names to Christ, and laid those sceptres at His feet, which had been formerly held out with rage and virulence against Him: and if some parts of the Church have since been overrun by barbarous crews of Saracens and other infidels, and if the world be not yet brought to the peaceable temper here foretold, or the Church yet at unity with itself, we must remember that divisions and the temporary success of Christ's enemies have been foretold, as well as His final conquest and complete tranquillity, and, being confirmed by what we see accomplished, look the more stedfastly to the accomplishment of those prophecies which are still to be fulfilled. Dr. Berriman.

Profane writers describe the renewal of the golden age, as it is called, much in the same metaphorical language as is here used by the Prophet: wild beasts grow tame, serpents and poisonous herbs become harmless; all is peace and harmony, plenty and happiness: but the most elegant of the ancient poets fall very short of that beauty, and elegance, and variety of imagery, with which Isaiah has set forth the same ideas. Here the wolf and the leopard not only forbear to destroy the lamb and the kid, but even take their abode and lie down together with them. The calf, and the young lion, and the fatling, not only come together, but are led quietly in the same band, and that by a little child. The heifer and the she-bear not only feed together, but even lodge their young ones, for whom they used to be most jealously fearful, in the same place. All the serpent kind is so perfectly harmless, that the sucking infant, and the newly weaned child, puts his hand on the basilisk's den, and plays upon the hole of the aspick. The lion not only abstains from preying on the weaker animals, but becomes tame and domestick, and feeds on straw like the ox. These are all beautiful circumstances, not one of which has been touched upon by the ancient poets. Bp. Lowth.

10. —a root of Jesse,] Christ is here called the "Root" of Jesse, as being the real ground or foundation of all the favours bestowed upon the family, the ultimate end and aim to which they were referred: the "Branch growing out of the root," ver. 1, because actually descended from that royal line: which may explain the two-fold character He gives of Himself, Rev. xxii. 16. Dr. Berriman.

——which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek:] This alludes to the Jewish custom of repairing to the temple at festivals; see Deut. xii. 5, and the note on chap. ii. 3. W. Lowth. It may be remarked here, that when the descent of the Messiah was limited to the tribe of Judah, it was still foretold that to Him should the "gathering of the people (or nations) be," Gen. xlix. 10; and now, where it is yet more precisely limited to the house of David, His kingdom is represented to be universal. Dr. Berriman.

——his rest shall be glorious.] This is most commonly understood of His Church, where, as between the cherubim heretofore, God has His resting-place. Bp. Wilson.

What remains of this chapter foretells those glorious times of the Church, which shall be ushered in by the restoration of the Jewish nation; when they shall embrace the Gospel, and return from the several dispersions where they are scattered. This remarkable scene of Providence is plainly foretold by most of the Prophets of the Old Testament, and by St. Paul, Rom. xi. 25, 26; 2 Cor. iii. 16. W. Lowth.

11. —the Lord shall set his hand again the second time &c.] These words imply, that this shall be as great a deliverance as that out of Egypt: compare Ps. lxviii. 22; Mic. vii. 15. W. Lowth.

——from Pathros, &c.] Pathros is a country in Egypt, Jer. xliv. 1; Ezek. xxix. 14. Elam, Persia; Shinar, Babylon, Gen. xi. 2. W. Lowth.

——islands of the sea.] By this expression are to be understood, in the Scripture style, not only islanders properly so called, but all who dwelt on the seacoast, primarily, perhaps, those on the shores of the Mediterranean; all distant nations, which may best appear from chap. xlix. 1; Jer. xxxi. 10; all to the west of Canaan. These last were the isles of the Gentiles, to be peopled by the posterity of Japhet, Gen. x. 5; under this title of islands they are mentioned in all passages, where the extension of the Gospel to the Gentiles is prophesied of, with a view, no doubt, to the flourishing condition of Christianity in aftertimes in Europe. Vitringa.

The fact is notorious, that the Gospel, from the beginning to the present times, hath made the greatest progress in Europe, and in those parts of Asia which were first peopled by the posterity of Japhet. Among the uncivilized descendants of Ham, and the degenerate sons of Shem, it hath not been so generally spread, or hath not so deeply taken root. Bp. Horsley.

13. — the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off:] The Hebrew might be rendered, the "enmity" of Judah; and what follows, "Judah shall not vex Ephraim," seems to require that it should. Abp. Secker.

14. But they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines &c.] The people mentioned in this verse were all of them borderers upon the territory of the Jews, and took all occasions of shewing their spite and ill-will against them: on which account, in the prophetick dialect they are often used in a general sense for the enemies of God's truth and people. Compare chap. xxv. 10; xxxiv. 5, 6; Joel iii. 19; Amos ix. 12. W. Lowth.

It is the style and genius of the prophetical books, to set whole countries, and kingdoms, and societies of men, to signify, not those places, and persons, and powers only, but others also who should be in after ages like them, in the same sins and circumstances. Dean Stanhope.

15. — the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea;] The word "tongue," when applied to the sea, signifies a bay, and is so translated, Josh. xv. 2, and xviii. 19. W. Lowth. Most interpreters apply the expression here to that bay of the Red sea, over which the Israelites passed. Vitringa.

Perhaps "the tongue of the Egyptian sea" may mean that part of the land of Egypt which was enclosed among the mouths of the Nile; the Nile being understood to be the Egyptian sea. This has at times been described under the semblance of a pear, and an heart, and also a tongue; all these objects having some analogy in their shape. Bryant.

—— with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, &c.] This plainly alludes to the passage of the Red sea, and refers to the particular circumstance mentioned Exod. xiv. 21. Bp. Lowth. Whether we understand the river here of the Nile, famous for its seven mouths, or the Euphrates, (see note on chap. vii. 20,) and suppose allusion made to Cyrus draining that river when he took Babylon, chap. xliv. 27; Jer. l. 38; the sense is the same, and imports the removing of all impediments that might hinder the return of God's people. See Rev. xvi. 12. W. Lowth.

Chap. XII. This chapter is an hymn of praise, proper to be used in the triumphant state of the Church, described in the foregoing chapter. Of the same use are chapters xxv, xxvi, and several of the Psalms. W. Lowth.

Ver. 3. Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation.] That is, from God's inexhaustible bounty, which is the fountain of all blessings in Jesus Christ: see Psal. xxxvi. 9; Jer. ii. 13. Bp. Wilson, W. Lowth.

On the last day of the feast of tabernacles, the Jews fetched water in a golden pitcher from the fountain of Siloah; brought it through the watergate into the temple, and poured it, mixed with wine, on the sacrifice as it lay upon the altar, with great rejoicing. This custom is not ordained in the law of Moses; and seems to have been taken up in allusion to this passage of Isaiah. Our Saviour applied the ceremony, and the intention of it, to Himself, and to the effusion of the Holy Ghost, promised, and to be given, by Him, John vii. 37, 39. Bp. Lowth.

Chap. XIII. This chapter and the next (striking off a few of the last verses of it, which belong to a different subject) contain one entire prophecy, foretelling the destruction of Babylon by the Medes and Persians; delivered probably in the reign of Ahaz, about 200 years before the completion of it. The captivity itself of the Jews at Babylon, (which the Prophet does not expressly foretell, but supposes, in the spirit of prophecy, as what was actually effected) did not fully take place till about 130 years after the delivery of this prophecy; and the Medes, who are expressly mentioned, ver. 17. of this chapter, as principal agents in the overthrow of the Babylonian monarchy, by which the Jews were released from that captivity, were at this time an inconsiderable people, having been in a state of anarchy ever since the fall of the great Assyrian empire, of which they had made a part; and did not become a kingdom till about the seventeenth year of Hezekiah. Bp. Lowth.

The former part of this prophecy is one of the most beautiful examples that can be given of elegance of composition, variety of imagery, and sublimity of sentiment and diction, in the prophetick style: and the latter part consists of an ode of singular excellence. Bp. Lowth. Our margin sets the date of this prophecy a little later than the reign of Ahaz, namely, about the fifteenth year of Hezekiah.

Ver. 1. The burden of Babylon,] A prophecy threatening ruin, or some severe punishment. Bp. Wilson.

The word in the original is of more general import and signification: it sometimes signifies a prophecy of good as well as evil. Bps. Newton and Chandler.

2, 3. Lift ye up a banner &c.] The prophecy opens with the command of God to gather the forces which He had destined to His service against Babylon: upon which the Prophet immediately hears the tumultuous noise of the different nations crowding together to the standard; he sees them advancing prepared to execute the Divine wrath, ver. 4, 5; and proceeds to describe the dreadful consequences of this visitation, and the consternation which will seize those that are objects of it. Bp. Lowth.

2. —into the gates of the nobles.] To enlist under their several commanders. W. Lowth.

3. I have commanded my sanctified ones,] This signifies those whom God had set apart for His purpose. So He calls Cyrus His anointed, chap. xlv. 1, and Nebuchadnezzar His servant, Jer. xxv. 9. W. Lowth.

8. —their faces shall be as flames.] Black and ghastly, like smoke and flames. See Joel ii. 6; Nahum ii. 10. Bp. Wilson, W. Lowth.

10. For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light:] When the Hebrew poets represent the destruction and overthrow of kingdoms, the stars are obscured, the moon withdraws her light, the sun shines no more; the earth quakes, the heavens tremble; and all things seem tending to their original chaos. See Joel ii. 10; iii. 15, 16; Amos viii. 9; Matt. xxiv. 29. Bp. Lowth.

All these high expressions are the peculiar and even natural language of the Eastern nations; no more, even at this day, would be understood to be meant by them, than that Babylon should be utterly destroyed, the government ruined, and the people severely treated. Bp. Wilson.

11. And I will punish the world] The Prophet suddenly transfers the speech from himself to God, and sets forth, under a variety of the most striking images, the dreadful destruction of the inhabitants of Babylon which will follow, ver. 11—16; and the everlasting desolation, to which that great city is doomed, ver. 17—22. See chap. xxi. 10, and notes there. "The world" here signifies the Babylonish empire, as it does the Roman empire, or Judea, in Luke ii. 1; Acts xi. 28. Bp. Lowth.

12. I will make a man more precious than fine gold;] Such shall be the destruction of men fit to bear arms: see the like calamity described, chap. iv. 1. Or the words may import, that the Medes should spare no man's life, though he could purchase it with gold; see ver. 17. W. Lowth.

——of Ophir.] See notes on 1 Kings ix. 28.

13. —I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove &c.] The figurative language of the Prophets is taken from the analogy between the world natural, and an empire or kingdom considered as a world politick. The heavens and the things therein signify thrones and dignities, and those who enjoy them; the earth with the things thereon, the inferiour people. Great earthquakes, and the shaking of heaven and earth, are put for the shaking of kingdoms, so as to distract and overthrow them. Sir I. Newton.

19 ¶ And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be † as when God overthrew [c] Sodom and Gomorrah.

CHAP. XIV.

1 God's merciful restoration of Israel. 4 Their triumphant insultation over Babel. 24 God's purpose against Assyria. 29 Palestina is threatened.

FOR the LORD will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and

17. —which shall not regard silver;] That is, shall not be induced by large offers of ransom to spare. It is remarkable that Xenophon makes Cyrus open a speech to his army with praising them for a similar disregard of riches: "Ye Medes, and others who now hear me, I well know that you have not accompanied me in this expedition with a view of acquiring wealth." Bp. Lowth.

18. Their bows also] The Persians were celebrated for their archery, chap. xxii. 6; Jerem. xlix. 35. (see note on chap. xxi. 2.) Profane writers mention the magnitude of their bows. Probably their neighbours and allies the Medes too dealt much in the same sort of arms. Bp. Lowth.

The Medes is a general name for both nations, and so used and applied by Greek historians, as well as sacred writers. Bp. Newton.

19. —Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency,] After Nineveh was destroyed, Babylon became the queen of the East. Semiramis is said by some, and Belus, who is probably the same as Nimrod, (see note on Gen. x. 9,) by others, to have founded this city. It was Nebuchadnezzar however that made it one of the wonders of the world; he enlarged and beautified it to such a degree, that he may in a manner be said to have built it, as he boasts, Dan. iv. 30. Dean Prideaux, Bp. Newton. It was, according to the lowest account given of it by ancient historians, a regular square forty-five miles in compass, enclosed by a wall two hundred feet high, and fifty broad; in which there were one hundred gates of brass. Its principal ornaments were, the temple of Belus, in the middle of which was a tower of eight stories of building, upon a base of a quarter of a mile square; a most magnificent palace; and the famous hanging gardens, which were an artificial mountain raised upon arches, and planted with trees of the largest as well as the most beautiful sorts. The old palace was four miles in compass; the new, built by Nebuchadnezzar, was four times as large. Two canals were made by Nebuchadnezzar a hundred miles above the city: one on the eastern side of the Euphrates called Naharmalcha, or the royal river, by which the Euphrates was let into the Tigris; the other on the western side, called Pallacopas, or Naharaga, (the river of the pool,) by which the redundant waters of the Euphrates were carried into a vast lake forty miles square, contrived not only to lessen the inundation, but for a reservoir, with sluices, to water the barren country on the Arabian side. There were also prodigious banks of brick and bitumen carried a long way on each side of the river, to keep it within its channel. Bp. Lowth, Dean Prideaux.

20—22. It shall never be inhabited, &c.] Babylon never recovered its ancient splendour after it was taken by Cyrus, but, upon the removal of the seat of empire from thence by the Persians, by degrees decayed till it was at last reduced to an utter solitude. Berosus in Josephus says, that Cyrus ordered the outer walls to be pulled down; the Persian kings ever regarded Babylon with a jealous eye; Darius Hystaspes, upon a revolt, greatly depopulated the place, lowered the walls, and demolished the gates; Xerxes destroyed the temples; the building of Seleucia on the Tigris exhausted Babylon by its neighbourhood, as well as by the immediate loss of inhabitants taken away by Seleucus to people his new city; a king of the Parthians soon after carried away into slavery a great number, and destroyed the most beautiful parts of the city. In more modern times, St. Jerome (who lived in the fourth century) mentions Babylon as nothing more than a chase for wild beasts to feed and breed there for the king of Persia's hunting, exactly agreeing with ver. 21; and later travellers, who have endeavoured to find the remains of Babylon, give but very unsatisfactory accounts, some taking what ruins they saw to be those of Nebuchadnezzar's palace, or the tower of Babel; others supposing them the remains of some more modern building. The place thereabouts is represented as overrun with serpents, scorpions, and all sorts of venomous and unclean creatures, agreeably to ver. 22. W. Lowth, Bps. Lowth and Newton.

20. —neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there.] This is a proper representation of complete and entire desolation; for it is common in the East for shepherds to make use of remaining ruins to shelter their flocks in: and it implies a great degree of solitude, when it is said, that the place where great cities stood should be turned into pasturage, chap. xvii. 2; xxvii. 10; but it is predicted that the ruins of Babylon shall be fit for wild creatures only to resort to! Harmer, W. Lowth.

It is uncertain what creatures are meant by some Hebrew words in the following verses; particularly what the word signifies which our English renders satyrs. It originally means goats; in which shape evil spirits were supposed to appear; on which account our interpreters sometimes render it devils: see note at Levit. xvii. 7; 2 Chron. xi. 15; but here and chap. xxxiv. 14, it is rendered satyrs. Desolate and forlorn places were supposed to be inhabited by evil spirits. Compare Baruch iv. 35; Rev. xviii. 2. W. Lowth.

Chap. XIV. ver. 1. For the Lord will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel,] However He may seem to desert them. Judah, whose deliverance from captivity was the immediate consequence of the revolution foretold in the last chapter, is sometimes called Israel; see Ezek. xiii. 16; Mal. i. 1; ii. 11: but the name of Jacob and of Israel, used apparently with design in this place, each of which names includes the twelve tribes, and the other circumstances mentioned in this and the next verse, which did not in any complete sense accompany the return from the captivity of Babylon, seem to intimate that this whole prophecy extends its views beyond that event. Bp. Lowth. And, generally, whenever the Prophets speak of the blessings to follow upon the return from the captivity, it is to be understood, that the beginnings of their promises are to take place in that temporary restoration of the Jewish state; but that their full and final completion is to be looked for only in the days of the Messiah. This is the key to open the meaning of all oracles on this subject; this the true light to guide us to the interpretation of the prophetick word. Vitringa.

The deliverance of Judah from captivity, which is here set forth, without being much enlarged upon, or greatly amplified, introduces, with the greatest ease and the utmost propriety, the triumphant song on the overthrow of the Babylonian monarchy, ver. 4—28. Bp. Lowth. This passage (ver. 4—28.) contains a greater assemblage of sublime ideas, of bold and daring figures, than is perhaps any where else to be met with. Dr. Blair.

—— strangers shall be joined with them, &c.] It is probable that many strangers might become proselytes to the Jewish religion during the captivity. W. Lowth.

History indeed bears testimony to a partial completion of even the most literal sense of this prophecy, as the Jews brought back with them from Babylon some thousands of slaves; and afterwards, for a time, under the prosperous government of the Asmonean princes, held their neighbours and ancient enemies in subjection: but we must look farther to the spiritual completion: this and similar descriptions do import the conversion of whole nations and all nations to the true religion; and consequently could not be completed in the proselyting only of a few particular persons, but must intend a general reduction of all people to the same obedience. See notes on chap. xlv. 14; xlix. 23. Vitringa, Dr. Berriman.

4. — shalt take up this proverb] The word thus translated signifies not only a proverbial speech, but an acute and excellent saying, drawn up with art, and adorned with rhetorical figures. W. Lowth. See Bp. Lowth's note on Job xxvii. 1; and Abp. Newcome's on Numb. xxiii. 7.

—— and say, How hath the oppressor ceased! &c.] A chorus of Jews is here introduced, expressing their surprise and astonishment at the sudden downfal of Babylon, and the great reverse of fortune that had befallen the tyrant, who, like his predecessors, had oppressed his own, and harassed the neighbouring kingdoms. These oppressed kingdoms, or their rulers, are represented under the image of the fir trees and cedars of Libanus, frequently used to express any thing in the political or religious world that is supereminently great and majestick: the whole earth shouteth for joy; the cedars of Libanus utter a severe taunt over the fallen tyrant, and boast their security now he is no more. Bp. Lowth.

9. Hell from beneath is moved for thee &c.] See notes on Gen. xxxvii. 35; and Job xxvi. 5, 6. The scene is here changed, and a new set of persons is introduced: the regions of the dead are laid open, and hades is represented as rousing up the shades of the departed monarchs; they rise from their thrones to meet the king of Babylon at his coming, and insult him on his being reduced to the same estate of impotence and dissolution with themselves. This is one of the boldest figures that ever was attempted in poetry, and is executed with astonishing brevity and perspicuity, and with that peculiar force, which in a great subject naturally results from both. This image of the state of the dead is taken from the Eastern custom of burying, those at least of higher rank, in large sepulchral vaults hewn in the rock. Maundrell mentions remains of sepulchres of this kind at Jerusalem, said to be the sepulchres of the kings of Judah. Travellers tell us of similar monuments in Persia; mentioned by Diodorus Siculus as sepulchres of the kings of Persia. We must form to ourselves an idea of an immense subterraneous vault, a vast gloomy cavern, all round the sides of which there are cells to receive the dead bodies; here the deceased monarchs lie, in a distinguished sort of state, each on his couch with his arms beside him, and his sword at his head; see Ezek. xxxii. 27; on which place Chardin remarks, that this is the custom in Mingrelia. These illustrious shades rise at once from their couches, as from their thrones, and advance to the entrance of the cavern, to meet the king of Babylon, and to receive him with insults on his fall. Bp. Lowth.

12. How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer,] Princes and rulers are figuratively expressed by the host of heaven; and the king of Babylon, who outshone others, is here represented by the morning star: see notes on chap. xiii. 13. The expression likewise alludes to the fall of Satan, prince of the apostate angels, Luke x. 18. W. Lowth.

The Jews now resume the speech: they address the king of Babylon, as the morning star fallen from heaven, as the first in splendour and dignity in the political world fallen from his high state: they introduce him as uttering the most extravagant vaunts of his power and ambitious designs in his former glory: these are strongly contrasted in the close with his present low and abject condition. Bp. Lowth.

13. — I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north:] This is mount Zion, or rather mount Moriah on the north side of it, on which the temple was built. It might better be rendered "mount of the convention;" so called, not because the people assembled there to perform their religious also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north:

15 Yet thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit.

ceremonies, but because God there manifested Himself, as He had before appointed to meet the people in the tabernacle, Exod. xxix. 43. This perhaps only literally explains what was figuratively expressed in the former part of the verse; "heaven" and the "stars of God" standing, according to the Eastern manner, for the sanctuary and God's ministers. Vitringa.

16. They that see thee shall narrowly look upon thee, and consider thee,] Certain persons are introduced here, who light upon the corpse of the king of Babylon, cast out, and lying naked on the bare ground, covered with wounds, and so disfigured, that it is some time before they know him. They accost him with the severest taunts, and bitterly reproach him with his ambition and cruelty, which have deservedly brought on him this ignominious treatment, so different from that which those of his rank usually meet with, and so full of disgrace to his posterity. Bp. Lowth.

18. — every one in his own house.] That is, in his sepulchre. So the grave is called the "long home," as our translation well expresses it, Eccles. xii. 5. W. Lowth.

19. — like an abominable branch,] Fit for nothing but to rot on the ground. W. Lowth. Or, we may understand him compared to the tree on which a malefactor had been hanged. The Jews held this an object of abomination, and covered it with earth, together with the malefactor. Bp. Lowth.

—— the raiment of those that are slain,] The touching of such clothes did contract uncleanness by the law, Numb. xix. 16. W. Lowth.

21. — that they do not rise,] The Persian monarchs took care to prevent Babylon's recovering its former greatness: the Jews were first brought to Babylon to people and strengthen it; and the weakening and dispeopling of it might be one reason for their being sent back. Bp. Lowth, Dean Prideaux.

22. For I will rise up against them, saith the Lord of hosts, &c.] To complete the whole, God is here introduced, declaring the fate of Babylon, the utter extirpation of the royal family, and the total desolation of the city; the deliverance of His people, and the destruction of their enemies; confirming the irreversible decree by the awful sanction of His oath. Bp. Lowth.

—— nephew,] The same Hebrew word is translated, Gen. xxi. 23, "son's son," and so it should be here. It may mean Evil-merodach, (Nebuchadnezzar the great king of Babylon's son,) and Belshazzar. See Jer. xxvii. 6, 7. Dean Prideaux, W. Lowth.

23. I will also make it a possession for the bittern, and pools of water:] Cyrus took the city of Babylon, by diverting the waters of the Euphrates, which ran through the midst of it, and entering the place at night by the channel. It was two furlongs wide; but he had made it fordable by means of the lake, (see note on chap. xiii. 19,) and trenches which he had prepared. The river being thus turned, by the breaking down of dams and banks, and no care taken afterwards to repair the breach, all the country was overflowed and drowned, and ultimately a whole province lost. Alexander, who intended to have made Babylon the seat of his empire, set about remedying the mischief; but difficulties arising, he soon after dying, and the work being never more thought of, that country has remained bog and marsh ever since. Bp. Lowth, Dean Prideaux.

25. — I will break the Assyrian in my land, and upon my mountains tread him under foot:] The Assyrians and Babylonians are mentioned as the same people by profane authors: and see 2 Kings xxiii. 29; 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11. But the circumstance of this judgment being to be executed on God's mountains, is of importance; it may mean the destruction of Sennacherib's army near Jerusalem; but probably has still a farther view to some remarkable enemies of God's church; see notes on chap. xi. 14. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth.

27. For the Lord of hosts &c.] I believe it may with truth be affirmed, that there is no poem of its kind, extant in any language, in which the subject is so well laid out, and so happily conducted, with such a richness of invention, with such variety of images, persons, and distinct actions, with such rapidity and ease of transition, in so small a compass, as in this ode of Isaiah. For beauty of disposition, strength of colouring, greatness of sentiment, brevity, perspicuity, and force of expression, it stands among all the monuments of antiquity unrivalled. Bp. Lowth.

——the rod of him that smote thee is broken:] Or rather, The rod that smote thee is broken. It would be most natural and obvious to suppose Ahaz meant here, whose death seems to have given rise to the rejoicing of the Philistines. But as we learn from 2 Chron. xxviii. 18, that during his reign the Philistines rather gained ground upon the Jews, than were smitten by them, we may conclude that Uzziah, who had warred successfully against the Philistines, is meant by the "rod that smote them," and "the serpent," from whom should spring the "fiery flying serpent." This last must mean Hezekiah, who was great grandson to Uzziah, and is thus described as a more terrible enemy than he had been. See 2 Kings xviii. 8. Vitringa, Bp. Lowth. Hezekiah not only regained all the cities of Judah which the Philistines had seized during the time when Pekah and Rezin distressed the land, but also dispossessed them of almost all their own country. Dean Prideaux.

31. — there shall come from the north a smoke,] Smoke and fire are emblems of God's wrath, and of great calamities. See Gen. xv. 17; Ps. xviii. 8. W. Lowth.

32. What shall one then answer the messengers of the nation?] Namely, that sends to congratulate the Jews upon their victories? that the Lord is their protector. Bp. Wilson. See 2 Chron. xxxii. 23. The Septuagint and Chaldee give the plural, "nations." Bp. Lowth.

Chap. XV. This and the following chapter, taken together, make one entire prophecy. The time of the delivery of it, and consequently of the completion, which was to be in three years from that time, is uncertain. But the most probable account is, that it was delivered soon after the foregoing, in the first year of Hezekiah, and accomplished in his fourth year, when Shalmaneser invaded the kingdom of Israel: he might probably march through Moab, and, to secure every thing behind him, possess himself of the whole country by taking their principal strong places, Ar and Kirhares, or Kirhareseth, chap. xvi. 7. Bp. Lowth, Abp. Usher.

Jeremiah has happily introduced much of this prophecy of Isaiah into his own larger prophecy against the same people, chap. xlviii. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. — Because in the night Ar of Moab is laid waste, and brought to silence; because &c.] We should rather translate,

"Because in the night Ar is destroyed, Moab is undone!"
"Because in the night Kir is destroyed, Moab is undone!"
Bp. Lowth.

2. He is gone to Bajith, and to Dibon,] "He" is used for the people of Moab. "Bajith" and "Dibon" are in the Chaldee and Syriack versions made into the name of one place; Beth-Dibon: Beth may signify the house or temple of an idol. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth.

5. — his fugitives shall flee unto Zoar,] Rather, "his fugitives shall cry unto Zoar as an heifer," &c. The particle as is frequently understood; see chap. xxi. 8. W. Lowth.

—— an heifer of three years old:] The meaning seems to be, that the cry of Moab should be continued on from city to city, till the whole country resounded as with the lowing of a young cow, that runs from place to place in search of her calf, that has been taken from her. An image singularly expressive. Dr. Blayney.

6. — the waters of Nimrim] This place was famous for good pasture, and meadows well-watered. See Numb. xxxii. 3, 36. W. Lowth.

——for the hay is withered away,] Rather, "the herbage;" for in those countries they make no hay; and, if they did, it appears from inspection that hay could hardly be the meaning of the original word, either here or in Prov. xxvii. 25. Parkhurst.

9. — waters of Dimon shall be full of blood:] St. Jerome tells us, that Dimon is the same with Dibon, ver. 2. Vitringa.

——for I will bring more &c.] I will bring more and more calamities; and they that fly to escape the present evils, shall fall into worse; as if a man that fled from his enemy should meet a lion to destroy him; see Jer. xlviii. 44; Amos v. 19. W. Lowth. The additional calamities threatened here to fall upon Moab may perhaps relate to that which Nebuchadnezzar was to bring upon them, of which Jeremiah prophesies. Vitringa.

Chap. XVI. ver. 1. Send ye the lamb &c.] The Moabites were subdued by David, and became his tributaries, 2 Sam. viii. 2. the king of Moab is said to send 100,000 lambs, 2 Kings iii. 4. To something of this kind the Prophet may allude here, and exhort the Moabites to renew to the heir of David's family an acknowledgment which probably had been discontinued. "Sela to the wilderness" should rather be translated, Sela in the wilderness. See 2 Kings xiv. 7. W. Lowth.

It is a custom of the East for the poor people to make presents of lambs and sheep to their lords, as an offering or tribute. Sir J. Chardin.

2. — the daughters of Moab shall be at the fords of Arnon.] Endeavouring to seek their lodging in foreign parts. Bp. Hall.

3. — make thy shadow as the night &c.] The Prophet speaks by way of advice to the Moabites, to shew kindness to their brethren the Jews, as in reason and justice they ought, in the time of their distress: adding however that there should be no great occasion for their help, as God Himself would preserve them. W. Lowth, Dr. Wells.

4. — for the extortioner is at an end, &c.] This applies perhaps to the Israelites, who in Ahaz's time invaded Judah, 2 Chron. xxviii. 5, 6. With those former times of distress is contrasted the security and flourishing state of the kingdom under Hezekiah, who should govern with an equal mixture of justice and mercy, and therein prefigure the Messiah. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth.

6. — but his lies shall not be so.] That is, the predictions of such as take upon them to foretell things shall not have events agreeable to their pride and wrath. Dr. Wells.

8. — they are come even unto Jazer, &c.] The plants of the celebrated "vine of Sibmah" are described as propagated over all the neighbouring country: Jazer was in the north border of Moab; the wilderness of Moab lay to the east of that country, (Numb. xxi. 23,) and by "the sea" no other can well be understood but the Dead sea, which was southwest. Dr. Blayney. Perhaps the meaning of the words, "are gone over the sea," is, that these vines were not only in great request in the country of Moab, but had scions of them sent beyond sea, into foreign countries. Bp. Lowth.

Some interpreters suppose, that by the "vine of Sibmah" is meant the state of Moab, and its principal men by the "principal plants;" but these may better be taken literally. The vines and the pastures (chap. xv. 6.) formed the chief excellence of the country; and the Prophet accordingly foretells the destruction of those things, the loss of which would most affect the people. Vitringa.

9. — I will bewail with the weeping of Jazer &c.] That is, with a general lamentation, such as shall be heard from the uttermost skirts of the land. Bp. Hall.

——for the shouting &c.] The word in the original signifies loud shouting, either as of men treading grapes, (ver. 10, and Jer. xxv. 30,) or of soldiers encouraging one another to battle or plunder, Jer. li. 14. And in this latter view the learned Vitringa understands the word in this place: "for upon thy summer fruits and upon thy harvest the shout (that is, of plundering and destroying enemies) is fallen." Compare Jer. xlviii. 32. Parkhurst. See the marginal translation. Or the sense may be, according to the translation in the text, The joy and acclamations, that were wont to be at the gathering of thy summer fruits, and for thy plentiful harvest, are now at an end, and shall be heard no more. Bp. Hall.

13. — since that time.] Rather, a good while ago: so the same particle is rendered, chap. xlviii. 3, 5. This judgment, saith the Prophet, was denounced against Moab in former time; particularly by Amos, chap. ii. 1, &c. It is now confirmed, and the particular time specified when it shall be accomplished, ver. 14. W. Lowth.

14. — three years, as the years of an hireling,] See Deut. xv. 18. W. Lowth.

Chap. XVII. ver. 1. — Damascus is taken away from being a city,] This prophecy was probably delivered soon after those of the seventh and eighth chapters, in the beginning of the reign of Ahaz; and was fulfilled by Tiglath-pileser's taking Damascus, and carrying the people captives to Kir, 2 Kings xvi. 9. Bp. Lowth.

2. — they shall be for flocks, &c.] See note on chap. vii. 25.

3. The fortress also shall cease from Ephraim,] The burden of Damascus naturally brings the Prophet to speak of the subversion of the kingdom of Israel, in those days in alliance with the Syrians, chap. vii. 1, 2, and to be overthrown by the same enemy, at the same time, chap. viii. 4. Bp. Horsley. This chapter treats indeed more largely of the Israelites than of the Syrians; and with regard to them was the prophecy more fully completed, by the conquest of the kingdom, and captivity of the people, effected a few years later by Shalmaneser. Bp. Lowth.

5. — the valley of Rephaim.] The valley of Rephaim near Jerusalem, celebrated for its plentiful harvests, is here used poetically for any fruitful country. Bp. Lowth.

6. — as the shaking of an olive tree,] The former verse was an illustration of Israel's entire destruction from the ridding of fields in the corn harvest: compare Jer. li. 33; Hos. vi. 11. Here the metaphor is taken from the gathering of the summer fruits, and the remnant compared to the few berries left on an olive tree that has been beaten by its owner, to be shaken off by the poor. See Deut. xxiv. 20. W. Lowth, Harmer.

Agreeably to the promise here made of a remnant, we find that some of the ancient inhabitants of the ten tribes were left after Shalmaneser's captivity, and even after that of Esar-haddon; and some turned to serve the true God, as predicted ver. 7, 8. See 2 Chron. xxx. 10, 11; xxxv. 18. W. Lowth.

10, 11. — therefore shalt thou plant pleasant plants, &c.] The pleasant plants, and shoots from a foreign soil, are allegorical expressions for strange and idolatrous worship; vicious and abominable practices connected with it; reliance on human aid, and on alliances entered into with the neighbouring countries, especially Egypt; to all which the Israelites were greatly addicted, and in their expectations from which they should be grievously disappointed. Bp. Lowth.

11. — in the morning shalt thou make] When the Hebrews would signify doing a thing speedily, with care and diligence, they often thus express it. See chap. l. 4; and Ps. xlvi. 5. W. Lowth.

12—14. These verses seem to relate to the formidable invasion of the Assyrians upon Judea, and their sudden overthrow; ver. 14. fitly representing the condition of Sennacherib's army, which caused great consternation over night, but were all destroyed before the next morning, 2 Kings xix. 35. *W. Chap. XVIII. This is one of the most obscure prophecies of Isaiah: the end and design of it, the people to whom it is addressed, the person who sends the messengers, and the nation to whom the messengers are sent, are all doubtful. Bp. Lowth. It has been considered as such by the whole succession of interpreters. Most have assumed, that the principal matter of the prophecy is a woe or judgment; that the object of this woe is Egypt, or some contiguous country; that the time of the execution of the judgment was at hand, when the prophecy was delivered. It appears to me, that the principal matter of the prophecy is a promise of the final restoration of the Israelites; that it has no respect to Egypt or any of the contiguous countries; that the time of its completion is yet future, being indeed the season of the second advent of our Lord. Bp. Horsley.

Ver. 1. Woe to the land] The Hebrew particle here used does not necessarily imply a threat, is sometimes an exclamation of surprise, and often simply compellative of persons at a distance. It may be rendered, "Ho! land," or, "Ho to the land," &c. Bp. Horsley, Vitringa, Bp. Lowth.

—— land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia:] The mention of the rivers of Ethiopia has led almost all expositors to look to Egypt as the country addressed. Some have understood by the wings of Egypt, ridges of mountains running from south to north, on either side of the Nile, somewhat resembling a pair of pinions; others take the wings for the sails of numerous vessels, overshadowing the surface of the ocean; others, and Bp. Lowth among them, giving a different sense to the doubtful word rendered by our translators "shadowing," translate, "land of the winged cymbal," which they suppose a poetical periphrasis for the Egyptian sistrum, frequently used in their idolatrous rites. Our translators appear to me very judiciously to have taken the word in the sense of "shadowing." The shadow of wings is an usual image in the prophetick language for protection afforded by the stronger to the weak; and in this passage may be intended to characterize some great people, who should be famous for the aid and protection they should afford their friends and allies. The land of Cush (properly that district of Arabia, where the sons of Cush first settled) is in Holy Writ taken largely for a great tract of country, comprehending much more than the proper territory of the Cushites, extending east at least as far as the Tigris, and having for its western boundary the Nile: so that according as we understand the Prophet to speak of the African or the Asiatick Cush, the land beyond its rivers is to be looked for far to the west or far to the east of Palestine. Which of these is meant, it must be left for time to shew. Bp. Horsley.

2.—vessels of bulrushes] It is well known that the Egyptians commonly used on the Nile a light sort of ships or boats, made of the reed papyrus. Bp. Lowth. See notes on Exod. ii. 3; and Job ix. 26.

If Egypt is the country spoken to, "vessels of bulrushes" might be understood of those light skiffs; but if the country spoken to be distant from Egypt, those vessels may only be used as an apt image of quick-sailing vessels of any material. Bp. Horsley.

—— saying, Go, ye swift messengers,] The word "saying" is not in the original, or old versions. It should seem that the command is God's, issued by His prophet; and that the messengers, to whom the command is given, are the very people summoned in the first verse to attend. Bp. Horsley.

—— to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto;] The time present in prophetick vision is not the time of the delivery, but that of the fulfilment, of the prophecy. Now the people of Egypt has long ceased to be of any consideration: but the people of the Jews have been from their very beginning, are at this day, and will be to the end of time, a people venerable in a religious sense, "awfully remarkable" (so the word might be rendered rather than "terrible") on account of the special Providence visibly attending them: and all the other particulars of the description here given of the people, to whom messengers are sent, agree accurately with the character and conduct of the Jews in their present state of dispersion. Bp. Horsley.

—— whose land the rivers have spoiled!] That is, armies of conquerors, which long since have spoiled the land of the Jews. The inundation of rivers is a frequent image for the ravages of armies of foreign invaders.

We have in ver. 1, 2, seen messengers summoned, a command given to them to go swiftly with the message, the people described to whom it was to be carried: it might be expected we should next have the message given to the messengers in precise terms. The scene is suddenly closed with ver. 2, before the messengers set out, before even the message is given: but the new objects which are immediately brought in view, evidently represent, under the usual emblems of sacred prophecy, other parts of the same entire action; and declare the purport, the season, and the effect of the message. Ver. 3, an ensign or standard is lifted up on the mountains; a trumpet is blown on the hills; the standard of the cross of Christ; the trumpet of the Gospel. The resort to the standard, the effect of the summons, in the end will be universal. Bp. Horsley.

4. — I will consider in my dwelling place] Rather read, with the margin, "I will regard my set dwelling." The sentiment is, that, notwithstanding a long suspension of extraordinary manifestations of God's power, which is here described under the image of that stillness and stagnation of the atmosphere which takes place in extreme heats, His providence is not asleep; He is all the while keeping His eye fixed upon His prepared habitation, regarding the conduct and the fortunes of His people, and at all times directing every thing, though often by a silent and secret operation, to their ultimate prosperity, and to the universal establishment of the true religion. Bp. Horsley.

—— like a clear heat upon herbs,] The marginal reading, "after rain," seems to make better sense. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

5. — afore the harvest, when the bud is perfect, and the sour grape is ripening in the flower,] Rather, "and the blossom is become a swelling grape." Bp. Lowth.

The harvest and gathering of the fruits is the constant image of that season, when God shall gather His elect from the four winds of heaven. This is to be immediately preceded by a pruning of the useless shoots and unfruitful luxurious branches: see John xv. 1, 2. God, in the later ages, will purify His church by such signal judgments as shall strike all nations with religious awe. Bp. Horsley. See note on chap. xxvii. 4, 5.

The interpretation of this confessedly obscure and very difficult chapter has been given above according to the hypothesis of Bp. Horsley. The explanation of Bp. Lowth supposes, that the prophecy was delivered before Sennacherib's return from his Egyptian expedition; and that it was designed to give to the Jews, and perhaps likewise to the Egyptians, an intimation of God's counsels, in regard to the destruction of their great and powerful enemy. He accordingly explains the "people" and "nation," spoken of in ver. 2, to be the Egyptians: by "the standard" and "the trumpet" in ver. 3, he understands the meteors, the thunder, the lightning, &c., which accompanied the destruction of Sennacherib's army, as described chap. xxix. 6; xxx. 30, 31; x. 16, 17: and he states the subject of the fourth and following verses of the chapter to be, that God would comfort and support His own people, though threatened with immediate destruction by the Assyrians; that Sennacherib's great designs and mighty efforts should be frustrated; that the chief part of his army should be made a prey for the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air, ver. 5, 6; and that Egypt, being delivered from his oppression, and avenged of the wrongs which she had suffered, should return thanks to God for the wonderful deliverance, both of herself and of the Jews, from this most powerful adversary. This interpretation of Bp. Lowth corresponds in its outline with that proposed by Vitringa. Edit.

Chap. XIX. ver. 1. The burden of Egypt.] This chapter is a detail of the judgments which were to fall upon Egypt in various periods of the history of that country, from the time of the Prophet downwards. Bp. Horsley. After the destruction of Sennacherib's army before Jerusalem, by which the Egyptians were freed from the yoke with which they were threatened by this powerful enemy, who had been carrying on a successful warfare against them, their affairs were again thrown into confusion by intestine broils among themselves, (see ver. 2;) perfect anarchy lasted for some years; then followed an aristocracy of twelve princes, which ended in the sole dominion of Psammitichus, who reigned fifty-four years. Not long after that came the invasion and conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar, and then that by the Persians under Cambyses, the son of Cyrus. Bp. Lowth.

——the idols of Egypt shall be moved] When God executes His judgments upon a heathen nation, He is said to punish the idols of that people: see chap. xxi. 9; Exod. xii. 12; Jer. li. 44. W. Lowth. The same thing is foretold as to be performed by Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xliii. 11, &c.; Ezek. xxx. 13. The phrase used here of the Lord's "riding upon a swift cloud" implies, that the conquest should be swift and sudden. Bp. Newton. This prophecy of the utter overthrow of heathen superstition is applicable also to the Gospel times, and signifies that after great desolation and confusion the Egyptians should learn to know the Lord: see ver. 21. Dr. Berriman.

4. — a cruel lord;] Nebuchadnezzar; and afterwards the whole succession of Persian kings, who in general grievously oppressed the country; especially Cambyses and Ochus, who are branded in history as cruel tyrants, and monsters of men. Bps. Lowth and Newton.

Nile; and the second part of the verse to be taken as no more than the Prophet's interpretation of the first. Jeremiah speaks thus of the Euphrates, chap. li. 36; and Nahum of the Nile, chap. iii. 8: see also Zech. x. 10, 11. Of the Nile so described we have instances in profane authors. Vitringa. See the note on Job vii. 12, from Scripture illustrated.

It is well known that the Nile increased in the summer, and for some months overflowed the whole country. The region about Delta particularly appeared like a vast sea; and the principal towns became so many islands, and all communication was carried on by ships and boats. Hence the river had the name of Oceanus, as Diodorus tells us. Bryant.

Some commentators suppose that this prophecy was to be literally fulfilled, and have accordingly seen its accomplishment in the reign of the twelve tyrants, when something of a failure is said to have taken place, or referred the words to a deficiency of water at some other period: history does afford instances of this; but the expression may be also understood more probably in a metaphorical sense, and denote the decay of Egyptian strength by metaphors taken from the decrease of the Nile, upon the overflowing of which all the plenty and prosperity of Egypt depended. Vitringa, W. Lowth.

6. And they shall turn the rivers far away;] That is, The rivers shall be driven back, shall fail. Vitringa.

——the brooks of defence shall be emptied and dried up:] This was literally done by Megabyzus, general of a Persian army, sent by Artaxerxes to reduce Egypt to obedience. Dr. Wells. By making many channels he drained one of the branches of the Nile, and took possession of an island in the midst of it. Dean Prideaux.

7. The paper reeds] The papyrus is the peculiar produce of the Nile, the streams drawn from it, and the lakes of Egypt: beside the principal article made from it, paper, and the boats on the Nile, (see note on chap. xviii. 2,) Pliny tells us, that the Egyptians applied it to various purposes, using the root for wood, and making of the bark, sails, ropes, clothes, &c. Vitringa.

——by the brooks, by the mouth of the brooks,] What is here translated "brooks," is in Exod. vii. 19, (where there is a particular representation of the waters of Egypt, as here,) rendered "rivers;" both may signify the canals drawn from the Nile by Egyptian princes. Dr. Shaw tells us, that the soil near the banks of the Nile itself is very considerably deeper than at the extremity to which the inundations reach; from whence it should seem, that the land originally lay with a considerable descent to the river. To say then that things sown or cultivated near the mouths of the canals (which must have been in the lowest places, and sufficiently watered, when the higher grounds produced nothing, for want of moisture) should wither, is to describe the utmost failure of water. Harmer.

8. The fishers also shall mourn, &c.] There was great plenty of fish in Egypt: see Numb. xi. 5; (and the note on Exod. vii. 21;) the lakes abounding even more than the Nile; as Egmont, Pococke, and other travellers, tell us. Bp. Lowth.

As the exhaustion and misery about to take place in Egypt has been already figured out under the emblem of the drying up of the Nile, the grand source of all its wealth; so the grief of the persons who would be the first and greatest sufferers by that calamity, the fishers, &c., is put to express the general despondency of all orders. Vitringa.

9.—they that weave networks,] "Networks," or rather, "white works," as in the margin, may mean wicker-work, white from the peeling of the twigs made use of. Fish may be caught by wicker-work, as well as by nets: and something of that kind appears in the Prænestine Mosaick Pavement, which Dr. Shaw has given us. Harmer, Parkhurst.

13.—Zoan—Noph] Zoan, or Tanis, was one of the most ancient cities of Egypt; see Numb. xiii. 22; Ps. lxxviii. 43. Noph is better known by the name of Memphis. W. Lowth.

In verses 11—17 are recounted the immediate causes of the above-mentioned evils; the folly of the rulers, who valued themselves on their wisdom; and the cowardice and effeminacy of the people in general: Egypt would not have become a prey to so many foreign enemies, but through the excessive weakness of the Egyptians, both in counsel and in action; they had not the courage even to defend themselves, but trusted chiefly to their mercenaries, who, instead of defending, were often the first to betray them. Bp. Newton.

14. The Lord hath mingled a perverse spirit &c.] The Lord in His justice hath given them up to a spirit of giddiness and perverseness; justly punishing their pride with the seduction of their leaders, who have caused Egypt to go wrong in all their enterprises. Bp. Hall.

17. And the land of Judah shall be a terror unto Egypt, &c.] The threatening hand of God will be held out and shaken over Egypt, from the side of Judea, through which the Assyrians will march to invade it. Bp. Lowth.

18. In that day] That is, After that time. Bp. Newton. See notes on chap. iv. 2; x. 20.

——shall five cities in the land of Egypt speak the language of Canaan,] It is a way of speaking in Scripture to use a common definite number for an indefinite. See Amos i. 3, 6, 9; (and the note on Job v. 19.) "Shall speak the language of Canaan" signifies, that they shall worship God with the true Israelites. W. Lowth.

The whole passage to the end of the chapter contains a general intimation of the future propagation of the knowledge of the true God in Egypt and Syria, under the successors of Alexander; and, in consequence of this propagation, of the early reception of the Gospel in the same countries, when it should be published to the world. Bp. Lowth. Many Jews, after Nebuchadnezzar had taken Jerusalem, fled into Egypt; and carried along with them Jeremiah, who there uttered most of his prophecies concerning the conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar. From thence some knowledge of God, and some notices of the prophecies, might easily be derived to the Egyptians. Alexander transplanted many of the Jews into his new city Alexandria: the first Ptolemy carried more; and his successors gave great encouragement to settlers: nor were the Jews less favoured by many of the Syrian kings. Bp. Newton.

——one shall be called, The city of destruction.] The margin reads, "The city of the sun;" and many suppose the city Heliopolis to be meant here, and that the other name is substituted for it (as being expressed in the Hebrew by a word which bears near affinity to the true name) by way of reproach, and implying withal, that the idol there worshipped should be utterly destroyed. Upon much the same principle Beth-el, which signifies the house of God, is called, when become the seat of idolatry, Beth-aven, that is, the house of vanity, Hos. iv. 15; x. 5. W. Lowth.

19. In that day shall there be an altar to the Lord &c.] The altar, sacrifice, oblation, and vows, mentioned here and at ver. 21, are taken for the worship and service of God in general; it being common in the prophetick style to speak of future times in the language and according to the ideas of the present; of the spiritual worship God intended, by the known terms of the worship then used. W. Lowth, Bp. Chandler. The pillar in the border for a witness, alludes to that erected by Jacob at Beth-el, (Gen. xxviii. 18,) and to the altar built on the border of Jordan, Josh. xxii. 10. W. Lowth.

20. —because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a saviour,] The conquest of Persia by Alexander might well be considered as a deliverance to Egypt: upon his coming the people all cheerfully submitted to him, out of hatred to the Persians, (see note on ver. 4,) so that he became master of the country without opposition. Bps. Lowth and Newton.

The words may also be fitly applied to the tyranny which the devil exercises over the pagan world, who are led captive by him at his will, from whence they can be redeemed only by the great Saviour of the world, Jesus Christ. W. Lowth.

23—25. —a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, &c.] It is predicted here that Egypt and Assyria, which used to be at great enmity with each other, shall be united in the same worship by the intermediation of Israel. The kingdom of Syria, which was established by Seleucus after the time of Alexander the Great, comprehending nearly the same countries with the ancient empire of Assyria, and in other respects resembling it, may be considered as the representative of Assyria in later times; (see note on Ashur, Numb. xxiv. 24:) now by means of the many Jews and proselytes who were resident in Syria and Egypt, the three countries, Israel, Egypt, and Syria, were in some measure united in the same worship; see Bp. Newton's note on ver. 18. It was more fully accomplished when these countries became Christian; and we piously hope and believe, that it will still receive its more perfect completion in the latter days, when Mahometism shall be rooted out, and Christianity again flourish in those countries, when "the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in, and all Israel be saved," Rom. xi. 25, 26. Vitringa, Bp. Newton.

Chap. XX. The last chapter was a general prophecy against Egypt; this foretells the conquest of it by Sennacherib, who overran Egypt and Ethiopia, which countries were the Jews' confederates against him: see 2 Kings xviii. 21, compared with 2 Kings xix. 9. They are often reproved for their vain confidence in Egypt: see ver. 5; and chap. xxx. 2; xxxi. 1. With regard to the word our translation renders "Ethiopia," properly Cush, it is a great question with the learned whether Ethiopia, properly so called, be meant by it, or Arabia. It is joined, chap. xliii. 3, with Seba. W. Lowth. See note on chap. xviii. 1; and Dr. Hales's note on Numb. xii. 1.

Ver. 1. —Sargon the king of Assyria sent him,)] Tartan was one of Sennacherib's generals; (2 Kings xviii. 17;) and Tirhakah king of Ethiopia was in alliance with the king of Egypt against Sennacherib. These circumstances make it probable that by Sargon is meant Sennacherib. Bp. Lowth.

——fought against Ashdod,] When Sennacherib's army came up against all the fenced cities of Judah, (2 Kings xviii. 13,) he might send a detachment against this city, belonging probably at that time to Hezekiah's dominions, 2 Kings xviii. 8. Ashdod or Azotus was a strong place, and afterwards held out twenty-nine years against Psammitichus king of Egypt. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

2. — loose the sackcloth from off thy loins,] As it was a principal part of the prophetick office to denounce God's judgments, so the Prophets commonly wore sackcloth, the habit of mourning, as suitable to their employment; (see Rev. xi. 3;) of this kind was the hairy garment by which Elias and John Baptist are described, 2 Kings i. 8; Matth. iii. 4; see also Zech. xiii. 4. W. Lowth.

—— naked and barefoot.] Those are said to be naked in the Scripture phrase, who go without their upper garment, or have put off the habit proper to their station or quality. See John xxi. 7; 1 Sam. xix. 24; and note on Job xxii. 6. Going barefoot was a sign of mourning, 2 Sam. xv. 30. Dr. Waterland, W. Lowth.

Isaiah is described here walking in this manner as a sign of the distress that awaited the Egyptians; the Prophets foreshewed things by actions as well as words, Ezek. xxiv. 18; Hos. i. 2, 3; iii. 1, 2: this mode of expressing important circumstances by actions being customary and familiar among all Eastern nations. The conduct of the Prophets on these occasions, considered with reflection on the importance of their ministry, and with allowance for difference of manners, will appear to have been not only very striking and impressive, but strictly agreeable to the design and decorum of the prophetick character. W. Lowth, Dr. Gray. See the note on Gen. xxxii. 25.

3. — three years for a sign and wonder] Perhaps, at intervals during that time. Some think we should understand three days, a year being sometimes placed in prophetick language for a day: others apply the three years, not to Isaiah's walking, but to the calamity foreshewn thereby to be to last three years; or to happen within three years. Others consider the account as narrative of a transaction in vision, or as a parable related by Isaiah. Dr. Gray.

6. — the inhabitant of this isle] The margin gives "country;" and so is the word sometimes to be taken. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. xi. 11; Gen. x. 5.

Chap. XXI. ver. 1. — desert of the sea.] Babylon, which was seated in a plain, and surrounded by water. The propriety of the expression consists in this, not only that any large collection of waters in the Oriental style is called a sea, but also that the places about Babylon are said from the beginning to have been overflowed with waters, and to have been called the sea. Compare Jer. li. 13. Bp. Newton. It was a great barren morassy desert originally: such it became after the taking of the city by Cyrus: (see note on chap. xiv. 23:) and such it continues to this day. Bp. Lowth.

The ten first verses of this chapter contain a prediction of the taking of Babylon by the Medes and Persians. It opens with the Prophet's seeing at a distance the dreadful storm that is gathering and ready to burst upon it: the event is intimated in general terms; God's orders are issued to the Medes and Persians (ver. 2.) to set forth on the expedition which He had given them in charge: upon this the Prophet enters into the midst of the action, and in the person of Babylon expresses in the strongest terms the astonishment and horrour that seizes her on the sudden surprise of the city, at the season dedicated to pleasure and festivity; ver. 3, 4. Bp. Lowth.

—— As whirlwinds in the south] See Job xxxvii. 9; Zech. ix. 14. The most vehement storms to which Judea was subject came from the great desert country to the south of it. Bp. Lowth.

2. — the treacherous dealer dealeth treacherously, &c.] The words may be rather rendered passively, "The plunderer is plundered, and the destroyer is destroyed." Bp. Lowth.

—— Elam:] By this, taking the word with some latitude, we may rightly understand Persia. Vitringa. We do not find this last term (which signifies horsemen) in the early books of Scripture. Cyrus taught his people the art of managing horses: Ezekiel is the first who mentions them by the name of Persians; before that period, it is probable that the names Cush and Elam included most of Persia. Bochart. If however by Elam we understand here the province strictly so called, it is true that this also, though subject to Babylon, rose up against it. Bp. Newton.

—— all the sighing thereof have I made to cease.] That is, the sighing caused by it; namely, of those who have been oppressed by the Babylonian tyranny. Compare chap. xiv. 3. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth.

4. — the night of my pleasure hath he turned into fear] The night, when I thought to have some respite, and be at ease; see Job vii. 13, 14. Or, some understand the words of that festival night when Babylon was surprised, (Dan. v:) the following verse favours this sense. W. Lowth.

5—9. Prepare the table, &c.] The Prophet describes the carelessness of the Babylonians, and in the midst of their feasting the sudden alarm of war. The event is then declared in a very singular manner: God orders the Prophet to set a watchman to look out, and to report what he sees; and though the passage, which relates what he sees, is extremely obscure, (owing to the ambiguity of a word which occurs three times, and may signify a chariot, or the rider in it; or a rider on a horse or other animal; or a company of chariots or riders;) it is pretty clear, that Darius and Cyrus, the Medes and the Persians, are intended to be distinguished by the two riders, or two sorts of cattle. Bp. Lowth.

8. And he cried, A lion:] The marginal reading, "as a lion," gives an easier sense; with a strong voice, like a lion: the particle as is frequently understood; see chap. xv. 5. W. Lowth, Bp. Hall.

9. — answered] That is, continued his discourse; for similar use of the word "answer," see particularly Matt. xi. 25, and the Gospels elsewhere. W. Lowth.

—— all the graven images of her gods he hath broken unto the ground.] Xerxes, on his return from Greece, passing through Babylon, pillaged the temples, and pulled down all the images, thus completing this and other prophecies; see Jer. l. 2; li. 44, 47, 52. Dean Prideaux.

10. O my threshing, and the corn of my floor:] The application, the end, and design of the prophecy are here admirably given in a short expressive address to the Jews: O my people, whom I shall make subject for your punishment to the Babylonians, to try and prove you, to separate the chaff from the corn, the bad from the good among you, hear this for your consolation; your slavery and oppression will have an end in the destruction of your oppressors. The Prophet abruptly breaks off, and, instead of continuing the speech in the person of God, adds in his own, This I declare unto you from God. Bp. Lowth. It constantly occurs in the prophecies that the persons speaking are changed, and that God's discourse is intermixed with that of the Prophet. Vitringa.

The word threshing is used here to express the object or matter that is threshed: for "corn of my floor," in the original it is, as the margin gives, son. It is an idiom of the Hebrew language to call the effect, the object, any thing that belongs in almost any way to another, the son of it. Bp. Lowth. See chap. v. 1, and margin there.

11. The burden of Dumah.] That this is to be understood of Edom or Idumea, may be inferred from the mention of Seir; this last being a name by which Edom is commonly denoted in Scripture. Dr. Wells.

—— Watchman,] The Prophets are often compared to watchmen; as foreseeing evils at a distance, and warning the people: compare chap. lii. 8; lxii. 6; Ezek. iii. 17. W. Lowth.

This prophecy, from the uncertainty of the occasion on which it was uttered, and from the brevity of the expression, is extremely obscure. The Edomites, as well as the Jews, were subdued by the Babylonians. They inquire of the Prophet, how long their subjection is to last: he seems to intimate that the Jews should be delivered from their captivity; not so the Edomites: (Bp. Lowth:) that a morning should arise to the one after their night of calamity, and not to the other; see note on chap. xxvii. 7. We may suppose this night of the Idumeans to have begun the same year that, according to Josephus, Nebuchadnezzar executed the Divine judgments against the Ammonites, Moabites, &c.; the fifth after the destruction of Jerusalem. Vitringa.

13. The burden upon Arabia.] This prophecy was to be fulfilled within a year of the time of its delivery, ver. 16; and was probably delivered about the same time with the rest in this part of the book, soon after or before the fourteenth of Hezekiah, the year of Sennacherib's invasion. In his first march into Judea, or in his return from the Egyptian expedition, he might overrun the several clans of Arabians mentioned here: their distress on some such occasion is the subject of the prophecy. Bp. Lowth.

—— travelling companies] See the notes on Gen. xvi. 12; xxxvii. 25; Job xli. 6. Those of Dedanim were the posterity of Dedan, Abraham's grandson; those of Tema and Kedar, descended from two of Ishmael's sons, Gen. xxv. 3, 13, 15. These people were famous for the use of the bow, (ver. 17,) like their ancestor Ishmael, Gen. xxi. 20. W. Lowth.

14. — brought water &c.] Pitying their chased neighbours, they brought water to their thirsty companies, and bread to relieve their hunger, in that forced and sudden flight. Bp. Hall.

16. — Within a year, according to the years of an hireling,] A common year. Dr. Wells. This description of it seems to be used to distinguish from a prophetical year, (see Numb. xiv. 34; Ezek. iv. 6;) or from some remarkable time in general; as we read of the "acceptable year of the Lord," chap. lxi. 2, the "year of recompences," chap. xxxiv. 8. *W. nezzar: the Prophet may have had both in view. The third verse seems to relate to the flight of Zedekiah, 2 Kings xxv. 4, 5, from the Chaldeans; ver. 6, and ver. 9—11, rather to the siege by Sennacherib. Bp. Lowth, Vitringa. See notes on those verses.

Ver. 1. — valley of vision.] Jerusalem, according to Josephus, was built on two opposite hills, Sion and Acra, separated by a valley; and it is thus called, as being the seat of Divine revelation. Bp. Lowth.

—— that thou art wholly gone up] The people's running all to the top of their houses gives a lively image of a sudden general alarm. Bp. Lowth. See the notes on chap. xv. 3; and Deut. xxii. 8.

2. Thou that art full of stirs, &c.] Thou, O Jerusalem, that art so full of people, and full of noise, a populous and jolly city, how is it that thy citizens are so base that they do not stand it out in fight; neither are they dead by the sword, but with fear rather? Bp. Hall.

6. — Elam bare the quiver &c.] See note on chap. xiii. 18. The Kir mentioned here was a city of the Medes. W. Lowth.

Both Medes and Elamites were allies or tributaries to the Assyrians at the time of Sennacherib's expedition; that the Medes and men of Kir were so, is obvious from 2 Kings xvi. 9; xvii. 6. That these people were so to Nebuchadnezzar at the time of his besieging Jerusalem, is not so apparent from history. Vitringa.

8. And he discovered the covering of Judah, &c.] The meaning is, When the enemy hath dismantled the fortified cities of Judah, then you will bethink yourselves of providing arms for your defence. "The house of the forest" was an armoury within the city of Jerusalem; see 1 Kings x. 17. It was built by Solomon; and thus called, probably, from the great quantity of cedar from Lebanon employed in the building, 1 Kings vii. 2, 3. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

11. Ye made also a ditch between the two walls &c.] This agrees with the circumstance of Hezekiah's stopping up all the waters of the fountains without the city, and bringing them into the city by a subterraneous passage cut through the rock: those of the old pool to a place where he made a double wall, so that the pool was between the two walls. This great work is particularly mentioned by the sacred historians, 2 Kings xx. 20; 2 Chron. xxxii. 2, 3, 5, 30; and celebrated by the son of Sirach, Ecclus. xlviii. 17. Bp. Lowth.

—— neither had respect unto him that fashioned it long ago.] That is, to God; who enabled David at first, and his successors, to increase and fortify this city, chose it to be the place of His temple, and promised to continue His special protection over it. Dr. Wells, W. Lowth.

15. — get thee unto this treasurer, even unto Shebna,] The relation which the following prophecy concerning Shebna has to the foregoing seems to be, that it might have been delivered about the same time, and Shebna might be a principal person among those whose luxury and profaneness is severely reprehended by the Prophet, ver. 11—14. Shebna the scribe, mentioned in the history of Hezekiah, chap. xxxvi, seems to have been a different person from this Shebna, the treasurer, or steward of the household. The Eliakim here mentioned was probably the person who, at the time of Sennacherib's invasion, was actually treasurer, the son of Hilkiah. Bp. Lowth. Concerning this Shebna, (for we can hardly conceive him to be the same, though some interpreters have, with Shebna the scribe,) history affords no information; we may suppose him, from what is said, ver. 18, after the deprivation of his office, removed into a foreign country, and dying there in disgrace and ignominy. Vitringa.

4 Be thou ashamed, O Zidon: for the sea hath spoken, even the strength of the sea, saying, I travail not, nor bring forth children, neither do I nourish up young men, nor bring up virgins.

5 As at the report concerning Egypt, so shall they be sorely pained at the report of Tyre.

---

17. — will surely cover thee.] Persons under disgrace or condemnation had their heads covered; see Esther vii. 8; Jer. xiv. 3. W. Lowth. See also note on Job ix. 24.

21. — strengthen him with thy girdle,] See chap. v. 27; and Job xii. 21; and the notes there.

22. And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder;] A key is an emblem of trust; and the expression alludes to the fashion of keys in old time, which were long, and made like a hook: (W. Lowth:) such a key would lie well on the shoulder, and could hardly be commodiously carried otherwise. In allusion to the image of the key as the ensign of power, the unlimited extent of that power is expressed with great clearness, as well as force, by the sole and exclusive authority to open and shut. Our Saviour therefore has upon a similar occasion made use of a like manner of expression; (Matt. xvi. 19;) and in the passage from the Revelation referred to in the margin, has applied to Himself the very words of the Prophet. Bp. Lowth. We must suppose Isaiah therefore to look farther than the immediate completion of his prophecy; to represent Eliakim as a type of the Messiah; and His paternal government or ministry (ver. 21.) as a figure of Christ's glorious kingdom, when all power should be given Him, (ver. 24;) as we may suppose Shebna to represent the unworthy rulers who were over the Jewish Church, and like him were to be driven into foreign lands, spoiled of their former dignities, and to meet with a fate unworthy of themselves, their country, and their religion. Vitringa.

23. — I will fasten him as a nail &c.] See Ezra ix. 8; Ecclus. xiv. 24; Ezek. xv. 3. Where the way of life and houses are more simple, it is necessary to furnish the inside of the several apartments with sets of nails, or large pegs, to dispose of and hang up the moveables in common use. They do not drive these into the Eastern walls, which are too hard if of brick, if of clay too mouldering, but fix them in as they are building. Eliakim is considered a principal stake of this sort, for the support of all vessels destined for common or sacred uses; that is, as the principal support of the whole civil and ecclesiastical polity: the nail, mentioned ver. 25, is of course to be understood of Shebna. Bp. Lowth, Sir J. Chardin.

Chap. XXIII. ver. 1. The burden of Tyre.] This prophecy may best be understood of Nebuchadnezzar's laying siege to Tyre, and taking it. The word "isle" is used in other texts for a maritime place; see note on chap. xi. 11; and, ver. 4, Tyre is called "the sea, the strength of the sea," because the inhabitants were strong at sea, and looked upon it as their proper element. W. Lowth.

—— Howl, ye ships of Tarshish; for it is laid waste,] See note at 1 Kings xxii. 48. The destruction of such a mart as Tyre must have been a great loss to all merchant adventurers. W. Lowth. Concerning Chittim, see the note on Numb. xxiv. 24.

3. — by great waters the seed of Sihor, &c.] An old English translation renders this more clearly, "the seed of Nilus, growing by the abundance of waters, &c." W. Lowth. The Nile is here called Sihor, (as 1 Chron. xiii. 5; Jer. ii. 18,) from the blackness of its waters charged with the mud, which it brings down from Ethiopia when it overflows: see note on Gen. xv. 18. Egypt by its extraordinary fertility, caused by this overflowing, supplied the neighbouring nations with corn; by which branch of trade the Tyrians gained great wealth. Bp. Lowth. Ezekiel, as it were commenting upon these words of Isaiah, "the mart of nations," recounts (chap. xxvii.) the various nations whose commodities were brought to Tyre, and were bought and sold by the Tyrians. It was, as is well known, the most celebrated place in the world for its trade and navigation, the seat of commerce, and the centre of riches. Bp. Newton.

4. — the sea hath spoken, — saying, I travail not, &c.] Tyre is here introduced bemoaning her desolate condition, that she is become as though she never had any children or inhabitants. W. Lowth. Zidon, as the mother city, (see ver. 12,) is supposed to be deeply afflicted with the calamity of her daughter. Bp. Lowth.

5. As at the report concerning Egypt, so shall they be sorely pained at the report of Tyre.] The destruction of Tyre here spoken of being prior to that calamity of Egypt which is usually joined with it in the Prophets; see Ezek. xxix. 18, 19; others render this verse thus; "As soon as the report of Tyre shall come to Egypt, they shall be in great pain;" namely, because of the export of their corn: see note on ver. 3. W. Lowth.

6. Pass ye over] What the Prophet delivers by way of advice is to be understood as a prediction; and St. Jerome asserts, upon the authority of Assyrian histories now lost, that the Tyrians, when they were besieged by Nebuchadnezzar, and saw no hope of escaping, fled to Carthage, or some islands of the Ionian and Ægean sea. Here the Prophet bids them pass to Tarshish, that is, Tartessus in Spain; and (ver. 12.) to Chittim, the islands and countries bordering upon the Mediterranean. Bp. Newton.

7. Is this your joyous city, whose antiquity is of ancient days?] Tyre is mentioned as a strong place, as early as in the days of Joshua; Josh. xix. 29. Strabo calls it the most ancient of the Phenician cities after Sidon. This last is mentioned, Gen. x. 19, and again chap. xlix. 13; it is called by Joshua, chap. xi. 8, "Great Zidon." W. Lowth.

—— her own feet shall carry her afar off to sojourn.] He speaks of Tyre, as of a delicate woman forced to travel on foot into foreign countries. See chap. xlvii. 2; and note on chap. iii. 17. W. Lowth.

9. — to stain the pride of all glory,] Not long before the delivery of this prophecy, the Tyrians had beat the fleets of Shalmaneser with a very inferior force, and held out five years against his siege, when he died; they grew very insolent upon such success, and to this pride of theirs this prophecy of Isaiah may more particularly refer. Dean Prideaux, Dr. Wells.

10. Pass through thy land as a river,] A city, taken by siege, and destroyed, whose walls are demolished, whose policy is dissolved, whose wealth is dissipated, whose people is scattered over the wide country, is here compared to a river, whose banks are broken down, and its waters, let loose and overflowing all the neighbouring plains, are wasted and lost. A "girdle," which collects, binds, and keeps together the loose raiment, when applied to a river, may mean a mound, mole, or artificial dam, which contains the waters, and prevents them from spreading abroad. Bp. Lowth. See the marginal reading.

—— O daughter of Tarshish:] Tyre is, at ver. 12, called "daughter of Zidon," being, as tradition says, a colony from that ancient city; and here (though it might seem natural for a similar reason to call Tarshish "daughter of Tyre") is termed "daughter of Tarshish;" perhaps because, Tyre being ruined, Tarshish was become the superiour city, and might be considered as the metropolis of the Tyrian people; or rather, because of the close connexion and perpetual intercourse between them, according to the latitude of signification, in which the Hebrews use the words "son" and "daughter," to express any sort of conjunction or dependence whatever. Vitringa, Bp. Lowth.

12. — there also shalt thou have no rest.] After Nebuchadnezzar had subdued Tyre and Egypt, we may suppose, as Megasthenes reports, that he carried his arms farther westward; so that, their conqueror thus pursuing them, the Tyrians might well be said to have no rest: however this might be, in aftertimes the Carthaginians, and other colonies with which the Tyrians on this occasion incorporated, (see note on ver. 6,) were continually in a very unsettled tumultuous state. Bp. Newton.

13. Behold the land of the Chaldeans; &c.] The prophet begins here with an exclamation, importing that something new and unexpected is about to follow; which is, not that the predicted overthrow of Tyre should be brought about, as any one might have supposed, by the Assyrians, who were the ruling power in Asia at the time when the prophecy was delivered; but that the people of the Chaldeans, at that period comparatively inconsiderable, fixed originally, from a straggling life, in their place of residence by the Assyrians, and indebted to them for all their improvements after, that "he," namely, this people, should "bring Tyre to ruin." Vitringa.

15. — according to the days of one king:] The word "king" is put here for kingdom, as Dan. vii. 17; viii. 20. The destruction of Tyre was some time after that of Jerusalem; but Jeremiah seems (chap. xxv. 11, 12.) to confine the subjection of all the countries which Nebuchadnezzar conquered to seventy years; some of them were subdued sooner, some later, but the end of that period was the common term for the liberation of them all. Nebuchadnezzar began his conquests in the first year of his reign; from thence to the taking of Babylon by Cyrus are the seventy years; and these limit the duration of the Babylonish monarchy. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

15—17. — after the end of seventy years &c.] Tyre is represented as an harlot, and from thence these figures are taken; the meaning is, that she should recover her liberties and trade, and draw in all nations to deal with her. Bp. Newton. According to the prophecy, the seventy years being expired, we find that the Tyrians were restored to their former privileges, and allowed a king of their own. This favour seems to have been granted them by Darius Hystaspes, in consideration of their usefulness to him in his naval wars: they soon recovered their former prosperity, traffick, power, and riches, and were enabled, on Alexander's invading the East, to make a greater stand against him than all the Persian empire beside. Dean Prideaux.

18. And her merchandise and her hire shall be holiness to the Lord: &c.] The Prophet speaks here, not of what the Tyrians would do immediately on their restitution, but some time after, in the days of the Messiah. So that this is a prophecy concerning the conversion of the Tyrians to the true religion, of the accomplishment of which something is said in Acts xxi. 3—5; and more in other authors. Poole.

Tyre, after its second destruction by Alexander, again recovered its ancient trade and grandeur. It became early Christian with the rest of the neighbouring countries: St. Paul himself found many Christians there. It suffered much in Diocletian's persecution. It was an archbishoprick under the patriarchate of Jerusalem, with fourteen bishopricks under its jurisdiction. Bp. Lowth.

Chap. XXIV. The subject of this chapter some refer to the desolation caused by the invasion of Shalmaneser; others by that of Nebuchadnezzar; and others to the destruction of the city and nation by the Romans. Perhaps it may have a view to all of the three great desolations of the country; the Prophet chiefly employs general images, such as set forth the greatness and universality of the ruin to be brought on, involving all orders and degrees of men, changing entirely the face of things, and destroying the whole polity both religious and civil. Bp. Lowth. The prophecy takes in many very distant views, no one prior period of time setting a bound to the prospect; we may extend it to every age, from the time of its delivery to the very end of the world, and to every nation that is guilty of the same sins with those for which the Jews are threatened; and in the same manner whatever prophecies are called the burdens of Moab, Babylon, &c. we may suppose designed not to terminate there, but to reach to all who should ever after be guilty of the like crimes; a similitude of manners deriving upon all such sinners a similitude of punishment. Wogan.

Ver. 1. Behold, the Lord maketh the earth empty,] The same Hebrew word is in this chapter rendered either earth or land; and "the world," ver. 4, means the same thing; the Israelitish world. See note on chap. xiii. 11. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

5. The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants &c.] The contagion of sin infects the very ground, and brings a curse on it, (ver. 6;) see Gen. iii. 17; Numb. xxxv. 33; Ps. cvii. 34. "The everlasting covenant." See Gen. xvii. 7, where God so calls the covenant between Him and Abraham; because it was to endure for a long succession of years, to last till the New Age, that of the Messiah, should come. W. Lowth. See note on chap. ii. 2.

6. — the inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left.] In the figurative language of the Prophets, burning any thing with fire is put for the consuming thereof by war. Sir I. Newton.

9. — strong drink shall be bitter] The word rendered by us by this general term, as Theodoret and St. Chrysostom, both Syrians, inform us, meant properly palm or date wine, which was and is still much in use in the Eastern countries. It is said here that all enjoyment shall cease; the sweetest wine become bitter to their taste. Bp. Lowth.

13. — as the shaking of an olive tree,] See note on chap. xvii. 6.

14. They shall lift up their voice, &c.] The great distresses brought upon Israel and Judah drove the people away, and dispersed them over the neighbouring countries; they fled to Egypt, Asia Minor, the Islands and coasts of Greece. They had synagogues for their worship in many places, and were greatly instrumental in propagating the knowledge of the true God in these heathen nations, and preparing them for the reception of Christianity. This is what the Prophet seems to mean by the celebration of the name of Jehovah in the waters, and in the uttermost parts: the term "the sea" is used by the Hebrews for the distant nations, the islands, the dwellers on the seacoasts all over the world: for "fires," ver. 15, (for which the margin gives "valleys,") by the slight alteration of one letter in the original, we should probably read "isles:" this is in a great degree justified by the repetition of the same word in the next member of the sentence, with the addition "of the sea;" which is exactly in the manner of the Prophet. Bp. Lowth. See note on chap. xi. 11.

The prophecy appears to point also to the times of the Messiah, and to describe the language of the converted Jews uttered in exultation and thanksgiving for the blessings of Christ and the Gospel. Poole.

16.—But I said, My leanness, &c.] The prophet speaks in the person of the inhabitants of the land still remaining; who should be pursued by Divine vengeance, and suffer repeated distress from the inroads and depredations of their powerful enemies. Bp. Lowth.

17. Fear, and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee,] If they escape one calamity, another shall overtake them; compare Amos v. 19: the images are taken from the different methods of hunting and taking wild beasts anciently in use. The "fear," (or rather "terrour,") was a line strung with feathers of all colours, which, fluttering in the air, scared and frightened the wild beasts into the toils or pit prepared for them. The "pit," or pit-fall, was digged deep in the ground, and covered with green boughs, turf, &c., to deceive them. The "snare," or toils, a series of nets, enclosing at first a great space of ground in which the wild beasts were known to be, and then drawn in by degrees into a narrower compass, till they were at last closely shut up and entangled by them. In the place of Jeremiah corresponding to ver. 18, it is simply "fleeth from the fear," and indeed it does not appear that the terrour was intended to scare by its noise. Bp. Lowth.

18.—the windows from on high are open,] A plain allusion to the description of the deluge, Gen. vii. 11. W. Lowth.

21—23.—the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones &c.] That is, the ecclesiastical and civil polity of the Jews, which shall be destroyed: the nation shall continue in a state of depression and dereliction for a long time, (ver. 22:) the image seems to be taken from the practice of monarchs, to let their captives lie a long time disregarded in their dungeons. God shall at length revisit and restore His people in the last age; and the kingdom of God be then established in such perfection, as wholly to eclipse (ver. 23.) the glory of the temporary, typical, preparative kingdom, formerly subsisting. Bp. Lowth.

23.—before his ancients gloriously.] An allusion to the elders of Israel: compare Rev. iv. 4; xix. 4, 6. W. Lowth.

From this chapter it appears, that abominable and provoking sins are the cause which moves God to make any land empty and waste, and to turn it upside down, and to scatter abroad its inhabitants. Which single consideration should persuade men to fear God and observe His covenant and ordinances, even though they had nothing to hope or fear after this life; since religion is absolutely necessary for our temporal welfare. For if we believe either the sacred Scriptures, or other histories of undoubted credit, we must believe that the incorrigible wickedness and corruption of nations have finally ended in their utter dissolution, and brought priest and people, master and servant, maid and mistress, all upon a level, which is but a larger draught of that confusion expressed in the term "turning the earth upside down." This the nation here threatened found verified to their cost: for, together with their country, they have lost both their royal and priestly government, and the honourable distinctions of their tribes and families. Let us, who serve the same God, take heed of provoking Him by the like sins, lest we incur the like punishment. But let us rather apply our hearts to the practice of those duties of religion and virtue, which will prove the stability of all that is desirable amongst us, and conduce, through the merits of our Saviour, to our eternal happiness, having the promise both of this life, and of that which is to come. Reading.

Chap. XXV. It does not appear that this chapter has any close or immediate connexion with the preceding; but, taking the whole course of prophecies, from the thirteenth to the twenty-fourth chapter inclusive, in which the Prophet foretells the destruction of several cities and nations, enemies to the Jews, and of the land of Judah itself, yet with intimations of a remnant to be saved, and a restoration to be at last effected by a glorious establishment of the kingdom of God; with a view to this extensive scene of God's providence in all its parts, and in all its consequences, the prophet may well be supposed to break out into this song of praise; in which his mind seems to be more possessed with the prospect of future mercies, than with the recollection of the past. Bp. Lowth.

2 For thou hast made of a city an heap; of a defenced city a ruin: a palace of strangers to be no city; it shall never be built.

3 Therefore shall the strong people glorify thee, the city of the terrible nations shall fear thee.

4 For thou hast been a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress, a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall.

5 Thou shalt bring down the noise of strangers, as the heat in a dry place; even the heat with the shadow of a cloud: the branch of the terrible ones shall be brought low.

6 ¶ And in this mountain shall the LORD of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined.

11 And he shall spread forth his hands in the midst of them, as he that swimmeth spreadeth forth his hands to swim: and he shall bring down their pride together with the spoils of their hands.

12 And the fortress of the high fort of thy walls shall he bring down, lay low, and bring to the ground, even to the dust.

Ver. 2. — of a city an heap;] This may apply to Nineveh, Babylon, Ar Moab, or any other fortress possessed by the enemies of God's people. Bp. Lowth. "City" is probably taken for cities in general; and so chap. xxvi. 5; xxvii. 10. W. Lowth.

5. Thou shalt bring down the noise &c.] The sense of this verse more fully expressed is as follows; As a thick cloud interposing tempers the heat of the sun on the burnt soil, so shalt Thou, by the interposition of Thy power, bring low and abate the tumult of the proud, and the triumph of the formidable. Bp. Lowth.

6. — unto all people a feast] This can be no other than the celebration of the establishment of Christ's kingdom, frequently represented in the Gospel under the image of a feast, Matt. viii. 11; Luke xiv. 16; xxii. 29, 30. This sense is fully confirmed by what follows in the next verses, the removing of the vail from the nations, and the abolition of death. The first of which is obviously and clearly explained of the preaching of the Gospel; and the second must mean the blessing of immortality procured for us by Christ, "who hath abolished death, and through death hath destroyed him that had the power of death," 2 Tim. i. 10; Heb. ii. 14. Bp. Lowth.

—— wines on the lees,] That is, kept long on the lees: the word used to express the "lees" in the original signifies the "preservers;" because they preserve the strength and flavour of the wine: see Jer. xlviii. 11. Bp. Lowth.

7. And he will destroy in this mountain] At Jerusalem shall the Gospel begin, by which God shall bring all nations from the ignorance of heathenism to the knowledge of the true God. Dr. Wells.

—— the face of the covering] Compare Job xli. 13.

8. He will swallow up death in victory; &c.] The passages of the New Testament, to which the margin refers, shew how St. Paul and St. John apply this place to the general resurrection and heavenly state: nor will these promises till then be made good. W. Lowth.

The troubles and labours of the present world, and the dissolution of the body, do still take place as warnings and chastisements for sinners; but the sorrows are not comfortless, nor the dissolution final: the dominion of death consisted in this, that it rendered that dissolution final and irreparable; and the devil is said to have the power of death, because, by seducing man to sin, he subjected him to that irretrievable dissolution. That death should be destroyed, and men restored to happiness, by the Messiah, is confessed by very eminent Jewish writers, who therefore apply to Him in the most rigorous sense these words of Isaiah. Dean Stanhope.

9. And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; &c.] This is the triumph of Christ's faithful servants, who have constantly maintained His honour and worship in this present life, against all the opposition of wicked men and devils: when they shall see Him coming in the clouds with power and great glory, to receive them to Himself, it will transport them, as it justly may, with an ecstacy of gladness, and they shall cry out before all the gazing spectators, This is our God, whom we have depended on for the salvation which He promised us. Reading.

10. — Moab shall be trodden down &c.] Rather, "Moab shall be threshed in his place, as the straw is threshed under the wheels of the car;" Bp. Lowth; or by the feet of oxen. The original verb does not signify to "be trodden down," but to "be threshed," as noted in the margin: and straw is too valuable in the East to be "trodden down for the dunghill." Severe calamities inflicted on nations and people are in Scripture often compared to the Oriental manner of threshing corn and straw; see 2 Kings xiii. 7; Amos i. 3; Hab. iii. 12: compare Isaiah. xxi. 10; xli. 15; Dan. ii. 35. Parkhurst.

In this name are intended to be included all the neighbouring states who were enemies of the Jewish nation; that is, in a spiritual sense, all people who should oppose the kingdom of the Messiah. Vitringa. For as the Gentile world, grafted into the Church and proselyted to the true religion, are comprehended in the name of "Israel," so those that continue to reject and oppose it are reasonably couched under the title of "enemies of Israel;" and what might in some respects have a literal relation to the state and circumstances of the nations bordering upon Judea, will be found to have a typical but more important view to the heathen world in general. Dr. Berriman.

11. And he shall spread forth his hands &c.] There is great obscurity in this place: some understand God as the agent, others Moab. Bp. Lowth. Some understand the words of Moab doing all he can to save himself, as swimmers do when in danger of drowning; yet that "God should bring down his pride:" others interpret the whole verse of God; that He should stretch forth His hands and reach His enemies wherever they might be. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXVI. ver. 1. — We have a strong city;] In opposition to the city of the enemy which God had destroyed, chap. xxv. 2; or to "the lofty city," ver. 5. of this chapter; under which similitude are represented those who pride themselves on worldly power and greatness, and are enemies of God's truth. The Church is the city of God, Heb. xii. 22. Compare with this place also, chap. lx. 18; Zech. ii. 5. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth.

2. Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation &c.] The expression denotes the enlarging of the number of believers, and the bringing into the Church daily of "such as should be saved." compare chap. lx. 11; Rev. xxi. 25. W. Lowth.

3. Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee:] Peace is then perfect, when we have it with God, with our neighbour, and with ourselves. This threefold peace of heaven, of charity, of conscience, is the grace and gift of Christ; none is "perfect" and complete but that which He bestows. Wogan.

6. — the feet of the poor,] The planting of the Gospel was a remarkable triumph over the power and the wisdom of men; when "God chose the foolish things of the world to confound the things which were wise; and the weak things of the world to confound the things which were mighty:" and under every advancement of Christ's kingdom, the poor and the humble, those that have despised the world and been despised by it, are to have a particular share in the glory and success of it. W. Lowth.

9. — when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness.] God does not punish for the sake of punishment merely; even His severities are the effects of goodness, and always directed to the advantage of those who feel them, or at least of others, "that they may hear, and fear, and do no more wickedness." The great comprehensive lesson which He intends to teach by every judgment is, an aweful regard to Himself as the moral governour of the world, and the practice of religion. Abp. Secker.

11. — yea, the fire of thine enemies &c.] Yea, that fire of Thy wrath, which Thou reservest for Thine enemies, shall devour them. Bp. Hall.

13. — other lords beside thee have had dominion over us: &c.] We, who had not the grace to submit ourselves wholly to Thy governance, have been justly given over to the tyranny of wicked rulers, who have exacted sinful obedience from us: but we will stick close unto Thee alone, and through Thy gracious aid will hold firm to Thy truth, and yield to no other religion but that which Thou hast prescribed us. Bp. Hall.

19. Thy dead men shall live, &c.] Rather, "Thy dead shall live; my deceased, they shall rise." Bp. Lowth.

is here thus expressed, with manifest opposition to what is said above (ver. 14.) of the tyrants under whom they had groaned, that they should be utterly destroyed, should never be restored to their former power and glory. It should appear, from the Prophet's using this metaphor, that the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead was at that time a popular and common doctrine. Bp. Lowth. The restoration of the Jews, whether after the Babylonish captivity, or after their dispersions in following times, is represented as a rising again from the dead by Ezekiel, chap. xxxvii; and this place of Isaiah may in its primary sense mean no more: but this was undoubtedly one of those texts upon which the ancient Jews grounded their belief of the resurrection, the hope of which was founded on "the law and the Prophets," as St. Paul tells them, Acts xxiv. 14. W. Lowth. The ancient Jews understood this passage so: the Prophet speaks of the figurative and typical resurrection of the Jewish state and church, but the phraseology is taken from the resurrection of the last day, and to it is our attention intended to be directed. Vitringa.

——thy dew is as the dew of herbs,] The force of the comparison seems to be, As the hidden dew of herbs revives them, so shall Thine, O Lord, (compare Hos. xiv. 5,) the power of Thy word and blessing, Thy vivifying Spirit, call to life Thy dead bodies; that is, those of Thy faithful servants. Vitringa.

20. Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, &c.] The Prophet appears here in the person of God, to confirm the hopes and expectations contained in the preceding hymn of the faithful, by an exhortation to patience, and promise of support and deliverance from all the judgments and persecutions, which might in aftertimes befall the people of God, or Church of Christ; to terminate with those terrible but short calamities, which shall be in the days of Antichrist emphatically so called. Vitringa, Dr. Wells.

21. —the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity:] See note on chap. xi. 4.

Chap. XXVII. ver. 1. —leviathan the piercing serpent, even leviathan that crooked serpent;] These seem to be distinct animals; the former probably the crocodile, the other the common serpent or dragon: to them is joined the sea-monster or whale. These are used allegorically for great potentates, enemies and persecutors of the people of God; instruments and types of Satan, so often called the "serpent" in Scripture; this first verse seems connected with the two last of the preceding chapter. Bp. Lowth, W. Lowth.

2. —A vineyard of red wine.] The Church is constantly compared to a vineyard; see chap. v. 1, and the passages there referred to in the margin. W. Lowth. Red wine is more esteemed in the East than white. See note at Prov. xxiii. 31. Harmer.

4, 5. Fury is not in me: &c.] God declares, that there is no anger with Him against His Church; which He had termed (ver. 2.) "a vineyard of red (that is, the most precious) wine;" and for which He testifies (ver. 3.) His constant care and anxiety; that the proper objects of His anger are the thorns and briers, which grow under the vine; that if, in the culture of His vine, these should fall in His way, they should be burnt up and destroyed. By these are represented sinners and hypocrites, unprofitable wood, (see note on chap. ix. 18,) who are thus threatened, unless by a timely and true repentance they should make their peace with God, ver. 5. Vitringa.

7. Hath he smitten him, as he smote those that smote him?] "Him" means Israel. God never makes an utter destruction of His people; (see chap. i. 9;) whereas He threatens His enemies with it, and often puts the sentence in execution, as in the case of Amalek, Exod. xvii. 14; Numb. xxiv. 20. "The east wind," ver. 8, may allude to the "shooting forth" of the branches, being a dry blasting wind; it elsewhere signifies calamities of war and wasting judgments. W. Lowth. The moderation and lenity, with which the severity of God's judgments has been tempered, are set forth, and then the end and design of them, to recover the Jews from idolatry. Bp. Lowth.

9. —when he maketh all the stones of the altar as chalkstones that are beaten in sunder,] This shall be done, says the Prophet, to the abolishing of the very memory of idolatrous worship; see note on chap. ii. 18. So Moses ground the golden calf to powder, Exod. xxxii. 20; and Asa stamped his mother's idol to pieces, 2 Chron. xv. 16. W. Lowth.

10. Yet the defenced city shall be desolate, &c.] The Prophet

12 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that the LORD shall beat off from the channel of the river unto the stream of Egypt, and ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel.

13 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the great trumpet shall be blown, and they shall come which were ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and the outcasts in the land of Egypt, and shall worship the LORD in the holy mount at Jerusalem.

mixes threatenings with the promises, as is usual elsewhere; and tells the Jews, that, before these happy days came, great calamities should befall them. W. Lowth.

——there shall the calf feed, &c.] See note on chap. vii. 25.

11. When the boughs thereof are withered,] This refers still to the vineyard. The scarcity of fuel, especially wood, in most parts of the East, is so great, that they supply it with every thing capable of burning; roots, parings of fruit, withered stalks of herbs and flowers; see Matt. vi. 28—30. Vine twigs are particularly mentioned, as used for dressing their food, by D'Arvieux. See Ezek. xv. 3, 4; John xv. 6. The dressing and pruning of their vines afforded a good supply of the last sort of fuel: but the Prophet says here, that the vines themselves of the beloved vineyard shall be blasted, withered, and broken; and the women shall come and gather them up, and carry them off for firing. Bp. Lowth.

——a people of no understanding:] These calamities are owing to their own wilful blindness. Compare chap. i. 3; vi. 10; Deut. xxxii. 28. W. Lowth.

12. —the stream of Egypt,] See the note on Gen. xv. 18.

——ye shall be gathered] We have much the same scene here as in the latter part of chap. xi. and elsewhere not unfrequently in the Prophets: see note on chap. xi. 11. Assyria and Egypt are mentioned in the next verse, as principal countries from whence the dispersions should return; they are usually joined, as chief oppressors of Israel. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXVIII. ver. 1. Woe to the crown of pride, to the drunkards of Ephraim,] Sebaste, the ancient Samaria, is situated on a long mount of an oval figure, surrounded with a rich valley, and a circle of other hills beyond it: it is probable that this suggested the idea of a chaplet or wreath of flowers worn upon their heads on occasions of festivity; expressed by the proud crown and fading flower of drunkards. That this custom of wearing chaplets in their feasts prevailed among the Jews, as well as among the Greeks and Romans, appears from Wisd. ii. 7, 8. Maundrell, Bp. Lowth.

2. Behold, the Lord hath a mighty and strong one, &c.] Under these resemblances the Prophet represents Shalmaneser, who should carry away the ten tribes captive, and make an utter destruction of that kingdom. Compare chap. xxix. 6; xxx. 30. W. Lowth.

4. —which when he that looketh upon it seeth, &c.] This image in the strongest manner expresses the great ease with which the Assyrians should take the city and the whole kingdom, and the avidity with which they should seize the rich prey without resistance. Bp. Lowth.

5. —unto the residue of his people,] To ver. 5, the prophecy has related to the Israelites, and their approaching destruction; here it turns to the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, who were to continue a kingdom after the final captivity of the Israelites. It begins with a favourable prognostication of their affairs under Hezekiah, but soon changes to reproofs and threatenings for their intemperance, disobedience, and profaneness. Bp. Lowth.

6. —that turn the battle to the gate.] That pursue the enemy to the gates of their own cities. See 1 Sam. xvii. 52; 2 Sam. xi. 23. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

9. Whom shall he teach knowledge? &c.] The scoffers, mentioned ver. 14, seem to be introduced here as uttering their sententious speeches. What, say they, doth He treat us as little children, perpetually inculcating the same elementary lessons, the mere rudiments of knowledge, precept upon precept, &c.? Ver. 11, God may be supposed by His Prophet to retort upon them their own contemptuous mockery, turning it to a sense different from what they intended. Yes, says He, it shall be in fact as you say; ye shall be taught by a strange tongue and stammering lip; ye shall be carried into a strange country, where the language shall be unintelligible to you, and ye shall be obliged to learn like children: My dealing with you shall be according to your words. The sense of ver. 12. is obvious, that God had warned the Jews by His Prophets that their safety and security depended wholly on their trust in God; but they rejected the gracious warning with contempt and mockery. Bp. Lowth.

15. — We have made a covenant with death, &c.] To be in covenant with, is a kind of proverbial expression to denote perfect security from evil and mischief of any sort. See Job v. 23. W. Lowth.

16. — Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, &c.] The Church being wholly built upon Christ, and all our hopes of salvation depending upon Him, He is often spoken of in Holy Writ under the name and notion of a rock or stone: see the passages referred to in the margin. Bp. Beveridge.

—— he that believeth shall not make haste.] He that believeth God's promises, will patiently depend upon God; and not, out of distrust of His mercy, betake himself to any unlawful means of securing himself, as many did, ver. 15. The Septuagint read, "shall not be ashamed." W. Lowth.

17. Judgment also will I lay to the line, &c.] The Prophet carries on the metaphor of building, and tells the scorners, that God would square His actions by the severest rules of justice. W. Lowth.

20. For the bed is shorter — and the covering narrower &c.] Two proverbial expressions, importing that all worldly comforts are insufficient to cure the disorders they are applied to, and human devices too short to secure us against the hand of Providence, whenever that designs to punish. W. Lowth.

21. For the Lord shall rise up as in mount Perazim,] The destruction of the Philistines there is, in the passages referred to in the margin, compared to a "breach of waters," much the same comparison as is here used, ver. 19. The extraordinary manifestations of God's power there and at Gibeon were for the deliverance of His people; but now God will act contrary to His usual proceedings of grace and mercy. W. Lowth.

23. Give ye ear, and hear my voice;] The foregoing discourse, consisting of severe reproofs and threatenings to the Jews for their vices, and profane contempt of God's warnings by His messengers, the Prophet concludes with an explanation and defence of God's method of dealing with His people in a parable; in which He employs a variety of images, taken from the science of agriculture. As the husbandman uses various methods in preparing his land, and adapting it to the several kinds of seed to be sown, with a due observation of times and seasons; and, when he has gathered in his harvest, employs methods as various in separating the corn from the straw and the chaff by different instruments, according to the nature of the different sorts of grain: so God, with unerring wisdom, instructs, admonishes, and corrects His people; chastises and punishes them in various ways, as the exigence of the case requires; now more moderately, now more severely; always tempering justice with mercy; in order to reclaim the wicked, to improve the good, and finally to separate the one from the other. Bp. Lowth.

25. — the fitches,] A colloquial corruption of "vetches:" a small kind of pea. Dr. Johnson.

7 ¶ And the multitude of all the nations that fight against Ariel, even all that fight against her and her munition, and that distress her, shall be as a dream of a night vision.

8 It shall even be as when an hungry man dreameth, and, behold, he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and, behold, he drinketh; but he awaketh, and, behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetite: so shall the multitude of all the nations be, that fight against mount Zion.

26. For his God doth instruct him] "The most High hath ordained husbandry," saith the Son of Sirach, Ecclus. vii. 15. All nations have agreed in attributing agriculture, the most useful of all sciences, to the invention and to the suggestions of their deities; together with all the arts and helps attendant upon it. Passages to this effect are very frequent in profane writers. Bp. Lowth, Vitringa.

27, 28. In these verses four methods of threshing are mentioned by different instruments; the flail, the drag, the wain, and the treading of the cattle. The staff or flail was used for the grain that was too tender to be treated in the other methods. The drag consisted of a sort of frame of strong planks, made rough at the bottom with hard stones or iron; it was drawn by horses or oxen over the corn sheaves spread on the floor, the driver sitting upon it. The wain was much like the former, but had wheels with iron teeth or edges like a saw. The last method of treading out the corn by oxen is well known from the law of Moses, Deut. xxv. 4. For "horsemen," ver. 28, we should read, with the Syriack, Vulgate, and others, "hoofs." Bp. Lowth.

29. This also cometh forth from the Lord of hosts, &c.] Since the Lord of hosts hath given this wit and understanding to plain men, for the management of their affairs, in due times and fit ways; how much more shall He, who is infinite in wisdom, contrive His own works, both of mercy and judgment, with men? Bp. Hall.

Chap. XXIX. This and the four following chapters have an immediate aspect to Sennacherib's invasion: in the beginning of this chapter the Prophet describes the distress during the siege, and the enemy's sudden disappointment: he then proceeds to upbraid the Jews for their hypocrisy and stupidity in "not discerning the signs of the times," as our Saviour speaks, Matt. xvi. 3; nor observing the hand of Providence, evidently shewing itself both in mercies and judgments; which circumstances are very applicable to the times of our Saviour's preaching: he then foretells better times for those who are piously disposed, and concludes with such promises of grace and favour to the meek and humble, as plainly relate to the times of the Gospel. W. Lowth.

Ver. 1. Woe to Ariel,—the city where David dwelt!] "Ariel" signifies "the lion of God," and was a name given to the altar, (see Ezek. xliii. 15, and the margin there,) because it devoured the sacrifices: it is here put for the city of Jerusalem itself, which may be considered as the seat of the fire of God, which should issue from thence to consume His enemies; compare chap. xxxi. 9. This may be meant by what follows, ver. 2, "it shall be unto me as Ariel," or "as the hearth of the great altar;" or an intimation of distant events may be given in this obscure passage, and the city said to resemble the altar, as being all on flame or covered with blood and carcases, as it was to be in aftertimes, when taken by the Chaldeans and by the Romans. Some, according to the common derivation of the word, "the lion of God," or the "strong lion," suppose it to signify the strength of the place. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

——add ye year to year; let them kill sacrifices.] Ironically, Go on year after year; keep your solemn feasts; yet know, that God will punish you for your hypocritical worship, consisting of mere form, destitute of true piety. This might perhaps be delivered at the time of some great feast, when they were thus employed. Bp. Lowth.

4. And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, &c.] In prophetick language, speaking with a faint voice out of the dust, stands for being in a weak and low condition. Sir I. Newton. Hezekiah sends ambassadours to bespeak the favour of the king of Assyria in very submissive terms, (2 Kings xviii. 14,) and is much humbled by the threats of Rabshakeh, &c. 2 Kings xix. 1; Is. xxxvii. 1. W. Lowth, Bp. Wilson.

8.—as when an hungry man dreameth, and, behold, he eateth; &c.] The Assyrians had swallowed up Jerusalem in imagination; but God intended suddenly to disappoint their hopes, and send them away empty and confounded. W. Lowth.

9. Stay yourselves, and wonder; cry ye out, and cry: they are drunken, but not with wine; &c.] The Prophet upbraids the Jews for their carelessness and stupidity, and compares them to men intoxicated. W. Lowth. Their drunkenness is that drunkenness of intellect, which makes them blind to the prophecies relating to the Messiah, and to themselves, and keeps them to this hour in expectation of a different Messiah from Him whom they crucified. Bp. Horsley. See note on chap. li. 21.

11. And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, &c.] Rabbies of great antiquity and authority have observed from this text, that the knowledge of their prophecies shall be taken from them, and be lost with the Hebrew, their native language: but the Messiah shall restore to them the understanding of both, and open the sealed book. Compare ver. 18. with what is said ver. 10, 11, &c. Bp. Chandler. See note on chap. viii. 16.

14. — the wisdom of their wise men shall perish,] Since this people have trusted to their own wisdom, the very wisest of them shall be blinded; they shall bring down destruction upon themselves by their very wisdom. Bp. Wilson.

How remarkably was this verified, when the rabbies and elders of the Jews, fatally mistaking, applied to their ceremonies and traditions, and rejected the Gospel! and ever since have the same orders minded little else than fabulous stories, and vented trifles for profound mysteries. W. Lowth.

17. — Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest?] A proverbial saying, expressing a great revolution of things, and explained with great probability to have its principal view, beyond the events then near at hand, to the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles. The first were the vineyard of God cultivated and watered by Him in vain, afterwards to be given up and become a wilderness; (see chap. v. 1—7;) the last had been originally barren, but were by the grace of God to become fruitful. See Matth. xxi. 43; Rom. xi. 30, 31. Bp. Lowth.

21. — lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate,] Who plot mischief against those that sit at the city gates to distribute justice; (*W. may mean their seeking refuge and protection from Egypt without any direction from God; (see ver. 2;) or, in general, forming schemes to secure themselves, by ungodly methods, called a "covering" or "hiding-place of falsehood:" see chap. xxviii. 15, 17; xxix. 15. W. Lowth.

4. For his princes were at Zoan, and his ambassadors came to Hanes.] These are principal cities of Egypt. "Hanes" is called, Jer. ii. 16; xliii. 7; Ezek. xxx. 18, "Tahapanes," "Tahpanhes," and "Tehaphnehes." "Zoan" is mentioned, chap. xix. 11, 13. W. Lowth. See the note on the latter place. So fond were the Jews of their Egyptian allies, that even the good Hezekiah sent ambassadours to treat with them for succours against Sennacherib. Thus the best of men are too apt, on the first appearance of danger or surprise, to have recourse to means not warranted by the laws of God; to seek to other aids than those which the grace of God has provided. Wogan.

This confederacy might perhaps be owing to the prevalent sway of the "princes" and great men, a chief of whom was in all likelihood Shebna, against whom is denounced that severe prophecy, chap. xxii. 15. Dr. Wells.

5. They were all ashamed of a people that could not profit them, &c.] The Egyptians in alliance with the Ethiopians did assist the Jews against Sennacherib, but they were both entirely routed. See chap. xx. 5. W. Lowth.

6. The burden of the beasts of the south:] The word "burden" here seems to be used in its proper sense; the load, not the oracle. Bp. Lowth.

——from whence come — the viper and fiery flying serpent,] The wilderness that lies between Egypt and Judea is thus described by Moses, Deut. viii. 15. W. Lowth. This was designed to be a kind of barrier between the Israelites and Egypt, of which the Lord says, Deut. xvii. 16, "Ye shall henceforth return no more that way." Bp. Lowth.

Concerning the "fiery flying serpent," see note on Numb. xxi. 6. Niebuhr mentions a sort of serpents, as does Pliny also, that twirl themselves by the tail to a branch of one date tree, and so spring to the branches of another; hence the modern Arabs call them "flying serpents:" Anson speaks of flying serpents at the island of Quibo; they "darted themselves" from the boughs of trees upon man and beast, but were without wings. Probably these mentioned by Isaiah here, and chap. xiv. 29, were of this species. Parkhurst. They are called "flying serpents" from their springing up like a dart. W. Lowth.

7. — therefore have I cried concerning this,] Or, as in the margin, "I have cried to her," that is, to Jerusalem, that their best security will be to be quiet, and see the salvation which God will work for them; see ver. 15. W. Lowth.

10. — Prophesy not unto us right things, &c.] These were not the very words they spake, but this was the true meaning of what they said: see their behaviour to Jeremiah, Jer. xx. 1; xxxviii. 4, 6; to Amos, Amos vii. 10; and to Micaiah, 1 Kings xxii. 8, 27. W. Lowth.

They conferred all their favours upon such prophets as took care to say nothing that was displeasing or contrary to the politicks of the times, but represented God as favourable to their designs, when He was utterly against them: but the plain-dealing preachers, who spoke to them the word of the Lord without reserve or disguise, were the objects of their hatred and aversion. Reading.

13. — as a breach ready to fall, swelling out in a high wall,] The buildings in Asia in general consist of little better than what we call mud-walls; see Sir J. Chardin's note on chap. ix. 10. Thevenot says much the same of the houses in Persia. This shews how obvious and expressive the image is. The Psalmist uses the same, to imply sudden and utter destruction, Ps. lxii. 3. Bp. Lowth.

18. —therefore will the Lord wait, &c.] The seeming incoherence of the prophetick style would be avoided in many places by regarding the various sense of the Hebrew particles more carefully than interpreters have generally done. The particle rendered therefore may be more clearly here, and in some other places, translated nevertheless; (W. Lowth;) or, in this place perhaps, after this. Dr. Blayney.

19. For the people shall dwell in Zion &c.] From this verse to the twenty-seventh, follow many gracious promises of mercy, several of which cannot with propriety be applied to the prosperous times of Hezekiah's reign, which succeeded to the great deliverance; but we are rather to suppose the Prophet, taking a hint from them, and carried on to the better days that were to be under the Gospel. W. Lowth.

22. Ye shall defile also the covering of thy graven images &c.] See note on chap. ii. 18.

24. —that ear the ground] "Ear," that is, plough. See the note on Gen. xlv. 6. Concerning winnowing, see note at Ruth iii. 2; Ps. i. 4.

From this passage it appears, that asses as well as oxen were anciently employed in Judea for ploughing, and so they are in the East to this day. Dr. Russell says, that after the camel, the ass may be reckoned the next in importance among the Syrian beasts of burden. Large caravans of them are employed in bringing provisions from the villages: they serve also for the plough. And Niebuhr tells us, that near Bagdad he twice saw an ass harnessed to a plough together with oxen. Parkhurst.

25. —there shall be — rivers and streams of waters] Rain, and dew, and living water, are put in prophetick language for the graces and doctrines of the Spirit, and the defect of rain for spiritual barrenness. Sir I. Newton. See ver. 23.

—— in the day of the great slaughter, when the towers fall.] This must refer to the great and terrible destruction of God's enemies, which shall be hereafter, when the strong fortifications, or perhaps the great ones of the earth, denoted here by the towers, shall fall. See Rev. xiv. 20; xix. 21. W. Lowth.

26. —the light of the moon &c.] The Hebrew poets, to express happiness, prosperity, advancement of kingdoms, &c. make use of images taken from the most striking parts of nature, from the heavenly bodies, the sun, moon, and stars, shining with increased splendour, and never setting; new heavens and a new earth are created, and a brighter age commences: calamity, the overthrow and destruction of kingdoms, are represented by opposite images. See notes on chap. xiii. 10, 13. Bp. Lowth.

27. Behold, the name of the Lord cometh from far, burning with his anger, &c.] From hence to the end of the chapter follows a lively description of God's vengeance, devouring the Assyrian army like fire, and consuming it all at once. W. Lowth.

28. —to sift the nations with the sieve of vanity:] The sieve or van of the ancients was a large instrument somewhat like a shovel, with a long handle, with which they tossed the corn mixed with the chaff and chopped straw into the air, that the wind might separate them. "But the van," Kimchi observes, "with which God will winnow the nations, will be the van of emptiness or perdition: for nothing useful shall remain behind, but all shall come to nothing and perish. In like manner, a bridle is designed to guide the horse in the right way; but the bridle which God will here put into the jaws of the people, shall not direct them aright, but shall, in His judgment on their stubbornness, make them err, and lead them into destruction." This latter image the Prophet applies to the same subject, chap. xxxvii. 29. Bps. Lowth and Hall.

29. Ye shall have a song, as in the night when a holy solemnity is kept;] The Jewish festivals were kept from even to even, Levit.

xxiii. 32. The feast of the Passover is chiefly alluded to here, which was kept in the evening, and the supper concluded with a hymn, Matt. xxvi. 30. W. Lowth.

32. And in every place where the grounded staff shall pass, &c.] In an old English translation it is much plainer, "Whithersoever he goes, the rod shall cleave unto him, which the Lord shall lay upon him." The words translated "the grounded staff," signify such a rod or stroke as sinks deep, and makes lasting marks in the flesh. W. Lowth.

The verse may be thus paraphrased: So shall the Lord smite him again, and smite him soundly and deep, so that the prints of His staff shall be seen upon him; and, wheresoever the Lord shall lay His heavy hand upon him, the judgment shall be entertained with the joy and acclamation of all his oppressed neighbours, as a benefit to themselves; and in all his terrifying battles will the Lord, with His staff of vengeance, fight against him. Bp. Hall.

—— battles of shaking] "Shaking," or stretching out, the hand of the Lord. See chap. xix. 16. Parkhurst.

33. — Tophet is ordained of old; &c.] See note at 2 Kings xxiii. 10.

The sense of the verse may be given thus: For God from the foundations of the world hath ordained a place and state of torment for His wicked and reprobate enemies; yea, for the proud king of Assyria, and all those cruel tyrants which do here oppress His church, hath God prepared a woeful and inconceivably dreadful condemnation in hell fire: which is poorly represented in that hideous valley of Ben-Hinnom, wherein with much shrieking and horrour the bodies of men are consumed in the fire: but, alas, what is that flame to this unquenchable one, which is kindled by the breath of the Lord as with streams of brimstone; and therefore never can go out, never can be abated! Bp. Hall.

Chap. XXXI. ver. 1. — stay on horses, and trust in chariots,] See note on chap. ii. 6, 7. Egypt is described here, and elsewhere in Scripture, as abounding in horses; it has been remarked that profane writers have not much noticed this circumstance; but it must be remembered, that the period they chiefly treat of was subsequent to the cutting up of the country with the multitude of canals, which would greatly alter its face, and which alone is mentioned by Herodotus as rendering it unfit for horses; we may add also the circumstance of the seat of government's being, under the latter kings of Egypt, fixed at a place very near upon the sea, Alexandria. Bochart, Vitringa.

5. As birds flying, &c.] Compare Deut. xxxii. 11. W. Lowth.

—— and passing over he will preserve it.] Most interpreters observe in this place an allusion to the deliverance which God vouchsafed His people, when, going through the land of Egypt to smite the firstborn, He "passed over" the houses of the Israelites. The similitude designed in this verse seems to be, As the mother bird spreads her wings to cover her young, throws herself before them, and opposes the rapacious bird that assaults them, so shall the Lord defend Jerusalem, protecting and delivering, springing forward and rescuing her. In the same manner may the act of "passing over," Exod. xii. 23, be supposed to consist in the Lord's springing forward to arrest the hand of the destroying angel. Bp. Lowth.

8. Then shall the Assyrian fall with the sword, not of a mighty man;] Literally rendered, "of no man." Bp. Lowth. See note on chap. x. 15. He shall not fall by any mortal power, but by the hand of an angel, chap. xxxvii. 36. If we follow the common opinion, that the Assyrian army was destroyed by a pestilential disease, the immediate stroke of Heaven, the expressions here exactly agree with the description of the angel who smote

Chap. XXXII. ver. 1. Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment.] Under the government and example of Hezekiah, inferiour princes and magistrates shall execute their office with integrity and faithfulness; and this prince, ver. 2, shall be a refuge to us when the storms of calamity overtake us. Accordingly, the wisdom and piety of Hezekiah was a support and comfort to his subjects; but what follows, especially in ver. 3, 4, relates to happier times than Hezekiah ever lived to enjoy; his reign can only be glanced at here, as an image and shadow of the great improvements in grace and holiness, which belong to the Gospel times, under the government of Christ, and the assistance of His Spirit. W. Lowth.

The Messiah is "the righteous King" to come, by whom (as ver. 3.) the curse shall be removed from them that heard but understood not, and saw but perceived not. Bp. Chandler. See notes on chap. viii. 16; xxix. 11.

The first and second verses may be thus paraphrased: 1. Behold, the Messiah, the true King of His Church, shall reign in righteousness; and those, who shall have the administration thereof under Him, shall rule in due equity and moderation:

2. And that man, God and man, shall be a sure refuge to His elect in all their distresses and calamities; and shall be a gracious refreshing to them, even as a clear river, &c. Bp. Hall.

4. — the rash] The inconsiderate. Dr. Waterland.

—— the tongue of the stammerers &c.] The most rude and illiterate shall discourse clearly and intelligibly of God and of their duty. W. Lowth.

This will well apply likewise to the first followers of Christ, who by the miraculous power of the Spirit, from plain, simple, illiterate men, became endued at once with such wisdom and eloquence, as none of their adversaries were able to gainsay or resist. Wogan.

9. Rise up, ye women that are at ease; hear my voice, ye careless daughters;] The Prophet returns to the calamities that should befall, addressing, as some think, the careless and delicate women of his time, (as chap. iii. 16;) as others say, the cities of Judea, under this figurative name. Vitringa.

20. Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters, &c.] This sowing in watery places exactly answers the manner of planting rice; for they sow it upon the water; and before sowing, while the earth is covered with water, they cause the ground to be trodden by oxen, horses, and asses; and this is the way of preparing the ground for sowing. As they sow the rice on the water, they transplant it in the water. Sir J. Chardin.

The Prophet foresees and pronounces blessed the lot of those that should go out in the Gospel times to sow the word in all lands, when the desert of the Gentiles should be changed into a fruitful field, and the parched ground become springs of water, chap. xxx. 25; xxxv. 7. We may suppose him to contrast withal this happy prospect with his own fruitless labours in preaching to the obstinate and impenitent Jews. Vitringa.

Chap. XXXIII. We may call this chapter a triumphant ode upon the destruction of Sennacherib's army before Jerusalem. The Prophet sets forth the several scenes of that transaction with all the beauties of poetical description. At the beginning he addresses himself to Sennacherib, "Woe to thee that spoilest," &c. expressing the injustice of his ambitious designs, and the sudden disappointment of them. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 2. O Lord, be gracious unto us; &c.] The Jews are here introduced offering up their earnest supplications to God in their present distressful condition; with expressions of their trust and confidence in His protection. Bp. Lowth.

—— be thou their arm] Several versions give it "our arm or strength." Bp. Lowth.

3. — at the lifting up of thyself the nations were scattered.] It has been usual to consider God the person addressed here; and the Assyrians, ver. 4: it seems better to consider the Prophet, or God Himself, to be addressing Sennacherib, and threatening him, that notwithstanding the terrour he had occasioned in the invaded countries, (the people mentioned ver. 3,) yet he should fall, and become an easy prey (ver. 4.) to him (that people) whom he had intended to subdue. Bp. Lowth.

5, 6. The Lord is exalted; &c.] A chorus of Jews is introduced, acknowledging the mercy and power of God, who had undertaken to protect them; extolling it in opposition to the boasted power of their enemies; and celebrating the wisdom and piety of their king Hezekiah, who had placed his confidence in the favour of God. Bp. Lowth.

6. — shall be the stability of thy times, — the fear of the Lord is his treasure.] Such variation of persons, as we have here, and above, ver. 2, is not uncommon. Vitringa, W. Lowth. See Bp. Lowth's note on Deut. xxxii. 5.

7—10. In these verses the Prophet describes the disappointment of Hezekiah's ambassadours, who humbly sued for peace, (which indeed had been bought, 2 Kings xviii. 14—16, though Sennacherib would not stand to the agreement;) the damp that struck upon the spirits of the whole nation; and, ver. 10, the immediate interposition of God when matters became desperate. W. Lowth.

10. Now will I rise, saith the Lord;] God Himself is again introduced, declaring that He will interpose in this critical situation of affairs, and disappoint the vain designs of the enemies of His people, by discomfiting them and utterly consuming them. Bp. Lowth.

11, 12. Ye shall conceive chaff, &c.] Here follows, still in the person of God, which however falls at last into that of the Prophet, a description of the dreadful apprehensions of the wicked in those times of distress and imminent danger, finely contrasted with the confidence and security of the righteous, and their trust in the promises of God, that He will be their never-failing strength and protector. Bp. Lowth. So will the second coming of the Messiah to judge the world, which brings joy and gladness to such as look for His salvation, be dreadful and terrible to His opposers. Dr. Berriman. And the exclamations of the "sinners in Zion," ver. 14, may be well applied to the terrours of hell torments, which, when the consciences of sinners begin to be awakened, fill them with just apprehension of the Divine wrath. W. Lowth. The Chaldee Paraphrast renders "everlasting burnings," "the gehenna of everlasting fire." Bp. Lowth. See notes on chap. xxx. 33; lxvi. 24.

Lowth, Bp. Lowth.*

19. — A people of deeper speech than thou canst perceive;] The Hebrew expresses a foreign language by a "deep lip" or "speech;" our translators render it, "a strange speech," Ezek. iii. 5, 6. W. Lowth.

22. For the Lord is our judge, &c.] We must observe that in this verse, as in many other places of the Old Testament, the name of the Lord thrice repeated has been usually thought to refer to the mystery of the blessed Trinity. Vitringa. This passage is parallel to the form of blessing given Numb. vi. 24—26. Bp. Kidder. See notes on that place.

23. Thy tacklings are loosed; &c.] Having compared the Assyrian army to a naval force, ver. 21, the Prophet persists in that metaphor, and describes them as in a shipwrecked condition, the spoil of the wreck to be divided among the citizens of Jerusalem, even the sick and diseased of them throwing aside their infirmities, and recovering strength enough to hasten to the general plunder. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

24. — the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity.] The last sentence is parallel to the former, and expresses the same sense in other words: sickness being considered as a visitation from God, and punishment for sin, the forgiveness of sin is equivalent to the removal of a disease. We find them thus coupled, Ps. ciii. 3; and our blessed Saviour reasons with the Jews on the same principle, Mark ii. 9. Bp. Lowth.

The fulfilment of this prophecy appears from the history of the great event given by the Prophet: it is plain that Hezekiah, by his treaty with Sennacherib, had stripped himself of his whole treasure, 2 Kings xviii. 15, 16: his "exceeding much riches," afterwards, 2 Chron. xxxii. 27, cannot be otherwise accounted for, than by the prodigious spoil that was taken on the destruction of the Assyrian army. Bp. Lowth.

Chap. XXXIV. This chapter and the next make one distinct prophecy; an entire, regular, and beautiful poem, consisting of two parts: the first, containing a denunciation of Divine vengeance against the enemies of the people or church of God; the second, describing the flourishing state of the church consequent upon the execution of those judgments. The event foretold is represented as of universal concern; all nations are called upon to attend to the declaration of it; and the wrath of God is denounced against all the nations, that is, against all those who had provoked to anger the defender of the cause of Zion. Among those Edom is particularly specified. Accordingly, the Edomites were, with the neighbouring nations, ravaged and laid waste by Nebuchadnezzar: (see Jer. xxv. 15—26; Mal. i. 3, 4:) and this may be the event which the Prophet has primarily in view in chap. xxxiv; but this event seems by no means to come up to the terms of the prophecy, or to justify so high-wrought and so terrible a description: also, that the thirty-fifth chapter has a view beyond any thing that could be the immediate consequence of this event, is plain from every part of it, and especially from ver. 5, 6. It seems therefore that (Edom and Bozrah being put by a common figure for God's enemies in general) this prophecy has a farther view to events still future, to some great revolutions to be effected in later times, antecedent to that more perfect state of the kingdom of God upon earth, which the Holy Scriptures warrant us to expect, and serving to introduce it. Bp. Lowth. The second and third verses may very fitly be applied to "the battle of that great day of God Almighty," mentioned Rev. xvi. 14, compared with chap. xvii. 14; xix. 19; as do several parts of this chapter correspond with several verses of Revelation, chap. xvii, xviii. W. Lowth.

Ver. 3. Their slain also shall be cast out, &c.] The prophet, in the description of this terrible judgment, begins with the common circumstances, which attend the slaughter made by a victorious enemy; ver. 4, he rises in tone, and, borrowing his images from original chaos, (as is usual in describing the overthrow of kingdoms, see notes on chap. xiii. 10, 13,) goes on to represent, as it were, the dissolution of all things: presently, (ver. 5—7,) a vast and splendid sacrifice is introduced, of such animals as best represent the pride, cruelty, insolence of tyrants, leaders of the nations hostile to God; next is this complete destruction represented by allusion to the overthrow of Sodom, (ver. 9, 10,) and the whole concludes (ver. 11, to the end) with a picture of the most gloomy solitude and frightful devastation. Bp. Lowth.

5. —my sword shall be bathed] In the blood of these people: the same word is rendered in Jer. xlvi. 10, "shall be made drunk." This is said to be done "in heaven," because it was there decreed to be done. Poole, Bp. Hall.

6. The sword of the Lord is filled with blood, &c.] God shall take full vengeance on His enemies; His sword shall be, as it were, fed with the blood of His great and noted adversaries: this slaughter of His shall be like to that of an universal sacrifice, which shall be killed on the altar of the land of Edom, and all the regions of His proud opposites. Bp. Hall.

—— a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea.] Considering the original sense of these words, they may fitly be applied to a place of slaughter: "Edom" signifying red, as blood is; and "Bozrah," a vintage; which in the prophetick idiom often denotes God's vengeance on the wicked. See particularly chap. lxiii. 3, in which chapter these words are again joined together. W. Lowth. Ezekiel has manifestly imitated this passage of Isaiah, chap. xxxix. 17, 18. The sublime author of the Revelation (chap. xix. 17, 18.) has taken this image from Ezekiel rather than Isaiah. Bp. Lowth. The destruction of Edom is foretold in a strain not less hyperbolical than this of Isaiah by Jeremiah, chap. xlix. 7—22; by Ezekiel, chap. xxxv. and xxv. 12; and by Obadiah. Jos. Mede.

11. But the cormorant and the bittern shall possess it; &c.] Beside the passages referred to in the margin, with this verse and with ver. 13—15, compare chap. xiii. 21; xiv. 23. W. Lowth.

—— the stones of emptiness.] The Hebrew word Eben, which signifies a "stone," is sometimes taken for a "plummet;" as Zech. iv. 10. That sense will best agree with this place, and makes it exactly parallel with 2 Kings xxi. 13, where, as here, the instruments of building are applied to destroying. W. Lowth. The meaning is, God shall condemn it to perpetual confusion and ruin, never to be either built or inhabited. Bp. Hall.

16. Seek ye out of the book of the Lord,] God's omniscience is often described in Scripture as a register book, wherein every occurrence is exactly set down. See chap. lxv. 6; Deut. xxxii. 34; Ps. lvi. 8. So this prophecy, says the text, is a register of the fate of Idumea; whosoever in aftertimes will compare the event with this, will find every circumstance here foretold punctually fulfilled. W. Lowth. Such seems to be the drift of the exhortation, directed here by the Prophet to men of but little faith, who were too apt to receive his assertion with doubt and caution. Some have supposed Isaiah here to refer them to all the passages of Holy Writ which threaten Edom. Vitringa.

—— my mouth it hath commanded, and his spirit it hath gathered them.] Some manuscripts give, "The mouth of the Lord hath commanded," &c. with which reading the Septuagint agrees. Bp. Lowth. By "them" are intended the creatures mentioned in verses 13—15. W. Lowth.

17. And he hath cast the lot for them, and his hand hath divided it unto them by line:] That is, with the same exactness as He divided the Holy Land by lot among the children of Israel, Josh. xviii. 8; Ps. lxxviii. 55. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXXV. As the judgments denounced in the last chapter belong not only to "Idumea," but to later times and occurrences, so the new face of things described in this is to be applied to the flourishing state of the Church, or golden age of the Gospel, to commence from our Saviour's appearing, and to be more fully completed when all His enemies "shall be destroyed." When the Divine justice is made manifest in punishing incorrigible sinners, it is usual to describe it as matter of rejoicing to the righteous. See Ps. lviii. 10, 11; Jer. li. 10, 48. And here the Church, which had before been desolate and forlorn, a "wilderness" and "solitary place," (see Rev. xii. 14,) is said to be about to rejoice, when these judgments shall be executed upon God's enemies and her persecutors. W. Lowth, Bp. Wilson. See the note on chap. xxix. 17.

Ver. 5, 6. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, &c.] This prophecy very fully expresses the power of miracles, with which our Saviour was to be dignified, in curing all manner of diseases, of which the Prophet here names only four, to give a specimen of the rest; and it seems as if he had chosen these sorts before others, because throughout the Scriptures we do not find that any Prophet did the like. Dean Allix. Our Lord's appeal, in His answer to the Baptist's messengers, lies not to miracles in general, but to such as were more particularly predicted of the Messiah. Dean Stanhope.

6, 7.—in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the parched ground shall become a pool, &c.] The cultivation and watering of desert and thirsty lands is so apt and constant an emblem, in the language of parables, to designate the more plentiful effusion of Divine grace and spiritual gifts, that expressions of this kind hardly need explanation: those that follow here are analogous, and serve only to set forth more at large, and with additional ornament, the same thing. Bp. Lowth. See notes on chap. xxx. 25; xliv. 3.

8.—but it shall be for those: &c.] The words here may be better translated, as the marginal rendering gives it in part, "But He (that is, God) shall go along with them in the way, and the simple shall not err therein." W. Lowth. Some ancient manuscripts are favourable to this way of taking the passage, and our old English versions translate to this purpose. Bp. Lowth. The meaning of the "wayfaring man," or the "simple's not erring," (as figuratively applicable to the Christian Church,) is, that the duties required of us by God are so plain and evident, that he, who sets himself to the practice of them, though he be of slow understanding, cannot but know them; or, again, that the condition of the covenant required of us under Christ is not such, as that any man through weakness, ignorance, or involuntary errour, should lose his part of the promise of that covenant; but only deliberate sins against grace and against knowledge are imputed to any man to his ruin. Dr. Hammond. See note on Deut. xxx. 14.

9. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast] We may understand to be implied by this, that men of brutish appetites, of cruel and voracious tempers, shall despise Christ's preaching; neither shall any that delight in wickedness, or trust in themselves and their own reason, the haughty scorners, receive His doctrine, or embrace the Gospel, but the godly alone and humble. Bps. Chandler and Wilson.

10. And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads:] The last phrase may allude to the crowns or garlands put on the heads of newly married persons; and used at other times of publick rejoicing: compare 1 Thess. ii. 19. The former part to the expressions of joy used in going up to Jerusalem on the solemn festivals. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXXVI. The history of the invasion of Sennacherib, and of the miraculous destruction of his army, which makes the subject of so many of Isaiah's prophecies, is very properly inserted here, as affording the best light to many parts of those prophecies; and as almost necessary to introduce the prophecy in keh from Lachish to Jerusalem unto king Hezekiah with a great army. And he stood by the conduit of the upper pool in the highway of the fuller's field.

3 Then came forth unto him Eliakim, Hilkiah's son, which was over the house, and Shebna the ‖ scribe, and Joah, Asaph's son, the recorder.

‖ Or, secretary.

4 ¶ And Rabshakeh said unto them, Say ye now to Hezekiah, Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, What confidence is this wherein thou trustest?

[b] Ezek. 29. 6, 7.

7 But if thou say to me, We trust in the LORD our God: is it not he, whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away, and said to Judah and to Jerusalem, Ye shall worship before this altar?

‖ Or, engage.

8 Now therefore give ‖ pledges, I pray thee, to my master the king of Assyria, and I will give thee two thousand horses, if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them.

9 How then wilt thou turn away the face of one captain of the least of my master's servants, and put thy trust on Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?

10 And am I now come up without the LORD against this land to destroy it? the LORD said unto me, Go up against this land, and destroy it.

11 ¶ Then said Eliakim and Shebna and Joah unto Rabshakeh, Speak, I pray thee, unto thy servants in the Syrian language; for we understand it: and speak not to us in the Jews' language, in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

12 ¶ But Rabshakeh said, Hath my master sent me to thy master and to thee to speak these words? hath he not sent me to the men that sit upon the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piss with you?

13 Then Rabshakeh stood, and cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and said, Hear ye the words of the great king, the king of Assyria.

15 Neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the LORD, saying, The LORD will surely deliver us: this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

16 Hearken not to Hezekiah: for thus saith the king of Assyria, ‖ † Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me: and eat ye every one of his vine, and every one of his fig tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his own cistern;

20 Who are they among all the gods of these lands, that have delivered their land out of my hand, that the LORD should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?

21 But they held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

the thirty-seventh chapter, being the answer of God to Hezekiah's prayer, which could not be properly understood without it. We find the same narrative in the second book of Kings, chapters xviii. xix. and xx: and this and the three following chapters of Isaiah, for much the most part, the account of the sickness of Hezekiah only excepted, are but a different copy of that narration. The difference of the two copies is little more than what has manifestly arisen from the mistakes of transcribers. Some few sentences, or members of sentences, are omitted in Isaiah, which are found in the book of Kings: whether these omissions were made by design or by mistake, may be doubted. *Bp. [a] 2 Kings 19. 1, &c.

[a] AND it came to pass, when king Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and went into the house of the LORD.

2 And he sent Eliakim, who was over the houshold, and Shebna the scribe, and the elders of the priests covered with sackcloth, unto Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz.

3 And they said unto him, Thus saith Hezekiah, This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and of ‖ blasphemy: for the children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth.

4 It may be the LORD thy God will hear the words of Rabshakeh, whom the king of Assyria his master hath sent to reproach the living God, and will reprove the words which the LORD thy God hath heard: wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that is † left.

5 So the servants of king Hezekiah came to Isaiah.

6 ¶ And Isaiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say unto your master, Thus saith the LORD, Be not afraid of the words that thou hast heard, wherewith the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

‖ Or, put a spirit into him.

7 Behold, I will ‖ send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

8 ¶ So Rabshakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah: for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish.

9 And he heard say concerning Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, He is come forth to make war with thee. And when he heard it, he sent messengers to Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, Let not thy God, in whom thou trustest, deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be given into the hand of the king of Assyria.

11 Behold, thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands by destroying them utterly; and shalt thou be delivered?

12 Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed, as Gozan, and Haran, and Rezeph, and the children of Eden which were in Telassar?

13 Where is the king of Hamath, and the king of Arphad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivah?

14 ¶ And Hezekiah received the letter from the hand of the messengers, and read it: and Hezekiah went up unto the house of the LORD, and spread it before the LORD.

Before CHRIST 710.

15 And Hezekiah prayed unto the LORD, saying,

16 O LORD of hosts, God of Israel, that dwellest between the cherubims, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth: thou hast made heaven and earth.

17 Incline thine ear, O LORD, and hear; open thine eyes, O LORD, and see: and hear all the words of Sennacherib, which hath sent to reproach the living God.

18 Of a truth, LORD, the kings of Assyria have laid waste all the † nations, and their countries,

20 Now therefore, O LORD our God, save us from his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the LORD, even thou only.

21 ¶ Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent unto Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Whereas thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria:

22 This is the word which the LORD hath spoken concerning him; The virgin, the daughter of Zion, hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee.

† Heb. By the hand of thy servants.

26 ‖ Hast thou not heard long ago, how I have done it; and of ancient times, that I have formed it? now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldest be to lay waste defenced cities into ruinous heaps.

28 But I know thy ‖ abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage against me.

29 Because thy rage against me, and thy tumult, is come up into mine ears, therefore will I put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest.

30 And this shall be a sign unto thee, Ye shall eat this year such as groweth of itself; and the second year that which springeth of the same: and in the third year sow ye, and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruit thereof.

5. — I have heard thy prayer,] From these words, compared with the first verse, it appears, that this sickness would have put an end to Hezekiah's life, if he had not earnestly prayed to God to spare him; and that God was moved by his prayers to reverse the sentence of death which was gone out against him, and to grant him a longer continuance on the throne of his kingdom. It appears also from the preceding chapter, that Hezekiah by his prayers obtained another miraculous deliverance; namely, that from the army of the Assyrians. These things are written for our admonition, to excite us to be very diligent and devout in the worship of God, since the issues of life and death, and of all human affairs, are in His hands; and He has assured us, that He is nigh unto all them that call upon Him, that He hears their prayers, and will deny them no manner of thing that is good for them. Reading.

The sense of the latter part of the verse, "I shall go softly" &c. is more intelligible in our old translation, which renders the words thus, "I will, so long as I live, remember this bitterness of my life;" that is, The remembrance of the misery I endured shall continually excite me to renew my thankfulness for this Thy mercy. W. Lowth.

16. O Lord, by these things men live, &c.] O Lord, by those words and powerful acts, that proceed from Thee, is the life of man both had and maintained: and especially this life of mine, whereby my breath is still kept in me, is an immediate work of Thine. Bp. Hall.

17. Behold, for peace I had great bitterness:] The words may be translated, "Behold, my grievous anguish is turned into ease." W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

—— thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back.] Hezekiah's prayer hath no confession of sin, but his thanksgiving afterwards hath a very strong one: "Thou hast cast all my sins behind Thy back." And therefore, when he pleaded at first, "Remember, O Lord, I beseech Thee, how I have walked before Thee with a perfect heart, and done that which is good in Thy sight," ver. 3, we should understand him to mean, that as a king he had been zealous for God's true religion, to which consequently his life was of importance; not that as a man he had not deserved death, which all men have. Abp. Secker.

20. The Lord was ready to save me: &c.] The case of Hezekiah, a person of the highest rank, in the prime of life, and the full tide of prosperity, seized with a mortal disease, ought strongly to remind the securest of us all, how uncertain our condition is here on earth. By the goodness of God, a Prophet was sent to him, to admonish him of the preparation that his state required: and the same goodness hath provided, that we shall all be frequently admonished of the same thing by the ministers of His word. The admonition given him was the means of prolonging his days in peace and comfort; and those given us, if received in a right manner, may, both naturally and providentially, contribute to procure us longer and happier lives in this world; and will certainly lead us to a life of eternal happiness in the next. Abp. Secker.

Chap. XXXIX. See the notes on 2 Kings xx. 12—19. The nature of Hezekiah's crime, and his humiliation on the message of God to him by the Prophet, is more expressly declared by the author of the book of Chronicles, 2 Chron. xxxii. 25, 26, 30, 31. Bp. Lowth.

4 Then said he, What have they seen in thine house? And Hezekiah answered, All that is in mine house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not shewed them.

5 Then said Isaiah to Hezekiah, Hear the word of the LORD of hosts:

6 Behold, the days come, that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store until this day, shall be carried to Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the LORD.

7 And of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

8 Then said Hezekiah to Isaiah, Good is the word of the LORD which thou hast spoken. He said moreover, For there shall be peace and truth in my days.

Chap. XL. The course of prophecies, which follow from hence to the end of the book, and which, taken together, constitute the most elegant part of the sacred writings of the Old Testament, interspersed also with many passages of the highest sublimity, was probably delivered in the latter part of the reign of Hezekiah. The Prophet in the foregoing chapter had delivered a very explicit declaration of the impending dissolution of the kingdom, and of the captivity under the kings of Babylon. As the subject of his subsequent prophecies was to be chiefly of the consolatory kind, he opens them with giving a promise of a restoration, and the return of the people from that captivity, by the merciful interposition of God in their favour. But the views of the Prophet are not confined to this event: the redemption from Babylon is clearly foretold; and at the same time is employed as an image, to shadow out a redemption of an infinitely higher and more important nature—the deliverance of the people of God, Gentiles as well as Jews, from the captivity of sin, and the dominion of death. The Prophet connects these two events together, and hardly ever treats of the former without throwing in some intimations of the latter; sometimes he is so fully possessed with the glories of the future kingdom of the Messiah, that he seems to leave the more immediate subject of his commission almost out of the question. Indeed this evangelical sense of the prophecy is so apparent, and stands forth in so strong a light, that some interpreters cannot see that it has any other, and will not allow the prophecy to have any relation at all to the return from the captivity of Babylon. This literal sense however seems obvious and plain; and, for the spiritual, we have the irrefragable authority of John the Baptist, and of our blessed Saviour Himself, as recorded by all the Evangelists, for applying this beginning of the prophecy to the opening of the Gospel by the preaching of John, and the introducing of the kingdom of the Messiah. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God.] The Prophet declares at once God's command to His messengers, (His Prophets, as the Chaldee rightly explains it,) to comfort His people in captivity, to impart to them the joyful tidings, that their punishment has satisfied the Divine justice, and the time of reconciliation and favour is at hand. Bp. Lowth.

2. — she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins.] Double in proportion to God's usual severity in punishing men's sins; see Jer. xvi. 18; Dan. ix. 12: or some take the word "sins" for the punishments due to sin, (as it is often used,) and understand this as a promise of ample recompence for the effects of past displeasure, on the reconciliation of God to His returning people. Compare chap. lxi. 7; Job xlii. 10. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

3. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, &c.] "The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness," the Baptist applies to himself; as describing a preacher faithfully delivering the word of God in a desert and uncultivated place, that is, among a people barren and unfruitful in good works. The message follows, ver. 3, 4, where, under the allusion of mending or levelling the roads for the progress of great princes, that alteration is suggested, which should be made in the minds and dispositions of men, in order to qualify them to receive the benefit of the Gospel: the roughness of their tempers, and crookedness of their wills, to be rectified and made straight, in order to bring them to that meek and humble spirit which God has promised to "guide in judgment," and instruct in "His way," Ps. xxv. 9. Dr. Berriman. The idea is taken from the practice of Eastern monarchs, who, whenever they entered upon an expedition, or took a journey, especially through desert and unpractised countries, sent harbingers before them to prepare all things for their passage, and pioneers to open the passes, to level the ways, and to remove all impediments. Bp. Lowth. See note at Matt. iii. 3; and compare Baruch v. 7.

——our God.] This being spoken of HIM, of whom John the Baptist was to be the forerunner; and the application having been afterwards expressly made by the Baptist to our Lord Jesus; (see John i. 23;) it is evident that He is the Person to whom the Prophet attributes the incommunicable name of Jehovah, and styles Him "our God." Wogan.

5. And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together:] Here it is most evident that the Prince, whose way is to be prepared, can be no other than the Messiah, that great Prince or Potentate who is the general subject of all the Prophets: "the glory of the Lord" foretold in future times to be manifested to the Gentiles, or to "all flesh," can point out nothing but His glorious days, which are elsewhere drawn out under the like stupendous characters. Bp. Lowth, Dr. Berriman.

The Prophet then introduces a voice, commanding him to make a solemn proclamation, ver. 6—8. The import of it is, that the people, the flesh, is of a vain temporary nature; that all its glory fadeth, and is soon gone: but that the word of the Lord endureth for ever. What is this, but a plain opposition of the flesh to the spirit; of the carnal Israel to the spiritual; of the temporary Mosaick economy to the eternal Christian dispensation? You may be ready to conclude, (the Prophet may be supposed to say,) by the introduction to my discourse, that my commission is only to comfort you with a promise of the restoration of your religion and polity, of Jerusalem, of the temple, and its services and worship in all its ancient splendour; these are earthly, shadowy, fading things, which shall soon pass away, and be destroyed for ever; these are not worthy to engage your attention in comparison of the greater blessings, the spiritual redemption, the eternal inheritance, covered under the vail of the former, which I have it in charge to unfold unto you. This appears to be agreeable to St. Peter's interpretation of this passage, quoted by him, as the margin refers. Bp. Lowth.

9. O Zion, that bringest good tidings, &c.] The marginal reading gives a much better sense: compare also chap. xli. 27; lii. 7. W. Lowth. The Hebrew participle, rendered "thou that tellest," is in the feminine gender; and the office of announcing and celebrating such glad tidings, as are here spoken of, belonged peculiarly to women; Exod. xv. 20, 21; Judg. xi. 34; 1 Sam. xviii. 6, 7. Bp. Lowth. See note at Ps. lxviii. 11.

10, 11. Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, &c.] This is to be understood of Christ. The words, "His reward is with Him," compared with Rev. xxii. 12; and "He shall feed His flock like a shepherd," compared with the passage of St. John referred to in the margin, are sufficient indications of the Person intended. Dr. Waterland.

With ver. 10. we may compare also Matt. xvi. 27. The expressions in ver. 11. eminently belong to Christ, and represent the gentleness He shall use to the weak ones of His flock, giving them instruction as they are able to bear it, and taking all possible care to bring back stragglers to His fold: as appears by the many allusions in the New Testament to this and similar passages in the Old. W. Lowth.

12 Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, &c.] Here begins a lofty description of God's Almighty power, shewing that He is great above all His works, and able to do beyond what we can think or conceive; the design of it is, to persuade the people to put their whole trust in Him, to rest assured that He is able to perform who promises, and withal to arm them against idolatry, ver. 18, &c. W. Lowth. The work of creation is the favourite topick which God is pleased to insist upon most, whenever He would distinguish His own peculiar majesty and power above and beyond all the gods of the nations, or excite in His people the highest idea possible suitable to His transcendent excellency; see ver. 26. Many texts to the same purpose might be cited from the following chapters, from the Psalms, and from the Old Testament in general. Dr. Waterland.

19. The workman melteth a graven image, &c.] The passage may be translated thus: "The workman overspreads the graven image," (of wood namely, mentioned in the next verse,) "even the refiner, or goldsmith, spreadeth it over with gold, and casteth sheets of silver." And so in chap. xliv. 10: "Who hath formed a god, and overspread a graven image" (of wood, see ver. 13—17, and Jer. x. 3, 4,) "that is profitable for nothing?" The noun, rendered "molten image," strictly and properly means the "metalline case or covering spread over" the carved wood, Isai. xlviii. 5; Jer. x. 14. The metalline case is often joined with the carved wooden image which it covered: see Deut. xxvii. 15; Judg. xvii. 3, 4. xviii. 14; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3. Solomon's cherubim were images of this kind, made of olive wood, and overlaid with gold, 1 Kings vi. 23, 28. Parkhurst.

Chap. XLI. In this and the following chapters, God is introduced as pleading His own cause against the false gods of the heathens, and challenging the idols to shew such instances of their power and goodness, in protecting their votaries, as might be alleged in His behalf, with respect to His care and providence over the Jews: proper instructions to preserve that people from being drawn aside to comply with the Babylonish idolatry. They contain likewise in them a plain prediction of the calling of the Gentiles, and their turning "from idols to serve the living and true God," 1 Thess. i. 9. W. Lowth.

Ver. 1. — O islands;] See notes on chap. xi. 11; xlii. 4.

—— let the people renew their strength:] This seems to be a charge to the nations to make use of their utmost strength in defending their idolatry in the proposed debate. Vitringa.

2. — the righteous man from the east,] Some explain this of Abraham; others of Cyrus. The character of "the righteous man" (or "righteousness," as some give it) agrees best with Abraham; he was called out of the East, and his posterity (who may fairly be taken into the account) were introduced into Canaan, and established there, on purpose to stand as a barrier against idolatry: Cyrus, though not properly a worshipper of images, had nothing in his character to cause such an alarm among idolaters, as is mentioned ver. 5—7; and the Prophet, having just touched upon that circumstance, resumes Abraham and the Israelites, ver. 8. Bp. Lowth. On the other side it may be said, that Cyrus did overthrow the Babylonians, the great supporters of idolatry, their confederates, and many nations; did in consequence liberate the people of God, and restore the true worship: the characteristicks also here used are rather those of a mighty conqueror; and the similar passages which occur ver. 25, and in succeeding chapters, xlv. 1, 13; xlvi. 11, (applying undoubtedly to Cyrus,) incline us to think that he may here also be intended. Vitringa.

4. — I the Lord, the first, and with the last; I am he.] That is, "I Jehovah;" who by the import of My name am the "first," or original of all other beings, and shall be with the "last," that is, am "everlasting." Dr. Wells. Comparing the passages of our Prophet referred to in the margin, we find that the phrase, "first and last," expresses the peerless majesty of God, who is He the "true God;" His eternity, supreme power, dignity, and glory, and His creation and government of all things: in those of St. John, from the Revelation, the same Divine title is given to the Son. Dr. Waterland.

6, 7. They helped every one his neighbour; &c.] In these verses, the several artificers concerned in idol-making are represented as assisting one another, to carry on their common interest; (see Acts xix. 25;) the passage may fitly be applied to the heathen powers combining together to support their idolatry, and suppress the Christian religion. W. Lowth.

14. Fear not, thou worm Jacob, and ye men of Israel;] Or rather, "few men," as the word signifies in the original. (See the margin.) God defended the children of Israel, as long as they continued His people, though very few in comparison, against all the world; and commands them here not to fear, notwithstanding the smallness of their number, and weakness of their estate; He promises them all along (ver. 8—16.) that He will support and uphold the seed of Abraham to the utmost, and at length give them victory over all the heathen nations, their enemies. *Bps. 15. — I will make thee a new sharp threshing instrument having teeth:] See note on chap. xxviii. 27, 28. Under the familiar image of a threshingfloor, the Prophet here represents the ruin and dispersion of the wicked, the enemies of Israel. With the Jewish people, (and in simple times elsewhere,) the arts of husbandry formed the chief occupation of all, and even the highest did not disdain them; accordingly, we read in Scripture of kings and other great men being thus employed, and find the poets taking their images from the same quarter. *Bp. 25. I have raised up one from the north, &c.] Cyrus is represented here as coming from the "north," and from the "east:" he was born of two different people, the Persians by his father, the Medes by his mother, and therefore called by the heathen oracle, a mule. Now Persia lay to the east of Babylon; Media northward; and Cyrus's army (of which the Medes made a considerable part) is described, Jer. l. 9, 41, as coming out of the north. 27. The first shall say to Zion, &c.] This verse is rather obscurely put: our translators have supplied "shall say;" properly the verb give belongs to both parts, and the same may be more clearly expressed thus, "I first give the word to Zion," (that is, give notice by My Prophets of these events, saying,) "Behold, behold them:" (they are at hand!) "and I give to Jerusalem a messenger of glad tidings." Bp. Lowth.

Chap. XLII. The Prophet, having opened his subject with the preparation for the return from the captivity at Babylon, and intimated that a much greater deliverance was covered under the vail of that event, proceeded to vindicate the power of God, as Creator and Disposer of all things; and His infinite knowledge, from His prediction of future events, and in particular of that deliverance: he went still further, and pointed out the instrument by which He should effect the redemption of His people the Jews from slavery; namely, a great conqueror, whom He would call forth from the north and the east to execute His orders. In this chapter he proceeds to the greater deliverance; and at once brings forth into full view, without throwing any vail of allegory over the subject, the Messiah. St. Matthew has applied it directly to Christ; nor can it with any justice or propriety be applied to any other person or character whatever. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. — he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles.] Meaning here, the law to be published by the Messiah; the institution of the Gospel. Bp. Lowth.

2, 3. He shall not cry, &c.] See note on Matt. xii. 18. He was (as all interpreters explain the proverbial expressions here used) not to employ the least degree of force or violence in the propagation of the new law, till it finally prevailed against all opposition. Accordingly, by the mildness and piety of the followers of Christ, by the secret influence of a Divine blessing attending on their feeble efforts, the doctrine of the cross insensibly gained ground, spread itself far and wide, and in the end became victorious over all the rage and power and sophistry of an unbelieving world. Bp. Hurd.

3. A bruised reed shall he not break, &c.] Those that are humble and contrite shall He rather relieve and comfort, than add any thing to their sorrow and affliction: and those that have received but the weakest beginnings of grace shall have no discouragement from Him, but shall be rather cheered up by Him: yet, so shall He be gracious to the penitently dejected, that He shall not bear with the obstinate sinner; but shall give severe judgment upon him according to the justice of his demerits. Bp. Hall.

4. — the isles shall wait for his law.] Those parts of the world, to which men are wont to travel by sea from Judea, which are most difficult to come at, shall attend to His doctrine, receive His institutions, and submit themselves to His authority: by this phrase is particularly meant the western parts of the world. Dr. Berriman. See note on chap. xi. 11.

5. — he that created the heavens, &c.] See chap. xl. 12, and notes there.

6. — give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles;] God expressly declares here, that the Messiah should mediate a covenant between God and the people; and that the fruit of this covenant should extend to the Gentiles; who should enjoy the same privileges with the Jews, and be incorporated with them, chap. xlix. 8, 9; lv. 3, 4; lxi. 8, 9. The extension of the Messiah's kingdom over the whole earth is mentioned by Isaiah so often, and in so emphatical a manner, that it seems to be the main drift of all his writings. Dean Allix. Indeed the general object of prophecy is the uniting of all nations in the faith of Christ, and the conversion of the Gentiles makes a standing part of all the prophecies of the Saviour of mankind. Bp. Horsley.

7. To open the blind eyes, &c.] The Prophet seems here to set forth the spiritual redemption, under images borrowed from the temporal deliverance. Bp. Lowth.

8. I am the Lord: that is my name:] The import of the name Jehovah (rendered by our translators "the Lord;" see note on Exod. iii. 15,) is, according to the best criticks, ancient and modern, eternal, immutable, necessary existence. Dr. Waterland.

—— my glory will I not give to another,] We read, Ps. lxxxiv. 11, that "the Lord will give grace and glory;" 2 Cor. iv. 17, "an exceeding and eternal weight of glory:" but that divine, infinite, incomprehensible glory, that belongeth to Him, as Supreme King of kings, as His peculiar prerogative, of that He is most jealous; in that will brook no sharer. Since therefore our chief aim ought to be, that in every thing God may have "the glory" due to His name; we must beware, not only that we give not the glory of religious worship to image, saint, or other creature, (as it follows, "neither My praise to graven images,") but also that we do not by flattery or obsequiousness give to mortal man any part of that honour which is due to the infinite and immortal God alone; or, by what is called vain-glory, derive the least part to ourselves. Bp. Sanderson.

9. Behold, the former things are come to pass,] The Prophet seems here to exult and say, The prophecies, which I have delivered to you concerning your redemption from the Babylonian bondage, will soon be so exactly completed, that I regard them as things past; and therefore new things do I declare; that is, hence I claim your belief of other prophecies, concerning the great redemption, to take place hereafter; though there be no appearance as yet of any causes tending to produce it; for "before they spring forth I tell you of them." Bp. Hurd.

11. Let the wilderness and the cities thereof lift up their voice,] The most uncultivated countries, and the most rude and uncivilized people, shall confess and celebrate with thanksgiving the blessing of the knowledge of God graciously imparted to them. The desert and the rocky country may particularly point here to Arabia Deserta and Arabia Petrea: Kedar was a clan of Arabs; (see note on chap. xxi. 13;) some of these dwelt for the most part in tents; others inhabited or frequented cities or villages; there are others, who sometimes live in deserts and sometimes in cities. Bp. Lowth.

19. This verse may more correctly stand thus, "Who is blind, but My servant? and deaf, as he to whom I have sent My messengers? Who is blind, as he who is perfectly instructed; and deaf, as the servant of the Lord?" Bp. Lowth. By the "servant" and "messengers" here are meant the Jewish people and Prophets. W. Lowth.

21. The Lord is well pleased &c.] This verse might be translated more plainly thus, "The Lord took delight in this people for His righteousness' sake, He hath given them an excellent law, and thereby made them honourable." W. Lowth. The Prophet seems to refer, in the first instance, to the Mosaick Law, which God had given with much splendour and solemnity, and intended as the great honour and ornament of His people; and to the care and kindness He had constantly shewn them, out of regard to the promises made to their fathers, notwithstanding their constant disobedience; and also to the Law, which was to be given by the Messiah, that future mark of God's exceeding favour, which He was well aware the Jews would treat in the same manner as they had all the former, ver. 22, &c. Vitringa.

Chap. XLIII. ver. 3. — I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee.] This may mean generally, that God had often saved His people at the expense of other nations, whom He had, as it were in their stead, given up to destruction. Bp. Lowth.

8. Bring forth the blind people that have eyes,] In ver. 10, the Jews are appealed to as witnesses for God; this verse is to be understood of the Gentiles. See Rom. i. 20. Bp. Lowth.

14. — the Chaldeans, whose cry is in the ships.] "Exulting in their ships." Babylon was very advantageously situated, both in respect to commerce, and as a naval power. It was open to the Persian gulf by the Euphrates, which was navigable by large vessels; and being joined to the Tigris above Babylon, by the canal called Naharmalcha, or the Royal river, supplied the city with the produce of the whole country to the north of it, as far as the Euxine and Caspian seas. Bp. Lowth. See note on chap. xiv. 23.

20. The beast of the field shall honour me, &c.] We may apply this to the Gentiles, fitly compared in their unbelieving state to the beasts of the field, embracing the Gospel, with joy and thankfulness to God for the means of conversion. Dr. Wells.

22. But thou hast not called upon me, O Jacob; &c.] The connexion is, But thou, Israel, whom I have chosen and formed for Myself, to be My witness against the false gods of the nations, even thou hast revolted from Me, hast neglected My worship, and hast been perpetually running after strange gods. The emphasis here, and in the following verses, seems to lie on the word me. The Jews were diligent in performing the external services of religion; in offering prayers, incense, sacrifices, oblations: (see note on chap. i. 11:) but their prayers were not offered with faith; and their oblations were more frequently made to their idols than to the "GOD of their fathers." Compare Amos v. 26. Bp. Lowth.

their sins, and should be inflicted by the Assyrians, Babylonians, and other hostile nations round them. And because some of his expressions might be interpreted as if all the twelve tribes were to be utterly cast away, therefore he frequently intersperses consolations, as in this chapter, to assure the people, that if they were duly corrected and reformed by their captivity, God would bring them out of it, and raise them up again to be His Church and people. As God thus promised His people a restoration from their captivity, upon their true repentance and return to their duty; so will He rescue us all from the slavery of sin and Satan, if we sincerely feel the oppression and misery of it, and would prefer being employed in doing God's will, and keeping His commandments. This disposition the Jews manifested in their captivity at Babylon: they were deeply humbled for their former transgressions of God's law, and the affronts they had offered Him by worshipping idols. And doubtless the Holy Spirit of God had a regard to this happy change of their minds and manners, when He dictated the gracious promises in this chapter: for He assures us by the same Prophet, that "there is no peace to the wicked." So long as men continue in their sins, they are at enmity with God, excluded from the benefit of His promises, and liable to all His threatenings and judgments. Reading.

Chap. XLIV. ver. 2. — that made thee, and formed thee from the womb,] He speaks of the Jewish people as of a single person; and as God hath sometimes designed certain persons for particular offices from their birth and conception, (see chap. xlix. 1, 5; Jer. i. 5,) so He set apart the posterity of Abraham to be His people from the very original of the family. W. Lowth.

3. For I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, &c.] The waters here spoken of, according to the ordinary style of the Prophets, are the graces of God's Spirit. Dean Ailix. See notes on chap. xxx. 25; xxxv. 6, 7. The plentiful effusion of the Divine Spirit here predicted, Jews and Christians have ever understood to refer to the days of the Messiah. These predictions were then abundantly fulfilled; and we have moreover from our Lord and His Apostles express and clear promises of the communication of the same Spirit, to enlighten and assist the minds of Christians in every succeeding age. *Bp. [h] 2 Chron. 36. 22. Ezra 1. 1. ch. 45. 13.

CHAP. XLV.

1 God calleth Cyrus for his church's sake. 5 By his omnipotency he challengeth obedience. 20 He convinceth the idols of vanity by his saving power.

17. And the residue thereof he maketh a god,] The sacred writers are generally large and eloquent upon the subject of idolatry: they treat it with great severity, and set forth the absurdity of it in the strongest light. But this passage of Isaiah (ver. 12—20.) far exceeds any thing that was ever written on the subject, in force of argument, energy of expression, and elegance of composition. One or two of the Apocryphal writers have attempted to imitate the Prophet, Wisd. xiii. 11—19; xv. 7, &c.; Baruch vi. Bp. Lowth.

18. —for he hath shut their eyes,] The old Translation expresses the sense better, "their eyes are stopped." W. Lowth.

20. He feedeth on ashes:] He feedeth on that which affordeth no nourishment. A proverbial expression for using ineffectual means, and bestowing labour to no purpose. In the same sense Hosea says, "Ephraim feedeth on wind," chap. xii. 1. Bp. Lowth.

—— Is there not a lie] That is, a lying vanity "in my right hand?" This was a just appeal to common sense against the abominable stupidity of worshipping idols, which, when wrought up to their highest perfection, can but resemble some great man, but can never be endued with the sense of the poorest idiot, or even of the vilest brute: how much less can any thing of Divine power or knowledge be ascribed to them? The Pagans of old endeavoured to defend their worship of images by saying, that they did not terminate their worship in them, but only used them as a medium to convey their devotions to a Divine invisible being. And some idolatrous Christians have used the same argument for the same purpose. But God, who best knows the nature of religious worship, charges these devotees with idolizing the figures before which they prostrate themselves, not only in this chapter, but in various other places of His holy word. Reading.

23. Sing, O ye heavens; &c.] The expressions here, and in parallel passages, denote the joy to be so great and universal, that even the inanimate parts of the creation are said to be affected with it, and are exhorted to bear a part in the general chorus. W. Lowth.

24. —I am the Lord — alone; — by myself;] We are not to suppose that this is said to the exclusion of any Person of the blessed Trinity, but only in opposition to creatures or other gods; see chap. ii. 11, 17; xliii. 11. The word God is probably in such places to be understood in a large indefinite sense, comprising the whole Trinity, where the context or other circumstances do not confine the signification and intent to one Person only. Dr. Waterland.

27. That saith to the deep, Be dry, and I will dry up thy rivers:] By the remarkable manner in which Babylon was taken did the event exactly correspond with this prophecy: Jeremiah also has noted it, chap. l. 38; li. 36. See note on chap. xiv. 23. Bp. Lowth.

28. That saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, &c.] Here does Isaiah, near 200 years beforehand, name the very person who should order the enlargement of the Jews: and Jeremiah, chap. xxix. 10, points out the year in which it should happen. Dr. Berriman. Thus God calleth things that are not, that have no existence, as if they were, because He has power to fulfil all His pleasure, and can, whenever He sees fit, produce those things into light, which He suffers to remain unaccomplished for many years after the first prediction. Reading.

Before CHRIST about 712.

THUS saith the LORD to his anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I ‖ have holden, to subdue nations before him; and I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut;

‖ Or, strengthened.

3 And I will give thee the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places, that thou mayest know that I, the LORD, which call thee by thy name, am the God of Israel.

4 For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name: I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known me.

Chap. XLV. ver. 1. —the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus,] From the custom which obtained among the Jews of separating, by the ceremony of anointing, both persons and things to particular purposes, the person who is constituted and appointed by God (as Cyrus) to some great office or employment, is said to be "the Lord's anointed." Bp. Kidder.

——I will loose the loins of kings,] See note on chap. v. 27.

——to open before him the two leaved gates;] The gates of Babylon within the city, leading down to the river, were left open when Cyrus's forces entered through the channel, in the general disorder occasioned by the festival then celebrated: and the gates of the palace were imprudently opened by the king's orders, to inquire the cause of the tumult without. Bp. Lowth.

2. —the gates of brass,] In every side of the great square wall which encompassed Babylon were twenty-five gates, one hundred in all, of solid brass; those which led to the river, and those which enclosed the temple of Belus, were of the same material. Dean Prideaux.

3. —I will give thee the treasures of darkness, &c.] The riches which Cyrus found in his conquests amounted to a prodigious value: those parts of Asia abounded in wealth and luxury; Babylon had been heaping up treasures for many years, and the riches of Crœsus king of Lydia, whom Cyrus conquered and took prisoner, are in a manner become proverbial. Bp. Newton.

4, 5. —though thou hast not known me.] That is, Shalt be bred in ignorance of Me; and remain so, till I am made known to thee by My Prophet Daniel. Dr. Wells. See note at Ezra i. 1.

7. I form the light, and create darkness: &c.] This seems to be spoken in reference to the Persian sect of the Magians, who held the being of two first causes, Light, or the good god, who was the author of all good; and Darkness, or the evil god, the author of all evil; and that of the mixture of these two, as they were in a continual struggle with each other, all things were made. Dean Prideaux.

8. Drop down, ye heavens, &c.] These expressions, taken from the dew and the rain descending from heaven, and making the earth fruitful, and some nearly of the same kind, used Ps. lxxxv. 9—13, may perhaps be primarily understood to set forth, in a splendid manner, the happy state of God's people, restored to their country, and flourishing in peace and plenty, in piety and virtue; but they must undoubtedly have a further reference to the blessings of the great redemption by the Messiah. Bp. Lowth. In the prophetick writings the expressions often run so high, as to denote events and characters too gloriously great for the thing or person next at hand; which is esteemed a certain indication of their having in prospect some other more remote, in which they are to find their just completion. Dean Stanhope.

9. Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker! &c.] The Prophet warns the people not to be impatient, but to wait God's time for accomplishing their redemption: men may contend with their equals, with those who are made of the same clay with themselves, but should not presume to inquire of God the reasons of His proceedings, or find fault with His works of creation or providence, as if not wisely contrived or well-timed. W. Lowth.

11. —Ask me of things to come concerning my sons, &c.] These words import, that, although God be not obliged to render an account of His proceedings to His creatures, He was graciously pleased, through His Prophets, to resolve any questions proposed concerning His people's future destiny. W. Lowth. An answer to that effect seems to be contained in the following verses, and the rest of the chapter generally; ver. 13, 14, declaring to God's people, not only that they shall be liberated from captivity, but that great happiness awaits them; and ver. 20, 22, 23, pointing to the universal call of the Gentiles, and second advent of Christ, as ver. 23. is applied by St. Paul in the Passages referred to in the margin. Jos. Mede.

13. I have raised him up in righteousness, and I will direct all his ways:] This is to be immediately understood of Cyrus, whom God raised up to be the instrument of executing His justice upon the Babylonians, and fulfilling His mercy to the Jews; but many passages, manifestly relating to the deliverance of the Jewish nation effected by Cyrus, are with good reason and upon undoubted authority to be understood of the redemption wrought for mankind by Christ. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

captives, not for price nor reward, saith the LORD of hosts. Before CHRIST about 712.

14 Thus saith the LORD, The labour of Egypt, and merchandise of Ethiopia and of the Sabeans, men of stature, shall come over unto thee, and they shall be thine: they shall come after thee; in chains they shall come over, and they shall fall down unto thee, they shall make supplication unto thee, saying, Surely God is in thee; and there is none else, there is no God.

15 Verily thou art a God that hidest thyself, O God of Israel, the Saviour.

16 They shall be ashamed, and also confounded, all of them: they shall go to confusion together that are [d] makers of idols. [d] Chap. 44. 11.

17 But Israel shall be saved in the LORD with an everlasting salvation: ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded world without end.

18 For thus saith the LORD that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited: I am the LORD; and there is none else.

21 Tell ye, and bring them near; yea, let them take counsel together: who hath declared this from ancient time? who hath told it from that time? have not I the LORD? and there is no God else beside me; a just God and a Saviour; there is none beside me.

22 Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else.

23 I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, That unto me every [f] knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear. [f] Rom. 14. 11. Phil. 2. 10.

24 ‖ Surely, shall one say, in the LORD have I †righteousness and strength: even to him shall men come; and all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed. ‖ Or, Surely he shall say of me, In the LORD is all righteousness and strength.

14. — The labour of Egypt, &c.] All we meet with in this verse must be understood to have respect to religion; predicting that in aftertimes proselytes of various nations should submit themselves to the Church of God, fettering as it were the hands that were used to be raised against her, becoming bound in spirit, and prisoners in the Lord Jesus, should dedicate themselves, and whatever their land produced most precious, to the service of God; which prophecy might be literally fulfilled, in a small degree, by the Jews receiving formerly proselytes from all nations, and offerings to their temple from some kings and countries, yet must principally be applied to that event, which was so constantly before the eyes of the Prophets, and is so repeatedly treated of by them, the call of the Gentiles. Vitringa. See notes on chap. xiv. 1.

15. Verily thou art a God that hidest thyself,] The Prophet testifies here his firm trust in future deliverance, though God may seem to neglect His people for a time; and professes withal the unsearchableness of God's ways; see chap. lv. 8, 9. Vitringa. He turns from this solemn adoration of the secret and mysterious nature of God's counsels to a spirited denunciation of the confusion of idolaters, and final destruction of idolatry, contrasted with the salvation of Israel. Bp. Lowth.

19. I have not spoken in secret, in a dark place of the earth:] In opposition to the manner in which the heathen oracles gave their answers, and to their falsehood and ambiguity. They were generally delivered from some deep and obscure cavern; such was the seat of the Cumean sybil, mentioned in Virgil; such that of the famous oracle of Delphi. The answer given to Crœsus, when he marched against Cyrus, (a piece of history that has some connexion with this part of Isaiah's prophecy,) is well known; "Crœsus, by passing the Halys, will overthrow a great kingdom!" Crœsus supposed by this that he should overthrow the power of the enemy, but in reality he overthrew his own power. In either event the oracle would have appeared true. Bp. Lowth.

By such fallacious oracles did those evil spirits, from whom they proceeded, delude mankind in those days, rendering their answers in such ambiguous terms, that, whatever were the event, they might admit of an interpretation to agree with it. Dean Prideaux.

23. — unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear.] We must observe, that these words, here said to be spoken by God Jehovah, are applied by St. Paul to Jesus Christ. Bp. Wilson.

It is a rule laid down by St Paul, "that God swears by Himself," for this reason, "because He can swear by no greater," Heb. vi. 13. But the words in the text, being compared with Rom. xiv. 10, 11, are proved to be the words of Christ. Christ therefore has sworn by Himself; so that, if the Apostle's rule be applied, He must for this reason be God, and there can be no greater. Jones of Nayland.

Such instances constantly occur, and all of them are plain proofs of the Divinity of Christ, and that the Prophets of the Old Testament had all along an eye to the times of the New, and spoke of the Messiah as God. W. Lowth.

Chap. XLVI. ver. 1. Bel boweth down,] See Dean Prideaux's note on Gen. x. 9.

— Bel, — Nebo] Idols worshipped in the East; it has been conjectured that the former meant the sun, the latter the moon. Vitringa.

—— their idols were upon the beasts, &c.] The images of these deities were to be no longer carried about in solemn procession by their worshippers, but in triumph and with derision by the Persians; as was usual for conquerors to do in token of complete victory. W. Lowth. Compare Jer. xlviii. 7; Dan. xi. 8.

CHAP. XLVII.

1 God's judgment upon Babylon and Chaldea, 6 for their unmercifulness, 7 pride, 10 and overboldness, 11 shall be unresistible.

COME down, and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon, sit on the ground: there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans: for thou shalt no more be called tender and delicate. about 712.

2 Take the milstones, and grind meal: uncover thy locks, make bare the leg, uncover the thigh, pass over the rivers.

3 Thy nakedness shall be uncovered, yea, thy shame shall be seen: I will take vengeance, and I will not meet thee as a man.

4 As for our redeemer, the LORD of hosts is his name, the Holy One of Israel.

5 Sit thou silent, and get thee into darkness, O daughter of the Chaldeans: for thou shalt no more be called, The lady of kingdoms.

3. — house of Israel, which are borne by me &c.] The Prophet contrasts the power of God, and His tender goodness effectually exerted towards His people, with the inability of the false gods of the heathen. He, like an indulgent father, had carried His people, "as a man doth bear his son," Deut. i. 31; had protected them, and delivered them from their distresses: the idols must be themselves carried about by their worshippers, (ver. 7,) removed from place to place with much labour and fatigue, nor can they answer when their votaries cry unto them. Bp. Lowth. They were so far from being able to defend them, that they could not save themselves; and those, who were wont to be bowed to and adored, are forced themselves to bow and stoop to the will of the plundering soldier, and are removed as common lumber, ver. 1, 2. Wogan.

8. Remember this, and shew yourselves men:] That is, Consider it well, think of it again and again. Consideration is the proper act of reasonable creatures, to whom it is peculiar to propose to themselves some end and design of their actions; if ye do not this, you do not shew yourselves men, but are rather like brute creatures who have no understanding, and act only by a natural instinct. Abp. Tillotson.

11. Calling a ravenous bird] The eagle; a very proper emblem of Cyrus; as in other respects, so particularly because his ensign was a golden eagle. Bp. Lowth. Conquerors that overrun and ravage countries are elsewhere compared to birds of prey; see Ezek. xvii. 3, 4; 2 Esdras xii. 11. W. Lowth.

——from the east, the man that executeth my counsel] Compare chap. xli. 25; and xliv. 28; xlv. 13. W. Lowth.

——I have spoken it, I will also bring it to pass;] If in all succeeding ages, from that time to this, we attend to the great events that have happened in the world, we shall find them all conducted by the same sovereign and almighty hand: especially, if we observe, that many of these events were foretold long before they happened, and have since been exactly accomplished, we must conclude these to be visible and incontestible proofs of the eternal power and godhead of Him, who so "declared the end from the beginning;" His power effecting what His wisdom had foreseen and decreed. Hereby we are not only taught the use and benefit of history in general, especially of that contained in the holy Scriptures; but, by comparing events with the prophecies therein contained, we must be convinced with the utmost certainty, that the Scriptures are infallibly true; that they are the word of God, and not of man; the word of Him alone, who declares "the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done;" who besides can say, "What I have spoken I will also bring to pass; what I have purposed I will also do." Wogan.

6. — I have — given them into thine hand: thou didst shew them no mercy;] God charges the Babylonians, though employed by Himself to chastise His people, with cruelty in regard to them: they exceeded the bounds of justice and humanity in oppressing and destroying them; and though they were really executing the righteous decree of God, yet, as far as it regarded themselves, they were only indulging their own ambition and violence. Zechariah sets this matter in the same light, chap. i. 15: see too Isaiah x. 5—12. Bp. Lowth. See notes on chap. x. 7, 12.

7. And thou saidst, I shall be a lady for ever: &c.] Babylon is described here, and in the words full of insolence and blasphemy that follow, (ver. 8,) as fancying herself exempt from the calamities of fortune, and arrogating that self-sufficiency to herself which belongs to none but God. Mystical Babylon is in the passage of Revelation, referred to in the margin, described as guilty of the same pride and carnal security. W. Lowth.

9. But these two things shall come to thee, — the loss of children, and widowhood:] Babylon, having for many years been mistress of the East, and domineered over the countries round about, could ill brook the subjection her people were fallen under, the removal of the seat of government to Shushan by the Persians, and consequent diminution of the grandeur, pride, and wealth, of the city. In the beginning therefore of Darius Hystaspes' reign, taking advantage of the revolution and troubles of the Persian government, the Babylonians broke out into open rebellion. Unable to cope with his army in the field, they turned their thoughts wholly to support themselves in the siege; and took a most desperate and barbarous resolution, by which the prophecy in this verse was signally fulfilled: for, drawing together all their women and children, to make their provisions last longer, they agreed to cut off all unnecessary mouths, and each man choosing out one of his wives, and a servant for domestick purposes, they strangled all the rest, wives, sisters, daughters, and young children, useless for the wars. Dean Prideaux.

——for the multitude of thy sorceries, &c.] By "sorceries" may be either meant those forbidden acts of divination mentioned more particularly ver. 13, or, in general, wicked schemes of worldly policy, by which potent kingdoms are wont to undermine and oppress the weaker. W. Lowth.

At Babylon, (see ver. 13,) astrology, divination, and the interpretation of dreams, were fashionable studies with men of rank; they carried about with them pocket astronomical tables, which they consulted, as well as astrologers, on every affair of moment. Richardson. They are told here, that neither by their politicks, sorceries, astronomy, nor any part of their wisdom, shall they foresee or prevent their ruin. Bp. Wilson.

15. Thus shall they be unto thee with whom thou hast laboured, even thy merchants, from thy youth:] That is, "Thus shall thy merchants deal with thee, with whom thou hast laboured from thy youth." By "merchants" are meant either the dealers in the deceitful wares of divination and astrology, (ver. 12,) or, generally, any of those who have contributed by their traffick or counsel to maintain the grandeur of the Babylonish empire; compare Rev. xviii. 11, 12, 15, 23. W. Lowth.

Chap. XLVIII. The Prophet applies himself to the Jews as under the state of captivity, reproves them for their refractory temper and obstinacy, which had been the occasion of it, and exhorts them to be reformed by their afflictions, and fit themselves for the deliverance which God had promised. W. Lowth.

Ver. 1. — house of Jacob, which are called by the name of Israel,] Who value yourselves for being descended from Jacob, and called after his name, but do not shew yourselves to be the true Israelites by your deeds. W. Lowth.

——are come forth out of the waters of Judah,] We have in Deut. xxxiii. 28. the expression of "the fountain of Jacob;" and Ps. lxviii. 26, "from the fountain of Israel;" used, as the expression here, for their posterity. Bp. Lowth.

5. I have even from the beginning declared it to thee;] God ordained a succession of Prophets to foretell the most remarkable events that should happen to the Jews, on purpose to prevent their ascribing them to idols. W. Lowth.

—— my molten image,] See the note on chap. xl. 19.

6. Thou hast heard, see all this; and will not ye declare it?] An old translation gives the sense of the words more perspicuously; "Thou heardest it (before;) and behold it is come to pass: and shall not ye yourselves confess the same?" W. Lowth.

7. They are created now, and not from the beginning;] What immediately follows should rather be translated, "nor before this day hast thou heard them." Dr. Wells.

8. — yea, from that time that thine ear was not opened:] Rather, "nor was thine ear opened, of old, or from the beginning." W. Lowth.

—— called a transgressor from the womb.] That is, Thou wast addicted to idolatry from thy very infancy, from the time when thou livedst in Egypt. Compare this verse and ver. 9, 11, with Ezek. xx. 8, 9. W. Lowth.

10. Behold, I have refined thee, but not with silver; &c.] Not with such a furious heat as is requisite to melt down silver, for then thou wouldest have been utterly consumed: see Jer. xxx. 11; Ezek. xxii. 20. I have taken this method to purge thee from thy dross, and render thee a chosen people to Myself: or the latter part of the verse may be rendered, "I have tried or proved thee in the furnace of affliction." W. Lowth. See note on chap. iv. 4.

16. — and now the Lord God, and his Spirit, hath sent me.] The foregoing part of the verse shews that the words are spoken by God; and since it is here affirmed, that the Lord God hath sent Him, we can understand the words of none other but the second Person of the blessed Trinity; who was sent into the world by His Father, and anointed to His prophetical office by the Holy Spirit: see chap. xi. 2; xlii. 1; lxi. 1; Zech. ii. 10, 11. *W. 22. There is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked.] All the great promises which God has made to His Church, to His people, to the families or nations of His true worshippers, are evidently to be so all along understood, as that wicked persons, of whatever family, nation, or profession of religion they be, shall be excluded from the benefit of those promises, shall be cut off from God's people; and the good and righteous of all nations, from the east and from the west, from the north and from the south, shall be accepted in their stead. Dr. S. Clarke. See note at chap. lvii. 20.

Chap. XLIX. ver. 1. Listen, O isles, unto me; and hearken, ye people, from far;] See note on chap. xi. 11. Hitherto the subject of the prophecy has been chiefly confined to the redemption from the captivity of Babylon, with strong intimations of a more important deliverance sometimes thrown in; to the refutation of idolatry; and the demonstration of the infinite power, wisdom, and foreknowledge of God. The character and office of the Messiah was exhibited in general terms at the beginning of chap. xlii, but here He is introduced in person, declaring the full extent of His commission; which is not only to restore the Israelites, and reconcile them to their Lord and Father, from whom they had so often revolted; but to be a light to lighten the Gentiles, to call them to the knowledge and obedience of the true God, and to bring them to be one church together with the Israelites, and to partake with them of the same common salvation procured for all by the great Redeemer and Reconciler of man to God. Bp. Lowth.

2. And he hath made my mouth like a sharp sword; &c.] How exactly does this passage suit the Messiah, who is represented as having "a sharp two-edged sword going out of His mouth," Rev. i. 16, who is Himself the Word of God; which "word is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart," Hebr. iv. 12. See note on chap. xi. 4. This mighty agent and instrument of God, "laid long up in store with Him, and sealed up among His treasures," is at last revealed, and produced by His power, and under His protection, to execute His great and holy purposes; He is compared to a polished shaft stored in His quiver for use in His due time. The polished shaft denotes the same efficacious word, which is before represented by the "sharp sword." The doctrine of the Gospel pierced the hearts of its hearers, "bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." The metaphor of the sword and the arrow, as applied to powerful speech, is bold, yet just: it has been employed by the most ingenious heathen writers. Bp. Lowth.

3. And said unto me, Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified.] That by "Israel" in this place is not meant either Jacob or the people that came from him, but the Messiah, will be very evident from comparing what is said afterwards. Bp. Kidder.

5. — Though Israel be not gathered, yet shall I be glorious &c.] If we follow the reading given here in the text of our translation, the sense is, That although Christ's ministry be unsuccessful in gathering the Jews into the Church, yet the preaching of His Apostles should meet with better success among the Gentiles: if we follow the reading of the margin, this verse and the next import, that God hath ordained Christ to be a light to the Gentiles, as well as the glory of His people Israel. W. Lowth.

7. — to him whom man despiseth, &c.] See notes on chap. liii. 1, 3.

—— Kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship,] See ver. 23; chap. lii. 15; Ps. lxxii. 10, 11.

8. — In an acceptable time have I heard thee, &c.] These words, which are spoken to Christ in the person of God the Father, are applied by St. Paul, in the passage cited in the margin, to His members of the church in Corinth; This, says he, when the Gospel is imparted to you, is your time; which ye are concerned not to let slip. The argument drawn from hence is, that when the grace of God is offered, we must be very diligent to lay hold of and improve it; knowing, as we must, that this life is the utmost period of the day of grace; that the continuance of life is most uncertain; and that we cannot be sure that God will extend to us the opportunities of grace so long as life does continue. Dean Stanhope.

9. That thou mayest say to the prisoners, Go forth; &c.] The "prisoners" here mentioned may be perhaps more particularly applied to the Jews, referring to the "heavy burden" of the Mosaick Law; "they that are in darkness" to the Gentiles, who are described, Ephes. v. 8, to have been "darkness" itself: both expressions however may well suit either; the phrase seems to be taken from the custom of liberating captives at the inauguration of kings. Those, whom the Prophet has thus represented as captives rescued from bondage and darkness into the glorious light and liberty of the Gospel, he next exhibits under the emblem of a flock, feeding at its leisure in secure pastures, guarded by its shepherd from the ill effects of the heat, and plentifully supplied with all necessary food; an emblem not unfrequently used (see chap. xxx. 24, 25; xl. 11.) to shadow out the future situation of the Church of Christ, safe under the protection and watchful care of the great Shepherd of souls, and blessed with the ample opportunities of grace, which God shall afford her; the Apostle St. John (as referred to in the margin) applies the passage in this manner. Vitringa.

12. — and these from the land of Sinim.] We have the same scene here as is laid before us chap. xliii. 5, 6, the restoration of the Jewish nation, and gathering of God's elect from all parts. The Latin Vulgate, instead of "land of Sinim," renders "the south country," which answers to the north before mentioned. W. Lowth. By "from far," may possibly be meant from Babylon; which, being to the east, would answer to the west. Abp. Secker. See chap. xxxix. 3; Jer. v. 15.

As our translation gives it, "Sinim" may mean Pelusium in Egypt, called "Sin," Ezek. xxx. 15; or the wilderness of Sin, Exod. xvi. 1; both which lay southward of Judea. W. Lowth.

13. Sing, O heavens; &c.] See note on chap. xliv. 23.

16. — I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me.] An allusion to some practice, common among the Jews at that time, of making marks on their hands or arms by punctures on the skin, with some sort of representation of the city or temple, to shew their zeal and affection for it. The pilgrims at the Holy Sepulchre, as Maundrell tells us, get themselves marked in this manner, with what they call ensigns of Jerusalem; and this art is practised by travelling Jews all over the world at this day. Bp. Lowth. See note on chap. xliv. 5.

17. — shall go forth of thee.] Shall become thy offspring, shall proceed, spring, issue from thee, as thy children. The accession of the Gentiles to the Church of God is considered as an addition made to the number of the family and children of Zion; see ver. 21, 22; and chap. lx. 4. Bp. Lowth. As the true religion had long been professed only by the Jews, and when explained to greater perfection, was to be propagated from them through the earth; the conversion of the Gentiles is very deservedly reputed an accession to the Jews, and an engraftment upon their stock. Dr. Berriman.

18. — thou shalt surely clothe thee with them all, &c.] As the Church is represented as Christ's bride, so this conversion, both of Jews and Gentiles, may fitly be represented by the bride's being adorned with all sorts of fine clothing or precious jewels, in order to her marriage; (Rev. xix. 7, 8;) or entering upon her triumphant state. Dr. Wells.

20, 21. The children which thou shalt have, after thou hast lost the other, &c.] The Church is represented as lamenting the loss of her children, and wondering at a new and numerous offspring settled in their room. The greatest part of the Jewish people were to fall by a deplorable apostacy; (see chap. x. 20;) but their defection was to be abundantly supplied by the accession of the Gentiles. Dr. Berriman.

22. — and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders.] This custom is practised in the East to a great extent. Dandini, in his voyage to mount Libanus, tells us, that "being on horseback they carry their young children upon their shoulders with great dexterity. These children hold by the head of him who carries them, whether he be on horseback or on foot; and do not hinder him from walking, or doing what he pleases." Fragments to Calmet.

23. — shall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, &c.] It is well known, that expressions of submission, homage, and reverence, always have been, and are still, carried to a great degree of extravagance in the Eastern countries. The kings of Persia never admitted any one to their presence without exacting this act of adoration, for that was the proper term for it. Bp. Lowth. The whole passage here imports the assistance, submission, deference, and veneration, that the Gentiles and their kings and queens should one day afford and pay to the Church of God. Vitringa. See notes on chap. xiv. 1; xlv. 14.

24. Shall the prey be taken from the mighty,] This is an objection urging the seeming impossibility of rescuing the Jews from so powerful an enemy as the Babylonish empire. God answers it in the next verse. W. Lowth.

26. And I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; &c.] Those that are allied to us, by country or kindred, or any other relation, are called "our own flesh:" see Judg. ix. 2; 2 Sam. v. 1; Nehem. v. 5. So the phrase here imports, that God will set these enemies of His people one against another, and make them kill and destroy each other; (see note on chap. ix. 20.) Cyrus conquered a great many of the allies of the Babylonians, and made them serviceable in reducing Babylon itself. W. Lowth.

Chap. L. ver. 1. — Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement, &c.] Husbands, through moroseness or levity of temper, often sent bills of divorcement to their wives on slight occasions, as they were permitted to do by the law of Moses, Deut. xxiv. 1. And fathers, being oppressed with debt, often sold their children; which they might do, for a time, till the year of release, Exod. xxi. 7. That this was frequently practised, appears from many passages in Scripture; the persons and liberty of the children too were answerable for the debts of the father; see 2 Kings iv. 1; Matt. xviii. 25. "They pay their debts in the East with their slaves, and in many places with their children," says Sir J. Chardin. Bp. Lowth. The covenant which God made with His people is commonly represented under the notion of a marriage contract; and in allusion to this, God demands of those who despaired of His mercy (we may compare chap. xlix. 14.) to produce the bill of divorcement which He had given their mother. He, on the contrary, had ever been ready to receive her, when she would return to Him from her idolatries and other iniquities; see Jer. iii. 1. He had no occasion to exercise the power of selling them; but, as He tells them, it was owing to their own sins that they were made slaves to other nations. W. Lowth. God indeed selleth us over to punishment, but not till we have first sold ourselves to sin; we first most unjustly sell away our souls, and then He most justly selleth away our bodies, our liberty, our peace, credit, &c. Let us beware that, whatever we do, we charge not God wrongfully, by making Him in the least degree the author of our sins, or so much as an accessary to our follies. Bp. Sanderson.

4. The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, &c.] God the Father hath given to Me, the Messiah, His eternal Word and Son, power to express Him fully unto His people; that I should be able to speak comfortably to the weary and distressed souls: He doth not intermit to furnish me continually with His good Spirit. Bp. Hall.

6. — and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair:] See Bp. Lowth's note on chap. vii. 20.

—— I hid not my face from shame and spitting.] Another instance of the utmost contempt and detestation. It was ordered by the law of Moses, as a severe punishment, carrying with it a lasting disgrace, Deut. xxv. 9. In the year 1744, when a rebel prisoner was brought before Nadir Shah's general, Mr. Hanway says, "the soldiers were ordered to 'spit in his face,' an indignity of great antiquity in the East." Among the Medes it was highly offensive to spit in any one's presence; and so likewise among the Persians. Concerning modern notions, see the note on Numb. xii. 14. If spitting in a person's presence was such an indignity as in those countries it appears to have been, how much more spitting in his face? See Mark xiv. 65; xv. 19. Bp. Lowth, Parkhurst. This portion of Scripture contains an exact description of the barbarous indignities our blessed Saviour suffered, and looks more like an historical narration of facts already past, than a prediction of events several hundred years before they happened. We can have no doubt that the Prophet here personates the Messiah; nor, if we compare this account with that of our Lord's passion in the New Testament, that Jesus of Nazareth was that Messiah. Dean Stanhope.

Bradford.* Our Lord was an example of holiness and obedience set before us, and His sufferings make the pattern perfect: had He lived in worldly prosperity, the poor and unfortunate would perhaps have upbraided the rich and prosperous for not following the copy, but would have thought their own hard circumstances a sufficient excuse for not attempting it. Let us look to Him who had not where to lay His head, and yet paid a cheerful obedience to His God! Bp. Sherlock.

8. He is near that justifieth me;] My God is with Me, yea, He is in Me, and one with Me, and I with Him, so that I cannot but be borne out against all that shall stubbornly contend with Me. Bp. Hall.

10. — that obeyeth the voice of his servant,] The Septuagint and Syriack have a rendering here, (merely pointing the Hebrew a little differently,) which gives a much more elegant turn and distribution to the sentence; "Who is among you that feareth the Lord? Let him obey the voice of His servant. That walketh in darkness, and hath no light? Let him trust in the name of the Lord," &c. Bp. Lowth.

11. Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, &c.] The fire of their own kindling, by the light of which they walk with satisfaction, is an image designed to express, in general, human devices, and mere worldly policy, exclusive of faith and trust in God; which though they flatter the authors for a while with pleasing expectations, and some appearance of success, shall in the end turn to their confusion. Bp. Lowth.

Chap. LI. ver. 3. For the Lord shall comfort Zion: &c.] When the Prophets have occasion to foretell the marvellous change to be effected in the moral world, under the evangelical dispensation, they frequently borrow their ideas from the history of that garden, in which innocence and felicity once dwelt together, and which they represent as again springing up and blooming in the wilderness: such joy and gladness, such thanksgiving and melody are described as taking place at the restitution of all things, as were at their first creation, when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy. Compare chap. xli. 19; xxxv. 1. Bp. Horne.

The first completion of this prophecy was in the restoration of the Jews from their Babylonish captivity: but the promise ultimately and chiefly respects the Christian church, which in this world sojourns in a wilderness, as the Israelites had done before they entered their promised land. But this wilderness is not without its comforts: the righteous even in this world participate in that peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, which no man nor sufferings can take from them. In the future world their happiness shall be perfect and unmixed; their "wilderness" shall be turned into "Eden," and this "desert" into "the garden of the Lord." Then shall we regain an happier paradise than that which we lost; all pains and tears will be succeeded by "joy and gladness;" and all sighing and sorrow by "thanksgiving and the voice of melody." Wogan.

4. — I will make my judgment to rest for a light] Rather, "to break forth for a light;" the word in the original signifying both to "rest," and to "break forth." W. Lowth.

5. My righteousness is near;] By "righteousness" is here meant, the faithful completion of God's promises to deliver His people. Bp. Lowth.

9. Awake, awake, put on strength, O arm of the Lord; &c.] The Prophet, by an elegant figure, addresses himself to God, to stir up His strength, and exert it in behalf of His oppressed people, as He delivered them in former time out of Egyptian bondage. "Rahab" is another name for Egypt; see note at Ps. lxxxvii. 4. The "dragon" stands for Pharaoh. W. Lowth.

11. — the redeemed of the Lord shall return, &c.] See notes on chap. xxxv. 10.

12. I, even I, am he that comforteth you: &c.] If God be for us, who is he that can harm us? The first incursions of violence and oppression may surprise; but the longest continuance of it ought not to dishearten or deject: the infirmity of our flesh may excuse all sudden fears, but a continued and incessant fear (ver. 13.) is an indignity to God, and argues a total defect of faith. To be afraid of man is idle and vain: to distrust the power and goodness of God is impious and profane. Wogan.

13. — and where is the fury of the oppressor?] It is evermore at God's disposal, who sometimes has suffered it to touch the bodies of His servants; at other times has restrained it, and forbidden it to hurt the earth, or any inhabitant thereof. At all times faith and patience easily break it, and triumph over it: therefore let us fear it not. Reading.

14. The captive exile hasteneth that he may be loosed,] Will quickly be delivered. Bp. Wilson. Rather render, "He hasteneth (marcheth on with speed) who cometh to set free the captive;" that is, Cyrus, if understood of the temporal redemption from Babylon; in the spiritual sense, the Messiah. Bp. Lowth. The connexion of the next verse with this will better appear if we render there, "For I am the Lord thy God," &c. W. Lowth.

16. — I have put my words in thy mouth, &c.] I have made thee My oracle. This may be understood in a lower sense of Isaiah, but is chiefly meant of Christ. Compare chap. lix. 21, and the passage referred to in the margin. W. Lowth. See notes at those places.

"Planting" or "stretching out the heavens," as we read at ver. 13, (Bp. Lowth,) "and laying the foundations of the earth," are expressions to be understood of God's intention of building and making Israel into a state and political world. Jos. Mede. See notes on chap. xiii. 13; xxx. 26. The words imply that new state of things which is called, chap. lxv. 17, "new heavens and a new earth." W. Lowth.

17. — stand up, O Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury;] The bold image of the cup of God's wrath, often employed by the sacred writers, (see Ps. lxxv. 8; Rev. xiv. 10,) is no where handled with greater force and sublimity than in this passage of Isaiah. It is called "the cup of trembling," as causing intoxication and stupefaction; and Jerusalem is represented in person as staggering under the effects of it, destitute of that assistance which she might expect from her children, (ver. 18,) not one of them being able to support or to lead her. They, abject and amazed, lie at the head of every street, overwhelmed with the greatness of their distress; like a wild beast entangled in a net, in vain struggling to rend it and extricate himself. This is poetry of the first order, sublimity of the highest proof. Bp. Lowth.

19. These two things are come unto thee; — desolation, and destruction, and the famine, and the sword:] That is, Desolation by famine, and destruction by the sword; taking the terms alternately; of which form of construction there are many examples: see Cant. i. 5. Bp. Lowth.

21. — drunken, but not with wine:] It has been observed, that this expression means, not simply without wine, but much more than with wine. The Greek tragedian, Æschylus, has the same expression; thus translated, "Intoxicate with passion, not with wine." Bp Lowth. See notes on chap. xxix. 9.

23. — Bow down, that we may go over:] A very strong and expressive description of the insolent pride of Eastern conquerors; which, though it may seem greatly exaggerated, yet hardly exceeds the strict truth. See note on chap. xlix. 23, and Josh. x. 24. We are told, that the emperour Valerian, being taken prisoner by Sapor king of Persia, was commanded to bow himself down and offer his back, on which the Persian monarch set his foot, in order to mount his chariot, or his horse, whenever he had occasion. Bp. Lowth.

Chap. LII. ver. 1. Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion; &c.] The Prophet congratulates Jerusalem upon her restoration after her captivity, and tells her how every thing about her would put on a new face upon that joyful occasion. In which description he has plainly an eye to the renovation of the Church under the Gospel: and speaking on the subject very naturally introduces the sufferings and humiliation of Christ, together with the glory that should accrue to Him, and the advantages which all true believers should receive. W. Lowth.

2. — arise, and sit down,] The common manner of sitting in Eastern countries is upon the ground or floor. To sit on high, on a chair or throne, is a posture of more than ordinary state. Bp. Lowth.

7. How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings,] An expression highly poetical, for "How welcome is his arrival! how agreeable are the tidings which he brings!" The watchmen discover afar off on the mountains the messenger with the much wished-for news of the deliverance from Babylon; and immediately spread the joyful tidings, ver. 8. Nahum, who is generally supposed to have lived after Isaiah, has taken from him this very pleasing image; (see the margin:) the imitation does not equal the beauty of the original; but it may be observed, that Isaiah's subject is infinitely more interesting and more sublime. Nahum denounces the destruction of the capital of the Assyrian empire, the most formidable enemy of Judah; Isaiah's ideas are in their full extent evangelical; and St. Paul has applied the passage to the preaching of the Gospel; see the margin. Bp. Lowth.

The passage may be paraphrased thus: How welcome and pleasing are the Prophets of God, who upon the mountains of Judea preach these glad tidings of peace and deliverance! and how much more welcome are those evangelical teachers, that proclaim everlasting salvation to all believers! Bp. Hall.

10. — made bare his holy arm] See note at Ps. lxxiv. 11.

11. Depart ye, — touch no unclean thing;] This admonition not to linger in Babylon is given chap. xlviii. 20, and repeated here, and by Jeremiah, chap. l. 8; li. 6. God's people, and the priests especially, are, with allusion to the legal pollutions contracted by touching any thing unclean, commanded to keep themselves free from all manner of pollution. The mystical sense of the command is extended by St. Paul to all Christians; and the passage applied by St. John to the mystical Babylon: see the margin. W. Lowth.

12. For ye shall not go out with haste, &c.] Your fathers were thrust out of Egypt in haste, Exod. xii. 33; but now ye shall have sufficient notice, so as to purify and prepare yourselves; and God shall be your guide and defence, like the pillar of the cloud, Exod. xiv. 19, 20. W. Lowth.

13. The subject of Isaiah's prophecy, from the fortieth chapter inclusive, has hitherto been in general, the deliverance of the people of God. This includes in it three distinct parts; the deliverance of the Jews from the captivity of Babylon; the deliverance of the Gentiles from their miserable state of ignorance and idolatry; the deliverance of mankind from the captivity of sin and death. These subjects, however, have a close connexion with one another; Isaiah has handled them as a Prophet and a poet; he has allegorized the former, and under the image of it has shadowed out the two latter; he has thrown them all together, has mixed one with another, has passed from this to that with rapid transitions, and has painted the whole with the strongest and boldest imagery. Hitherto they have been handled interchangeably and alternately: Babylon has been kept pretty much in sight; but here it is at once dropped, and hardly ever comes into sight again; the Prophet's views are almost wholly engrossed by the superiour part of his subject. Bp. Lowth.

13. Behold, my servant shall deal prudently,] Or, "shall prosper," as the margin reads, more agreeably to what follows. W. Lowth.

The state of Christ's exaltation is first mentioned here; but the next words shew that His suffering state was to precede in order of time, and the other to follow as the recompense and reward of His abasement, ver. 14, 15. Dr. Berriman. The solemn administration of Christ's kingly office could not take place, till the prophetick and priestly were discharged: the one, by teaching His people, and raising their affections and desires by the clearest revelation of happiness in a future state; the other, by making intercession for them, by the atonement of bloody sacrifice, the sacrifice of Himself. This is plainly told us in the ensuing chapter, the twenty-second Psalm, and other prophecies of the Old Testament; which St. Paul does in effect but expound in Heb. ii. 10; x. 12, 13; Phil. ii. 7—11. Dean Stanhope.

How gracious was it in God to forewarn the world by the spirit of prophecy of the mean appearance of their Redeemer; that their faith might be armed against the reproach and contempt which attended His poverty, and the great scandal of His cross! In human reckoning a mean condition bespeaks a mean man; but here the case was otherwise; for when God had foretold the mean appearance of His Son, His poverty became a proof of His authority, and the lowness of His condition shewed the excellency of His person. Bp. Sherlock.

15. So shall he sprinkle many nations;] He shall purify whole nations by His blood, and present them holy to God; the expression alludes to the legal sprinklings, by which the people were sanctified; compare Ezek. xxxvi. 25; Heb. ix. 13, 14; 1 Pet. i. 2. W. Lowth.

——kings shall shut their mouths at him: for that which had not been told them shall they see; &c.] Out of respect or fear of Him Gentile kings shall keep silence; and those kings and nations shall be instructed in such heavenly truths as human reason could never be able to discover; and they, to whom no Prophets were sent, or promise made of a Saviour, shall consider and receive His doctrine. Bp. Chandler, W. Lowth.

Chap. LIII. The following chapter is so full a description of our blessed Saviour's sufferings, that it looks more like an history than a prophecy; and might with more reason be suspected to be a copy drawn from His life, than not to be a description of it. But this Scripture was in being long before our Lord was born, and was in the keeping of His enemies; of those who hated and despised Him, and at last put Him to a shameful death; and were at once the preservers and the fulfillers of the prophecy. Bp. Sherlock. It is certain that both ancient and modern Jews interpret it of the Messiah. Dean Allix. The writers of the New Testament apply it to Christ, and the patrons of infidelity will in vain attempt to apply it to any other. Dr. Berriman. It is so undeniable a proof of the truth of Christianity, that the bare reading of it, and comparing it with the Gospel history, has converted some unbelievers, and brought them home to the faith and religion of Jesus Christ. W. Lowth, Wogan.

Ver. 1. Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?] Who of the Jews, when Christ comes, shall believe this our report? even of them, before whom "the arm of the Lord," the virtue and power of God, is witnessed in His miracles? (so St. John understands the phrase, in the passage referred to in the margin:) the cause of so great unbelief follows, ver. 2. Bp. Chandler. It was the poverty and humility in which He came to visit us, so contrary to their proud and carnal conceits, that induced them to reject the Saviour, whom they were all along taught by their own Scriptures to expect: for this being the season of His humiliation for our sins, He grew up, as Isaiah here describes Him, small and of no reputation, from a family nearly extinct, like a tender plant springing unnoticed from its root hid in a barren and dry land, out of which nothing eminent was expected. In the manner of His appearance He had no form or comeliness, none of the advantages of worldly grandeur, no ornaments of state to set Him off; the usage He met with from the world was even more discouraging than His poor and lowly appearance; He was despised, &c. ver. 3. Bp. Horne.

3. He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, &c.] Many prophecies relating to our Lord regard only particular actions and circumstances of His life: but this points at no single calamity that befell Him, but is a general description of His condition during His abode on earth. Bp. Sherlock.

——we hid as it were our faces from him;] Out of aversion or contempt. W. Lowth. The margin reads, "He hid His face from us:" mourners covered up the lower part of their face and their heads, 2 Sam. xv. 30; Ezek. xxiv. 17. Bps. Lowth and Chandler.

4. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows:] The sense of these words is what St. Peter expresses, "Who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree," 1 Pet. ii. 24; and the Apostle to the Hebrews, "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many," Heb. ix. 28. St. Matthew's meaning, in the passage referred to in the margin, is, that Christ healed diseases in such a manner, that even in that sense also the words of Isaiah were literally verified. Dr. S. Clarke. Surely the griefs He bare, and the sorrows He carried, were not His own, but ours; yet we, not considering for whom He suffered, did esteem Him the outcast of heaven and earth, stricken in judgment from above, smitten of God in His anger, and afflicted by His heavy displeasure. Bp. Horne.

5.— the chastisement of our peace] By which our peace was effected. Bp. Lowth.

6.— hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.] Alluding to the custom, in making atonement, of laying hands on the head of the sacrifice. Bp. Wilson. See this rite at once enjoined and interpreted, in the law of the scape-goat, Levit. xvi. 21, 22. Dean Stanhope.

7.— he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth.] The liveliest portraiture of resigned innocence! Bp. Horne. So meek and passive a behaviour must be the result of the most perfect resignation, and altogether inconsistent with any measure of complaint or murmuring. This character accurately agrees only with the blessed Jesus, who was not more a lamb for sacrifice, than for innocence, meekness, patience, and resignation. Dr. Berriman, Bp. Chandler.

8. He was taken from prison and from judgment:] We do not read that imprisonment was any part of Christ's sufferings: so the marginal reading is perhaps to be preferred; or we may render, "by tyrannical oppression." W. Lowth. "By oppressive judgment." Bp. Lowth.

—— who shall declare his generation?] The meaning is, that He was condemned to death, although He was a Person of such high and unspeakable dignity, that neither men nor angels can declare the manner of His generation. Bp. Horne.

9.— he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death;] Some render, "His grave was appointed with the wicked, but His sepulchre was with the rich." W. Lowth. Our blessed Saviour's enemies designed Him the burial of a malefactor; yet it was brought to pass by the providence of God, that His dead body was buried "with the rich," in the rich man's tomb; and His burial was done with care and cost by persons of rank and quality. This fully appears from the accounts of the Evangelists. Bp. Kidder.

10.— his soul an offering for sin,] These words plainly refer to the Mosaick institutions, which among the several sacrifices prescribed have provided one sort, which is peculiarly styled an offering or sacrifice for sin. Dr. Berriman. All other sin-offerings were only types and shadows of Christ's; that which He offered, by offering Himself, was the substance, the true and real sacrifice, which expiated the sins of the world; indeed the chief end of all the sacrifices of the Jews was to put them in mind of that which Christ was to offer for them; and so to give them occasion to exercise their faith, and put their confidence in Him for pardon and salvation. Bp. Beveridge.

—— he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.] By His voluntary oblation of Himself He shall obtain a long race of disciples and subjects; and the whole scheme of Providence for the salvation of mankind shall be entirely committed to His management. Bp. Chandler.

11. He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied:] He shall rejoice to find that His death and sufferings have been the means of saving so many. W. Lowth.

—— by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many;] That is, Many shall be justified by the knowing of Him; which is the same thing with believing in Him; to which our justification is always ascribed in the New Testament. Bp. Beveridge.

12. Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, &c.] Therefore the multitudes of the nations are given Him for His inheritance; and the strong and mighty kingdoms of the world, rescued from the tyranny of Satan, shall become His. Bp. Horne. For some render, "I will bestow many upon Him;" and, "He shall divide the spoils of the strong." W. Lowth.

—— he was numbered with the transgressors;—and made intercession for the transgressors.] Our blessed Saviour's dying between thieves is here intimated. Dean Allix. (See the passages referred to in the margin.) We find Him hanging upon the cross between two common robbers, groaning under the bitterest agonies of death, without pity or compassion, derided and insulted: but neither the pains of the cross, nor those pangs which drew from Him that complaint, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" nor all the malice and scorn of the crucifiers, could make Him a moment forget His love and tenderness towards them: with His latest breath He pleads their cause, excuses their weakness, and begs for their pardon; "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Bp. Sherlock.

The prophecy contained between the thirteenth verse inclusive of the fifty-second chapter, and the conclusion of this, is perhaps the clearest and the strongest of all the prophecies of the Old Testament. It is an advantage which it possesses, that it is intermixed with no other subject. It is entire, separate, and uninterruptedly directed to one scene of things. The application of it also to the evangelical history is plain and appropriate. Here is no double sense: no figurative language, but what is sufficiently intelligible to every reader of every country. The obscurities, by which I mean the expressions that require a knowledge of local diction, and of local allusion, are few, and not of great importance. Nor have I found that varieties of reading,

[a] Gal. 4.27.

[a] SING, O barren, thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child: for more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife, saith the LORD.

2 Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations: spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes;

3 For thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited.

4 Fear not; for thou shalt not be ashamed: neither be thou confounded; for thou shalt not be put to shame: for thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth, and shalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood any more.

or a different construing of the original, produce any material alteration in the sense of the prophecy. Archdeacon Paley.

Let us, by a frequent perusal of this wonderful chapter, recollect our thoughts, and compose our spirits, and soften our hearts, and mortify our passions, and fix our affections on Him who loved us, and for our sakes fasted, and mourned, and wept, and lived poor, and died forsaken. Bp. Horne.

Chap. LIV. In the foregoing chapter, the Prophet described the sufferings of Christ; here he prophesies of the increase and glory of the Church, to commence from the time of Christ's passion, but not to be completed till His second coming, and after the restoration of the Jews to God's favour. W. Lowth.

Ver. 1. Sing, O barren, &c.] The Church of God under the Old Testament, confined within the narrow bounds of the Jewish nation, and still more so in respect of true believers, and which sometimes seemed to be deserted of God her husband, is the barren woman that did not bear, and was desolate; she is exhorted to rejoice, and express her joy in the strongest manner, on the reconciliation of her husband, (see ver. 6,) and on the accession of the Gentiles to her family. See chap. xlix. 20, 21. Bp. Lowth.

2. Enlarge the place of thy tent, &c.] The Prophet announces the conversion of the Gentiles, in words addressed to the Jewish church, as the emblem of the Christian. The allusion here is to the tabernacle, and the image presented is an enlargement of the sacred tent to contain new crowds of worshippers: the stakes are to be driven deep and firm; the cords lengthened and tightened, that the sides of the tent may be able to support the pressure of the multitudes within it: see Gen. ix. 27, where Noah foretells the admission of worshippers of Japhet's stock into the tent of Shem: (Bp. Horsley:) and see chap. xxxiii. 20. W. Lowth.

4. —for thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth,] That is, the bondage of Egypt; "thy widowhood," the captivity of Babylon. Abp. Secker.

5. —thy Maker is thine husband;] Makers, Husbands. Bp. Wilson. So it stands in the original; or, "Thy Makers have thee in marriage." See notes at Gen. i. 1; Eccles. xii. 1. The mystery of the blessed Trinity is intimated; and in this place the term is to be understood of the Son in the communion of the Father and Holy Spirit. Vitringa.

——the Holy One of Israel; The God of the whole earth shall he be called.] Jehovah is indeed the God of all the nations of the earth; the universal Father, whose tender mercies are over all His works: but to the Jews for a time He was more peculiarly a God; inasmuch as He chose them to be the depositaries of the true religion, while the rest of mankind were sunk in the ignorance and abomination of idolatry. Bp. Horsley. The time, it is here said, is now coming, when He shall not be called the God of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles. Compare Zech. xiv. 9; Rom. iii. 29. W. Lowth.

6. —when thou wast refused,] After thou hast been, as it were, cast off by Him for a time. Dr. Wells.

11. —behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colours, &c.] This verse and the following may in a qualified sense be applied to the rebuilding of the city and temple after the captivity, but most probably have a farther meaning. They seem to contain general images to express beauty, magnificence, purity, strength, and solidity, agreeably to the ideas of the Eastern nations. See Tob. xiii. 16, 17; and compare Rev. xxi. 18—21. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth.

The eleventh and twelfth verses may be thus paraphrased: O thou, my poor distressed Church, which now seest no cause of joy, or mitigation of thy sorrow, comfort thou thyself with the expectation of what blessings I have laid up for thee: for, how despised soever thou now seemest, I will exceedingly adorn and beautify thee. And I will make the Evangelical Church far more glorious than that, which was under the law; there shall nothing be wanting that may set forth the beauty and majesty thereof. Bp. Hall.

13. And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children.] This teaching of God refers to the more plentiful instruction to be communicated to men in the days of the Messiah, whereby they were to be taught the will of God more fully and more plainly than in times past. This prediction of the communication of a greater measure of Divine knowledge, and larger effusion of the Divine Spirit upon the members of God's Church, is to be found in several places of the Prophets. Bp. Bradford. The words of Isaiah here our blessed Saviour expressly applies to His followers; (see the passage referred to in the margin.) With respect to the peace here promised, we know that the Governour of the world will make all things work together for the good of them that love Him; will direct us in all our doubts, comfort us in all our tribulations, supply all our wants, and in a little time will finish all our labours, and receive us to everlasting rest. Dr. Woodward.

Chap. LV. ver. 1. Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, &c.] The Prophet publishes the free offers of grace by the Gospel: the metaphor used here Christ Himself expounds to this sense, in the passage from St. John referred to in the margin. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. xxxv. 6, 7; xliv. 3.

It is one of "the sure mercies" of Christ, that the fountain of His salvation, the means of His grace, are open to all ranks of people. Poor as well as rich have access to the publick ordinances of the Church: servants as well as masters have leisure once at least in seven days to attend upon them: and he who is so indigent that he cannot purchase books, or so illiterate that he cannot read them, if he has but ears to hear and a heart to learn, may be fully acquainted here with the whole will of God, and obtain grace to deny all ungodliness and worldly lust, and to live soberly, righteously, and godlily, in this present world. Reading.

——he that hath no money;] No merits of his own. Bp. Wilson. Who is humbled under the conscience of his own wants and unworthiness. Bp. Hall.

2. —for that which is not bread?] Literally, "for the no-bread." Bp. Lowth. See note on chap. x. 15. For such knowledge as will not profit you. All pretences to religious knowledge, but such as proceed from God Himself, are vain and useless; they can neither instruct men in the truth, nor lead them to happiness: the true knowledge of God and of happiness is afterwards denoted by "that which is good," and "fatness." W. Lowth. See note on chap. xxv. 6.

3. —even the sure mercies of David.] By these are meant those blessings for which Almighty God had engaged His truth; and of the full attainment of which David so often expresses his perfect confidence: particularly that of an everlasting kingdom, to be continued to his posterity; which, having manifestly failed in the first and temporal sense, must have a second and more sublime one belonging to it; such as imports a spiritual and eternal kingdom: accordingly the Apostle, in the passage referred to in the margin, observes, that the resurrection of Christ, with the peculiarity of returning no more to corruption, was punctually foretold in these words of Isaiah. Dean Stanhope.

4. Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people,] Christ; the Revealer of My will in the most eminent manner. Dr. Wells.

——a leader] The word in the original is the same that is applied to the Messiah by Daniel, chap. ix. 25, 26, and rendered by our translators "Prince." The author of the first book of Chronicles, chap. v. 2, uses the same term; and there is little doubt but he had an eye to the same Person, whom he mentions as coming of the tribe of Judah. Dr. Berriman.

6. Seek ye the Lord while he may be found,] The command here is general, imposed not only upon the Jews or the Gentiles, but upon all mankind. Bp. Beveridge. Here Christ invites us all to a sincere repentance, and to accept of mercy while it is to be obtained. "Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." Grace is freely offered to all; all are called upon to come. This is an act of infinite goodness; yet the words, "while He may be found," and "while He is near," carry with them no small terrour, as plainly intimating to us, that there is a time when He shall not be found; a day when He shall not be near: "when the wicked shall call upon Him, but He will not answer; when they shall seek Him early, but they shall not find Him," Prov. i. 28. Wogan. See note on chap. xlix. 8.

8. For my thoughts are not your thoughts, &c.] My purposes in revealing the Gospel carry in them such marks of goodness and condescension in forgiving sins, (see ver. 7,) and of truth and faithfulness in fulfilling My promises, (see ver. 10, 11,) that they exceed the measures of human proceedings, as far as heaven is high above the earth. W. Lowth.

13. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, &c.] General poetical images, expressing a great and happy change for the better. The wilderness turned into a paradise: the desert of the Gentiles watered with the heavenly snow and rain, which fail not to have their due effect, and becoming fruitful in piety and righteousness: or, as the Chaldee gives the moral sense of the emblem, (see note on chap. ix. 18,) "Instead of the wicked shall arise the just, and instead of sinners such as fear to sin." Compare chap. xxxv. 1, 2; xli. 19. Bp. Lowth. See note on chap. li. 3.

—— and it shall be to the Lord for a name, &c.] This change shall be to the everlasting praise of God, and for a memorial of His never-failing goodness to the Church. Bp. Hall.

Chap. LVI. ver. 1. Thus saith the Lord, Keep ye judgment, and do justice: &c.] True piety and honesty are the terms indispensably required of every one, Jew as well as Gentile, to give him a claim to enjoy the happiness of the triumphant state of the Church on earth, or the eternal happiness of heaven. Dr. Wells.

2. — that keepeth the sabbath] The sabbath was ordained as a sign or token of God's covenant with His people: see Exod. xxxi. 13; Ezek. xx. 12. Accordingly the observation of it was the distinguishing character of a Jew, as a worshipper of the true God, who created heaven and earth, and instituted the sabbath, as a memorial of that creation. W. Lowth. 'Tis frequent in Scripture, by one religious duty to denote the whole of religion; and so the "keeping of the sabbath" here may signify all duties relating to God; and, what follows, "keeping his hand from doing any evil," those that refer to our neighbour. Dr. Wells.

3. Neither let the son of the stranger, &c.] Two descriptions of persons are mentioned in this verse, strangers and eunuchs, who, looking to the economy of the Old Testament, (see Deut. xxiii. 1—3,) might expect they should have an inferiour share in the kingdom of Christ. Vitringa. God declares here, that the Gentile should be accepted, under the Gospel dispensation, (the partition wall being broken down,) equally with the Jew; and that whereas eunuchs were formerly forbidden to "enter into the congregation of the Lord," the times were now coming, when those restraints should be taken off; the inward endowments of the soul be sufficient to give persons a title to the communion of saints; and their names be written in the book of life, a more lasting remembrance than posterity could entitle them to. W. Lowth.

7. — and make them joyful in my house of prayer:] They who truly love and fear God above all things find more joy and comfort in His house than any where else: the whole work of the place is delightful to them, the Spirit of God co-operating with them in it, and God never failing to perform His promise here made, to those who come to His house duly prepared, and keep their minds intent upon Him, and the duties there performed. Bp. Beveridge.

—— shall be called] See note on chap. ix. 6.

—— an house of prayer for all people.] The temple was designed for other nations as well as the Jews to say their prayers in, at the first dedication by Solomon; (see 1 Kings viii. 41, 42;) though the number of proselytes was not considerable till the times of the second temple: this however, and the sacrifices above mentioned, are chiefly to be understood of the Christian worship, and the spiritual sacrifices of prayer and thanksgiving proper to it. The remark, "that the Prophet uses such expressions, with relation to the Gospel times, as are taken from the usages of his own," is a good rule for explaining the idioms of the prophetick writings. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. xix. 19.

9. All ye beasts of the field, come to devour, &c.] Here manifestly begins a new section: the Prophet, having in the foregoing chapters comforted the faithful Jews with many great promises of God's favour to be extended towards them, here makes a transition to the more disagreeable part of the prospect; and to a sharp reproof of the wicked and unbelievers, and especially of the negligent and faithless governours and teachers, (as dumb dogs, dreamers, sluggards, &c. ver. 10, 11;) of the idolaters and hypocrites, who would still draw down His judgments upon the nation; probably having in view the destruction of their city and polity by the Chaldeans, and perhaps by the Romans: compare Jer. xii. 7, 9, where he well explains this of Isaiah. The same subject is continued in the next chapter; in which the charge of apostasy and corruption becomes more general. Bp. Lowth.

10. His watchmen are blind: &c.] Jerusalem is here represented to the Prophet as trodden under foot, and plundered by the hostile nations round about her. This devastation he here sets forth under a proper metaphor. He represents his people as a flock of sheep: their rulers, both religious and civil, as shepherds, and their dogs set to watch the flock; and their enemies, who watched for their destruction, he resembles to wild beasts ravening after their prey. And seeing how wretchedly the flock was guarded, he cries out in an ecstatick manner, "O all ye beasts of the field, come, come, ye beasts of the forest, and devour." Not that he desired this; but he knew it would be the consequence of what follows; for, says he, "those that should watch our flock are blind." This is a warning to all spiritual watchmen, to discharge their trust faithfully; not to follow their own ways, and pursue their temporal gain, and ease, and safety, above all things; not to be silent when they ought to speak; not to shut their eyes when they should see: for in so doing they will lose their own souls, as well as the souls of those committed to their charge. Let us then beseech the universal Shepherd and Watchman, who never slumbereth nor sleepeth, to inspire all His ministers with a zeal for His glory, that they may constantly speak the truth, and boldly rebuke vice, after the example of our great Master, who kept back nothing of the Divine will from His people. Reading.

Chap. LVII. ver. 1. The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart: &c.] The death of good Hezekiah is probably denoted. Dr. Wells. The Prophet complains of the general neglect of people, to consider the loss of good and useful men, as a presage of evil: when God in mercy taketh away such, it should be a warning to us to look for evil to come. Bp. Sanderson.

2. He shall enter into peace:] The same sense is expressed at large, Gen. xv. 15, "Thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace." Bp. Lowth. These words appear to be an allusion to the future state; what more natural signification have they than that expressed in the Book of Wisdom, chap. iii. 1, 3, "The souls of the righteous are in the hand of God;—they are in peace." Dr. S. Clarke. Thus is the happiness of heaven frequently described to us in Scripture; and certainly it is no small encouragement towards making us love religion, that it promiseth to us in the next life a freedom from all the evils and troubles of this. Abp. Tillotson.

—— they shall rest in their beds, &c.] As death is compared to sleep, so is the grave to a bed. See chap. xiv. 18. W. Lowth.

5. —— under every green tree, &c.] See note on chap. i. 29.

—— slaying the children in the valleys] Offering them in sacrifice to Moloch; a sin severely prohibited, Lev. xx. 2, &c.; yet much practised in the times of the idolatrous kings of Judah, 2 Kings xxiii. 10; 2 Chron. xxviii. 3. The valley of Hinnom was chiefly noted for this inhuman practice, Jer. vii. 31. W. Lowth.

6. Among the smooth stones &c.] Of the worship of rude stones consecrated, there are many testimonies of the ancients. They are called "smooth stones," as being made smooth by the lapse of the stream. Bp. Hall. Or by oil poured upon them, which was a frequent practice among the heathens. W. Lowth.

7. Upon a lofty and high mountain hast thou set thy bed: even thither wentest thou up to offer sacrifice.] The bed here mentioned may most fitly be understood of such an one as was used at feasts, and was prepared for the entertainment which was made with part of the oblation. W. Lowth There is at the same time a continued allusion to the practices of an adulteress.

dedicated to them; in direct opposition to the law of God, which commanded them to write upon the door posts of their house, and upon their gates, the words of God's law, Deut. vi. 9; xi. 20. If they chose for them such a situation as more private, it was in defiance of a particular curse denounced, Deut. xxvii. 15. Bp. Lowth.

9. — thou wentest to the king with ointment, &c.] See chap. xxx. 6. They courted the king of Egypt, or of Assyria, as best served their interest. W. Lowth. Hosea reproaches the Israelites for the same practice, chap. xii. 1. It is well known that in all parts of the East whoever visits a great person must carry him a present. Bp. Lowth. See note on 1 Sam. ix. 7.

10. Thou art wearied in the greatness of thy way; &c.] Thou hast tried all ways to save thyself from the evils that threaten thee: with what pains didst thou court the favour of foreign princes! and to no purpose; yet thou didst not refrain: "thou hast found the life of thine hand," that is, thou hast made a shift by these methods to support thyself for the present, therefore thou hast felt no remorse. W. Lowth, Bp. Wilson.

11. — have not I held my peace even of old, and thou fearest me not?] That is, And therefore thou fearest Me not? Sinners take encouragement to continue in sin, from God's patience and long-suffering. See Ps. l. 21; Eccles. viii. 11. W. Lowth.

13. — but he that putteth his trust in me shall possess the land,] To show the great goodness of God, it is usual with the Prophets to pass from denunciations of judgment to promises of mercy. The promise here made was fulfilled literally to the Jews, who returned from the Babylonish captivity; but the spiritual and more important sense is the free grace of God, offering pardon and salvation to all that repent and believe in Christ. Wogan.

15. — with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, &c.] It is humility which brings down "the high and lofty One, that inhabiteth eternity," to dwell amongst us, and conduct us through our pilgrimage of life to the lot of our inheritance, to the mount of holiness here, of joy and happiness hereafter. The corruption of nature, and perverse habits of sin, are the "stumbling-blocks" (ver. 14.) in our way; if these be "taken up," and removed by repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, we shall "possess the land, and inherit His holy mountain;" that is, be true members of His Church upon earth, and receive the inheritance in His kingdom of heaven, which was promised us in our baptism. Wogan.

19. I create the fruit of the lips;] The sacrifice of praise, saith St. Paul, Heb. xiii. 15, "is the fruit of the lips." God creates this fruit of the lips, by giving new subject and cause of thanksgiving by His mercies conferred on those among His people, who acknowledge and bewail their transgressions, and return to Him. The great subject of thanksgiving is peace; reconciliation and pardon offered to them that are nigh, and to them that are afar off; not only to the Jew, but also to the Gentile, as St. Paul more than once applies those terms, Eph. ii. 13, 17; see also Acts ii. 39. Bp. Lowth.

20. — the wicked are like the troubled sea, &c.] The wicked are represented here as full of uneasy and disquieting thoughts; they have no real comfort of mind from the pleasures of this world, must necessarily want all effectual support under the many evils and calamities of life, and are troubled perpetually with the reproofs of conscience, and unwelcome thoughts of death. Bp. Pearce. The impenitent and wicked are excluded from all share in the peace mentioned ver. 19, that reconcilement and pardon which is promised to the penitent only. The forty-eighth chapter ends with the same declaration as this; "There is no peace to the wicked." Bp. Lowth. See the note there.

2 Yet they seek me daily, and delight to know my ways, as a nation that did righteousness, and forsook not the ordinance of their God: they ask of me the ordinances of justice; they take delight in approaching to God.

Chap. LVIII. ver. 2. Yet they seek me daily,] To "seek" God is the same as to "draw nigh" unto Him in His ordinances. W. Lowth. Isaiah is commanded to shew the Jews especially their hypocrisy in drawing nigh to God with their bodies only. Bp. Wilson.

3. — wherefore have we afflicted our soul,] By fasting and humiliation: a phrase used particularly of the great day of expiation, Lev. xvi. 29; xxiii. 27. W. Lowth. See notes on the former of these places.

—— in the day of your fast ye find pleasure,] It appears that, instead of producing the right effect of humility and self denial, their fasting increased their pride, and inflamed, rather than subdued, their irregular lusts and passions. Wogan. Travellers inform us, that in the Eastern countries Jews and Turks, upon their stated fasts, will keep the day strictly enough; but as soon as the stars appear, they fall to their viands, and abandon themselves to a mad kind of mirth the greatest part of the night. Reading.

—— and exact all your labours.] Meaning, the hardest labours, and most servile works. Bp. Hall. The intention of God, in directing His people to religious fasts, was not barely for their affliction in chastisement for their sins, but is principally intended for their amendment; nor is the design of such a fast any way answered by an outward humiliation, but by an inward reformation; by the heart's being melted down, by true contrition and sincere sorrow for sin, into a right sense of religion; and softened to all the impressions of humanity, good nature, and charity. See ver. 5—7. Dr. Delaney.

4. — ye fast for strife and debate, &c.] Your fasts have the appearance of devotion; but their true design is only to promote parties and contentions, and to oppress the innocent: such was the fast of Ahab, which we read of 1 Kings xxi. 10. W. Lowth.

5. — to spread sackcloth and ashes under him?] For his couch. Bp. Lowth.

7. — hide not thyself from thine own flesh?] From thy kindred and countrymen. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. ix. 20; xlix. 26. Or, from thy fellow men. All men are by the ordinance of God so incorporated together, that they are not only all "members of the same body," 1 Cor. xii. 12, (of the same civil body, as they are men, and of the same mystical body, as they are Christians,) but even "members one of another," Rom. xii. 5; Ephes. iv. 25. Bp. Sanderson.

8. Then shall thy light break forth as the morning,] That is, Thy low and afflicted condition shall be suddenly changed into an happy and glorious state: "and thine health shall spring forth speedily;" thou shalt be restored to thy former prosperity: "and thy righteousness shall go before thee," like a harbinger, to prepare the way to honour and esteem, as well as to shine before men for their example and the glory of God: "and the glory of the Lord shall be thy rereward," following thee in all thy ways, and, as it were, bringing up the rear, both to do thee honour, and to protect thee. W. Lowth, Wogan.

9. — the putting forth of the finger, and speaking vanity;] The first expression alludes to some gesture they used in conversation, whether of mocking or threatening: or it may signify an attempt towards invading the right of others. See chap. lix. 3; Ps. cxxv. 3. "Vanity" here means falsehood and deceit. W. Lowth.

10. — if thou draw out thy soul &c.] The force of this expression is, to satisfy the hungry with all readiness and benevolence, agreeably to that of the Apostle, "God loveth a cheerful giver," 2 Cor. ix. 7; see also Rom. xii. 8. The Septuagint gives the sense more fully; "if thou give bread from thy soul." Vitringa. A charitable temper is commonly expressed by a large soul; and the contrary disposition by a narrow one. W. Lowth.

13. If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; &c.] If thou abstain from following thy own ways and pleasure on the sabbath, which is dedicated to My service. It appears from hence, that the precept of keeping the sabbath day holy did not enjoin merely a bodily rest, but implied also setting the day apart for the services of religion. See Jer. xvii. 21, &c. W. Lowth.

Chap. LIX. The last chapter more particularly reprobated the hypocrisy of the Jews in pretending to make themselves accepted with God by fasting and outward humiliation without true repentance, while they continued to oppress the poor, and indulge their own passions and vices; with great promises however of God's favour on condition of their reformation. This chapter contains a more general reproof of their wickedness; bloodshed, violence, falsehood, injustice. At ver. 9, they are introduced as making an ample confession of their sins, and deploring their wretched state in consequence of them. On this act of humiliation a promise is given that God, in His mercy and zeal for His people, will rescue them from this miserable condition; that the Redeemer will come like a mighty hero to deliver them, ver. 17; He will destroy His enemies; convert both Jews and Gentiles to Himself, and give them a new covenant, and a law, which shall never be abolished. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1, 2. Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; &c.] This seems to be, as it were, an answer to the cavils of the Jews, calling God's power in question because He did not deliver them from their enemies, as formerly. W. Lowth.

5. They hatch cockatrice' eggs, and weave the spider's web:] Figurative expressions: their villanous contrivances are compared to a cockatrice's eggs, which are both poison in themselves, and when hatched produce a venomous serpent; and to a spider's web, both for the artificial fineness of them, and for the purpose of ensnaring, for which they are intended. He goes on, ver. 6, "Their webs shall not become garments:" that is, though their contrivances are finely wrought, yet they are too thin and weak to be of any real advantage, and their works can neither cover nor defend them. W. Lowth. And so do all the devices, which we applaud in ourselves and others, as matters of great reach, and contrived with deep policy, resemble, agreeably to this comparison of the Prophet, a spider's web; a thing of great curiosity to the eye, spun of a fine and subtile thread, and in exact proportion, but of no strength at all. Bp. Sanderson.

10. — in desolate places as dead men.] We are banished from the world, as the dead that have no longer any portion in it. See Ps. xliv. 19. W. Lowth.

16. And he saw that there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor:] See note on chap. lxiii. 5; compare chap. lxiv. 7, and Ezek. xxii. 30. W. Lowth.

The sins of men, and even of God's own people, (as they are described in the beginning of the chapter, and there acknowledged and confessed by the penitent members of the Church, ver. 9—15,) were grown to so enormous a height, and so past all hope or human means of reformation, that nothing less than the very arm of God, even His own Son, was able to apply the remedy. When "He saw there was no man," no mere man, capable or qualified to redeem his brother, or give to God a ransom for him; when He saw there was "no intercessor," not even among the angels, to mediate or undertake for mankind, then He Himself took it upon Him to execute the great design of saving man, and delivering him out of the hand of his enemies. Wogan.

20. And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, &c.] This is expounded by St. Paul of that general salvation of the Jewish nation which he assures us shall come to pass in the latter times: see the passage referred to in the margin; and compare Obad. ver. 17, 21. Ver. 21. is to be understood of Christ, the great Prophet and Oracle of the Church, who came from heaven to declare unto us the whole counsel of God; and whom we are to hear and obey in all things. Compare chap. li. 16; lxi. 1. W. Lowth.

—— and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob,] Our translators have expressed the sense of the present reading of the Hebrew text: that of St. Paul, following the Septuagint, with which some other versions agree, is, "and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob," Rom. xi. 26. Bp. Lowth.

The first coming of the great Redeemer was to Zion; His second coming will be to the world in general. He came first to His church, to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, to His own people: but "His own received Him not, because their deeds were evil." None received Him then, but those "that turned from transgression in Jacob:" nor can any receive Him now, but such as repent of their sins. Salvation must commence in this life: Jesus will be a Saviour to none hereafter, but those whom He first saves from sin here: He is a Redeemer to them only who turn from their transgressions. With them, and them alone, He ratifies and confirms His "covenant" of grace. To them only the Father gives of the "Spirit that is upon" His Son, the Spirit of adoption and grace. Wogan.

Chap. LX. The subject of this chapter is the great increase and flourishing state of the Church of God by the conversion and accession of the heathen nations to it; which is set forth in such ample and exalted terms, as plainly shew, that the full completion of this prophecy is reserved for future times. This subject is displayed in the most splendid colours, under a great variety of images highly poetical, designed to give a general idea of that perfect state of the Church, which we are taught to expect in the latter days. Bp. Lowth. It is agreeable to the custom of the times and countries in general, in which the Scriptures were written, and to the style and manner of Prophets in particular, to abound with figurative schemes of speech: on such an occasion as the subject of this chapter presents, we are least of all to wonder at the boldest metaphors and descriptions: where the benefits spoken of are of so exalted a nature, as to make that pomp of expression the effect of necessity, which would on other occasions pass for artificial. Other benefits may be magnified above their just proportions; but no words can come up to the real dignity of these; and therefore the most magnificent descriptions, borrowed from objects familiar to our senses, do not adorn or exalt, but only speak of them in the most respectful manner that our capacities admit. Dean Stanhope.

Ver. 1. Arise, shine; for thy light is come,] Light is the usual emblem of happiness, and darkness of affliction; Jerusalem is bid to arise, and give light to all about her, to communicate to others part of the honour and lustre which she had received from God, the true "Sun of Righteousness," Mal. iv. 2. W. Lowth.

5. Then thou shalt see, and flow together, and thine heart shall fear, and be enlarged;] Thy joy shall break out upon thee like an overflowing river, and the sudden transports of it shall produce an astonishment like that arising from fear; the effects of one passion are ascribed to another. W. Lowth.

20 Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the LORD shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended.

21 Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land for ever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified.

22 A little one shall become a thousand,

Midian, Gen. xxv. 4. These people abounded in camels, and such beasts of burden, and their substance chiefly consisted in cattle. W. Lowth. What is said of the animals' ministering and going up, Vitringa understands as implying, that they shall offer themselves voluntarily; which gives a very elegant and poetical turn to the image: it being a general notion that prevailed with sacrificers among the heathen, that the victim's being brought without reluctance to the altar was a good omen; and the contrary a bad one. Bp. Lowth.

8. Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?] A flock of birds resembles a dark cloud. W. Lowth. The Prophet speaks of men's ready submission to the Gospel, and the great number of those that should come in upon the preaching of it. Abp. Tillotson. He alludes to the rapidity with which doves return to their habitations; considering also the purity and innocence of this bird, to what can the elect of God be better compared, or the Church, than to the dove-cote? This is the force of the word translated "window." The Holy Spirit frequently uses this emblem; see Ps. lxviii. 13; Hos. xi. 11. Vitringa.

9. Surely the isles shall wait for me, &c.] By "the isles" are meant the heathen nations: and their "waiting for" Christ expresses that readiness, with which they entertained the Gospel when first preached to them, as if they had been long in expectation of it. So Christ is said to be "the desire of all nations," Hag. ii. 7. Wogan.

13. The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, &c.] This expression denotes that all the cedars and other choice trees of Lebanon should contribute to the rebuilding and beautifying of God's temple; which implies in a spiritual sense, that every thing should tend to adorn and render perfect the Church; which is called the house and building of God, 1 Tim. iii. 15; 1 Cor. iii. 9. W. Lowth.

——I will make the place of my feet glorious.] The temple of Jerusalem was called the house of God, and the place of His rest or residence. His visible symbolical appearance, called by the Jews the Shechinah, was in the most holy place, between the wings of the cherubim above the ark. This was considered as the throne of God; and the ark itself as His footstool: see Ps. xcix. 5; 1 Chron. xxviii. 2. Bp. Lowth.

14. The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; &c.] See notes on chap. xlv. 14; xlix. 23.

17. For brass I will bring gold, &c.] As it is said of Solomon's times, that gold and silver were so plentiful, that there was no use of inferiour metals, 1 Kings x. 21, 27; so, in pursuance of the same metaphor, the New Jerusalem is described, Rev. xxi. 18, as made of "pure gold." The Prophet adds here, that in those happy days, that golden age, as we say commonly, the very officers of the publick revenues, and collectors of taxes, (a sort of men generally blamed as guilty of exaction and oppression, see Luke iii. 13,) shall be lovers of peace, and observers of justice. He goes on to describe complete security from all sort of violence, &c.; and, ver. 21, we read, "Thy people also shall be all righteous;" such characters can belong only to the New Jerusalem: (W. Lowth:) the description of which, Rev. xxi. 23, &c. is entirely taken from this chapter of Isaiah. Jos. Mede.

nation:] The evangelical Prophet is very particular throughout this chapter in describing the sudden and mighty increase of Christianity, its triumphant progress through all nations, and its prevalence over all the other religions of the world; and this wonderful enlargement of it he takes occasion here to represent as so much the more admirable, on account of the small appearance it should make at first, and the slender and unpromising beginnings with which it should set out. Bp. Atterbury. It is well known, by the instrumentality of how incompetent persons, a few fishermen, of no authority, address, or education, and in how short a compass of time, this great revolution, the greatest that ever was in the religious world, was effected. In about forty years the Gospel was preached in almost every region of the world then known: this speedy propagation of it could never have been effected by persons so unequal to the task, had not the same Divine Spirit, who foretold it, assisted them in it, according to the promise here given, "I the Lord will hasten it in his time." Bp. Newton.

We see the truth of this prediction in the event. The Church, which was confined to a small spot, the land of Israel, is now become catholick, or universal, and in some measure hath "filled the whole earth," Dan. ii. 35, so that "a little one is become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation." But still this prophecy will not receive its final completion till the coming of that glorious kingdom, which we daily pray may come; when the will of our heavenly Father shall be done upon earth, as it is now in heaven. And O! let all, who look for these things, pray, that the Lord may "hasten it in His time;" and with "the Spirit and the bride say, Come; and let him that heareth say, Come; and let him that is athirst, come. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly," Rev. xxii. 17, 20. Wogan.

Chap. LXI. ver. 1. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; &c.] That these words are meant of Christ, He Himself declared; when, having read them in the synagogue at Nazareth, He said to those who heard them, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears:" see Luke iv. 21. Bp. Beveridge.

——the Lord hath anointed me] See note on chap. xlv. 1.

——to preach good tidings unto the meek;] Or, "to the poor," as the word is rendered by the Septuagint, whom the Evangelists follow. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. xi. 4; xxvi. 6.

This preaching to the poor was very different from the way of the Jewish doctors and teachers; they would scarce instruct any one but for great reward; the poorer sort they had in great contempt: see John vii. 48, 49. Abp. Tillotson.

——to proclaim liberty to the captives, &c.] The proclaiming of liberty to them that are bound, and the year of acceptance with the Lord, is a manifest allusion to the proclaiming of the year of jubilee, Lev. xxv. 9, &c.; the year of general release; of debts and obligations; of bond men and women; of lands and possessions, which had been sold from the families and tribes to which they belonged. Our Saviour, by applying this text to Himself, a text so manifestly relating to the institution above mentioned, plainly declares the typical design of that institution. Bp. Lowth.

3. —beauty for ashes, &c.] A description of the change of habit and appearance that should take place in proportion to the change of circumstances. Whereas, whilst they were mourners, they used to put ashes on their heads; now they were to wear a crown or diadem; for the word rendered here "beauty," signifies an ornament proper to the head, and is so translated, Ezek. xxiv. 17. W. Lowth.

——the garment of praise] Namely, the garment wont to be used in times of thanksgiving to God. Dr. Wells.

6. But ye shall be named the Priests of the Lord: &c.] If we suppose these words contain a peculiar promise to the Jews after their conversion, they import, that God will restore to them that honourable title of being a "kingdom of priests," formerly given to them, Exod. xix. 6; and some conceive the Jewish church to be represented in the Revelation by the "four and twenty elders," (alluding to the four and twenty courses of the priests,) "clothed in white raiment, (as priests,) and having on their heads crowns of gold," as advanced to a regal dignity, Rev. iv. 4. But this privilege of being "priests to God" does in some degree belong to all Christians; see 1 Pet. ii. 5; especially when they shall come to be wholly free from the bondage of sin, and continually employed in God's service, Rev. v. 10; xx. 6. W. Lowth. See note on chap. lxvi. 21.

7. For your shame ye shall have double;] See note on chap. xl. 2.

8. For I the Lord love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt offering;] To the tenour of the covenant, promised at the end of the verse, consisting of inward righteousness, (see Jer. xxxi. 33,) God opposes the outward ceremonial service prescribed by the former covenant, which very often had no inward devotion accompanying it. W. Lowth. See note on chap. i. 11. God will not be pleased with the offerings of such as get riches by unlawful ways; see Deut. xxiii. 18. Yet how common is this sin among Christians, who hope to sanctify their ill-gotten wealth by dedicating a part of it to some pious uses! But God will not be mocked. Bp. Wilson.

† Heb. If I give, &c.

9 But they that have gathered it shall eat it, and praise the LORD; and they that have brought it together shall drink it in the courts of my holiness.

9. And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, &c.] They shall be acknowledged for God's ancient people, unto whom all the promises of the Gospel were made, and principally belong: see Acts iii. 25; xiii. 46. They shall be esteemed as the first-born or elder brethren in the Church. W. Lowth.

10. I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, &c.] The Jewish Church is here introduced as speaking, and returning her thanks to God for these great favours, that He hath advanced her and her sons to such honour after their dispersion, and made her thereby glorious in the eyes of the world. W. Lowth. She who was formerly described as sitting on the ground, and bewailing her condition, now comes forward with a joyful and assured heart, arrayed in all the splendour of the sanctuary. Vitringa. Allusion is made, as is evident from the marginal rendering, to the dress of the priesthood; of which so great was the magnificence, and so contrived and calculated were they, as Moses expresses it, "for glory and for beauty," that nothing can be imagined more striking, or to minds prepared, as those of the Jews were, to unite with this uncommon splendour the idea of the utmost sanctity, more awful, or more imposing! Bp. Lowth.

Chap. LXII. ver. 1. For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace,] Some interpreters have thought that the Prophet does not speak here in his own person, as our argument has it; but that God is the speaker, and professes His constant anxiety for His people; or that the Messiah declares that He will never cease interceding with God, till the redemption of Israel be brought to pass. Edit.

2. —thou shalt be called by a new name,] To "be called" signifies, in the sacred dialect, "to be;" (see notes on chap. ix. 6;) and the "new name" here promised implies a new condition, a change for the better. No particular name is pointed to; several appropriate to the altered state of Jerusalem are to be met with in the prophecies: (see ver. 4, 12. of this chapter:) compare Rev. ii. 17; iii. 12. Vitringa.

5. —so shall thy sons marry thee:] The word translated "thy sons," has been wrongly pointed by the Masoretes; and should rather be rendered "thy Restorer." The passage, thus corrected, will stand, "As a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy Restorer wed thee;" which corresponds exactly with what follows, "As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee." Bp. Lowth.

6. I have set watchmen &c. — ye that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence,] The faithful, in particular the Priests and Levites, are exhorted by the Prophet to beseech God with unremitting importunity to hasten the redemption of Zion. The image is taken from the temple service, in which there was appointed a constant watch, 1 Chron. ix. 33; see Ps. cxxxiv. Bp. Lowth. The margin gives it here, "the Lord's remembrancers;" it alludes to the office of the Priests and Levites, and their daily prayers for the welfare of the Church. The Scripture elsewhere speaks of God, after the manner of men, as one that may be overcome by importunity; see Luke xi. 8, 9; xviii. 5—7. W. Lowth. See note on Gen. vi. 6.

8. The Lord hath sworn by his right hand, &c.] What assurance could be more strong or satisfactory? God, as He cannot swear by any greater, swears by Himself, (Heb. vi. 13,) and His own Divine attributes: when this expression is used, some immutable decree of the Divine counsel follows; it is done in condescension to man's limited understanding, and as an assistance to the weakness of his faith. Vitringa.

9. But they that have gathered it shall eat it, and praise the Lord; &c.] The expressions here allude to the ordinances of the law, which required the people to spend their firstfruits, and other hallowed things, at the temple, in grateful acknowledgment to God for His blessings. W. Lowth.

Chap. LXIII. ver. 1. Who is this that cometh from Edom, &c.] The Prophet introduces some person, whether himself in vision or another, (St. Jerome fancies the angels,) wondering at an object which presents itself. This object is a Conqueror returning bloody from battle: of whom by way of dialogue, and in answer to the questions, who He is, and why so habited, an account is given; representing a mighty victory, obtained with much blood and slaughter, won by the powerful but single arm of this mighty Warriour; by which a total rout was given to His adversaries, at a time, when, if He had not interposed, no other was disposed, no other able, to have quelled the outrage and havock which they were making. His stained garments demonstrate the sharpness of the engagement, as His mien and manner of approach denote the invincible greatness of His strength.

In this description we have represented the hardships and the success of that combat with the enemies of our souls, by which Christ brought salvation to mankind; vanquishing sin and death, wresting the prey out of the hands of Satan, and, as the Apostle expresses it, "having spoiled principalities and powers, triumphing over them in His cross." Dean Stanhope. It is Christ that is thus magnificently described, returning to His capital, from the land of the enemy, after His passion. Bp. Horne. His "coming from Edom" is His rising from the dead; His return "from Bozrah" His coming back, having vanquished hell: Idumea standing for the kingdom of darkness and death, and Bozrah (the strong city of Edom) for the seat of the prince of darkness; agreeably to the custom, so familiar with the Prophets, of putting the sworn enemies of the commonwealth of Israel to express the mortal and immortal enemies of the souls of God's people. Bp. Andrewes.

Guided partly by the passage from the Revelation referred to in the margin, as well as by chap. xxxiv. and lix, other commentators have expounded this prophecy of a still future deliverance of the Church from her enemies, like that foretold in Ezek. xxxviii, and Rev. xx. Bp. Lowth inclines to this interpretation; remarking, that he knows of no event in history, to which from its importance and circumstances it can be applied, unless perhaps to the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish polity, which in the Gospel is called the coming of Christ, and the days of vengeance, Matth. xvi. 28, Luke xxi. 22. And Vitringa observes, that the great Personage here introduced is described, not as a sufferer, but as an agent; sprinkled not with His own blood, but with that of His enemies; and in the act, not of appeasing the wrath of God for the sins of His elect, but of executing it in the punishment of His enemies. The Church, however, by introducing it into her service for the Monday before Easter, appears to have considered this emblematick vision as applying to the death and passion of our blessed Saviour; whereby He trod the winepress of the Divine wrath alone, by the shedding of His own precious blood, and thus overcame the power of Satan. Edit.

5. — I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore mine own arm brought salvation &c.] I acted as one that looked for a while to see if any one of My people could find out human means to help and deliver them from the utter ruin they were likely to fall into; but after it was manifest, that no human succour was to be had, I was resolved to vindicate My own honour; and My zeal and concern for My people made Me go through with the undertaking, in spite of all opposition: compare Zech. viii. 2. Dr. Wells, W. Lowth.

6. And I will tread down the people &c.] Rather read with the Septuagint and Vulgate, "I have trod down," &c.; and so for the following sentences in this verse. W. Lowth, Bp. Lowth, Vitringa.

—— and make them drunk in my fury,] God's judgments are often represented by a cup of intoxicating liquor, because they astonish men, and bereave them of their usual discretion. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. li. 17; Jer. xxv. 15.

7. I will mention the lovingkindnesses of the Lord, &c.] The remaining part of this chapter, with the whole chapter following, contains a penitential confession and supplication of the Israelites in their present state of dispersion, in which they have so long marvellously subsisted, and still continue to subsist, as a people; cast out of their country, without any proper form of civil polity or religious worship; their temple destroyed, their city desolated and lost to them; and their whole nation scattered over the face of the earth; apparently deserted and cast off by the God of their fathers, as no longer His peculiar people. They begin with acknowledging God's great mercies and favours to their nation, and the ungrateful returns on their part; that by their disobedience they had forfeited the protection of God, and caused Him to become their adversary: the Prophet represents them, induced by the memory of the great things God had done for them, as addressing their humble supplication for the renewal of His mercies: they beseech Him to regard them in consideration of His former lovingkindness; confess their own wickedness and hardness of heart; acknowledge Him for their Father and Creator; intreat His forgiveness; and deplore their miserable condition. Bp. Lowth.

9. — the angel of his presence saved them:] The Angel who conducted the Israelites by the pillar of cloud and of fire was no other than the Logos, or second Person of the blessed Trinity; this divine Person is sometimes called an Angel, as Exod. xiv. 19; but at others the incommunicable name of Jehovah is given to Him: see note on Exod. xiii. 21. W. Lowth.

Concerning the Person, here called "the Angel of God's presence," see Exod. iii. 2, 6; xiii. 21; xiv. 19; xxiii. 20, 21; Judges xiii. 18, compared with Isai. ix. 6; Zech. xii. 8; and Mal. iii. 1. In this last passage from Malachi it is plain, that "the Messenger, or Angel of the covenant," the covenant of grace, was no other than Christ: and as allusion is made to the same Person in all the other passages before mentioned, and in the words of Isaiah in the text, it follows that He, who appeared to Moses, He who was seen by Manoah, He who was spoken of by Zechariah, He whom Isaiah describes as saving and redeeming Israel, must also be Christ. In the language of the Prophet, Christ is styled "the Angel of God's presence:" but mark the authority and dignity of His person; sometimes He is called "Wonderful;" sometimes "the Lord;" sometimes He is said to have "the name of God in Him;" and sometimes He is styled "God." He, therefore, to whom such appellations are given, can be no created being: He must be the eternal Son of God: He must be "the Word of God," by whom God speaks to mankind; He must be the same that "was in the beginning with God, and was God;" the same "by whom all things were created;" the same who was made man, the same who redeemed us, the same who ever liveth to make intercession for us. Bp. Hunting ford.

—— in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, &c.] If Isaiah found it reasonable, in terms so affectionate, to magnify the deliverance of God's people out of Egypt, and their settlement in the promised land; how insensible are they who read and hear of the release from a heavier tyranny, the destruction of the spiritual Pharaoh, the passage into the true and heavenly Canaan, opened at the expense of our Leader's own life, without impressions as grateful as human hearts can admit! And if he confess, that, after all the extraordinary appearances of Almighty God in their behalf, His people's disingenuous behaviour turned Him to be their enemy; how greatly ought we to fear, how carefully to avoid, any unworthy returns to One who hath loved us so tenderly, which may justly alienate His affection from us, and be at once our eternal ruin and reproach. Dean Stanhope.

13. — that they should not stumble?] That is, without obstacle. Bp. Lowth. The progress of the Israelites through the Red sea is compared here, for its freedom, to that of a courser in a country where there are the fewest impediments; and the safety of what might appear an hazardous passage, and the security to which it led, to cattle's going to pasture. Vitringa.

16. Doubtless thou art our father, &c.] However we have made ourselves by our sins unworthy to be owned by our father Abraham, yet do not Thou cast us utterly off from the benefit of that covenant, which Thou madest with him and his seed. Bp. Hall.

17. O Lord, why hast thou made us to err from thy ways,] The sense of this passage would have been more truly expressed, and the words as grammatically rendered, "why hast Thou suffered us to err." It is a pathetick expostulation with Almighty God, begging of Him to return to His sinful people, to convert and heal them. Dr. Waterland.

18. The people of thy holiness have possessed it but a little while: &c.] The Prophet says, "a little while," in comparison of God's promise, which, as the Jews commonly understood it, gave them the possession of Canaan for ever: see Gen. xvii. 8. If we understand what follows of the devastation made by the Romans under Titus, and by the Mahometans since, the phrase is exactly parallel to the words of Christ, Luke xxi. 24, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles." W. Lowth.

2 I have spread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people, which walketh in a way that was not good, after their own thoughts;

Chap. LXIV. ver. 4. — men have not heard, &c.] St. Paul, treating of God's extraordinary mercy in sending His Son into the world, and that wonderful manifestation of God in the flesh, by the Gospel, not to the Jews only, but to the Gentiles also, which he calls a mystery that had been hidden from the princes of the world, cites this passage from Isaiah: see the margin. The Apostle indeed applies the passage to the mystery of Christ's incarnation, as if it were the primary and more immediate sense of the prophecy. But as the coming of Christ in the flesh is the foundation of all God's blessings to mankind, the words, both in the Prophet and in the Apostle, are generally understood of the future and ultimate happy effects of the Divine mercy in the state of glory, and those joys and felicities of heaven, which are "prepared" and reserved for them that love God, and "wait for Him." Wogan.

5. Thou meetest him that rejoiceth and worketh righteousness,] That is, Thou preventest with Thy blessings him that rejoices to work righteousness. Dr. Wells.

—— behold, thou art wroth; for we have sinned: in those is continuance, and we shall be saved.] We have been guilty of great offences, but Thy mercies endure for ever, and Thy gracious promises are still the same: see Mal. iii. 6. The pronoun those refers to God's ways, by which we may understand, not only His laws, but likewise the dispensations of His providence. W. Lowth.

6. But we are all as an unclean thing, &c.] In this confession which the holy Prophet makes of the sins of the people, we see, not only the corrupted and degenerate state of the Jewish Church at that time, but what that temper and true spirit of piety is, which rules in good men. Such likewise was the behaviour of Daniel and other worthies in the Old Testament; and of St. Paul and other good men in the New: they assumed to themselves the characters, not of saints, but of sinners; they gloried not in their perfection, but confessed their sins and unworthiness. Wogan.

10. Thy holy cities are a wilderness,] Some refer this expression to all the cities of Judah; but the metropolis only was properly and especially "the holy city:" see chap. lii. 1. This was divided into the upper and lower city: see note on chap. xxii. 1. Vitringa, W. Lowth.

11. Our holy and our beautiful house, — is burned up with fire:] See our Saviour's prediction of the destruction of the temple, Matt. xxiv. 2. W. Lowth.

St. Jerome, and several other learned men, understood this chapter as a prayer for the manifestation of the Messiah. To Him indeed every part of it will, upon examination, be found very applicable; especially the fourth verse, which is applied by St. Paul to the times of Christ, and which has been already verified by Him in some degree; but will be more perfectly fulfilled at His second appearing, when He shall bow the heavens, and come down in the glory of His Father with the holy angels, to judge the quick and the dead; and shall raise His servants out of the corrupt dust of the earth, and give them bodies like His own glorious body; and shall cause them to ascend with Him into those immortal joys and pleasures which we have not at present tongues to express, nor thoughts to conceive; where He now liveth and reigneth, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, God blessed for evermore. Reading.

Chap. LXV. This chapter contains a defence of God's proceedings in regard to the Jews, with reference to their complaint in the preceding chapter. God is introduced declaring that He had called the Gentiles, though they had not sought Him; and had rejected His own people for their refusal to attend to His repeated call; for their obstinate disobedience, their idolatrous practices, and detestable hypocrisy: that nevertheless He would not destroy them all; but would preserve a remnant, to whom He would make good His ancient promises. Severe punishments are threatened to the apostates; and great rewards are promised to the obedient, in a future flourishing state of the Church. Bp. Lowth.

3 A people that provoketh me to anger continually to my face; that sacrificeth in gardens, and burneth incense † upon altars of brick;

5 Which say, Stand by thyself, come not near to me; for I am holier than thou. These are a smoke in my ‖ nose, a fire that burneth all the day.

‖ Or, anger.

6 Behold, it is written before me: I will not keep silence, but will recompense, even recompense into their bosom,

7 Your iniquities, and the iniquities of your fathers together, saith the LORD, which have burned incense upon the mountains, and blasphemed me upon the hills: therefore will I measure their former work into their bosom.

8 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, As the new wine is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy it not; for a blessing is in it: so will I do for my servants' sakes, that I may not destroy them all.

9 And I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob, and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains: and mine elect shall inherit it, and my servants shall dwell there.

10 And Sharon shall be a fold of flocks, and the valley of Achor a place for the herds to lie down in, for my people that have sought me.

12 Therefore will I number you to the sword, and ye shall all bow down to the slaughter: [b] because when I called, ye did not answer; when I spake, ye did not hear; but did evil before mine eyes, and did choose that wherein I delighted not.

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry: behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty: behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed:

15 And ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen: for the Lord GOD shall slay thee, and call his servants by another name:

16 That he who blesseth himself in the earth shall bless himself in the God of truth; and he that sweareth in the earth shall swear by the God of truth; because the former troubles are forgotten, and because they are hid from mine eyes.

17 ¶ For, behold, I create [c] new heavens

Ver. 3.—that sacrificeth in gardens, &c.] Instances of heathenish superstition and idolatrous practices, to which the Jews were immoderately addicted before the Babylonish captivity. See note on chap. i. 29. These apostates sacrificed upon altars built of bricks; in opposition to the command of God in regard to His altar, which was to be of unhewn stone, Exod. xx. 25. Bp. Lowth.

4. Which remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments,] For the purposes of necromancy and divination, to obtain dreams and revelations; for "monuments," we might render "caverns." Bp. Lowth. It was a common custom among the heathens for persons to lodge all night in the temples of their idols, (which were no better than monuments of the dead,) in order to obtain dreams that might be beneficial. W. Lowth.

—— which eat swine's flesh,] Which was expressly forbidden by the law, (Lev. xi. 7,) but among the heathen was in principal request in their sacrifices and festivals. Antiochus Epiphanes compelled the Jews to eat swine's flesh as a full proof of their renouncing their religion, 2 Mac. vi. 18; vii. 1. Bp. Lowth.

—— broth of abominable things is in their vessels;] That is, they make no difference of those meats which the law hath declared unclean. Bp. Hall.

5. Which say, Stand by thyself, &c.] The extreme offensiveness to God of spiritual pride and hypocrisy is compared to that of "smoke in the nose;" and the continual provocation kindled by it to "a fire that burneth all the day." Wogan. This description of a proud hypocrite agrees exactly with the temper of the Scribes and Pharisees in our Saviour's time. W. Lowth.

6.—into their bosom,] See note at Ps. lxxix. 12.

7.—which have burned incense upon the mountains, &c.] See the note on Gen. xxii. 2, "Upon one of the mountains."

8.—As the new wine is found in the cluster, &c.] As a few good grapes are found among a cluster of bad ones, and one speaks to another, that would pluck it from the tree, to spare it; so will I not destroy the whole nation for the sake of the few good persons which spring out from among the rest. W. Lowth.

10. And Sharon shall be a fold of flocks, and the valley of Achor &c.] These are two of the most fertile parts of Judea, famous for their rich pastures: the former to the west, not far from Joppa; the latter north of Jericho, near Gilgal. Bp. Lowth.

11.—that prepare a table for that troop, &c.] It was customary both among the Jews and Gentiles, after some part of the sacrifice had been offered upon the altar, to make a feast of the remainder. See chap. lvii. 7; Ezek. xxiii. 41. We read, 1 Cor. x. 21, of the "table of devils;" to whom the Gentiles sacrificed. W. Lowth.

The disquisitions and conjectures of the learned respecting the names "Gad and Meni" (see the margin) are infinite and uncertain: perhaps the most probable may be, that Gad means good fortune, and Meni the moon. Bp. Lowth.

12. Therefore will I number you to the sword,] An allusion to the derivation of the word Meni, which signifies "number:" such plays upon the words are frequent in the Prophets. W. Lowth.

15. And ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen:] Mine elect shall look upon you as a standing monument of God's indignation; your name shall be mentioned in a common form of imprecation, God do to me, as He has done to the wicked Jews, &c. The other name mentioned here may mean, that of Christians. W. Lowth. But see note on chap. lxii. 2.

16.—the God of truth;] The God of Amen in the Hebrew, rightly translated, "the God of truth:" Rev. iii. 14, Jesus Christ is called Amen; being the faithful and true witness, yea, the "Truth" itself, John xiv. 6, and perhaps in allusion to this place. Compare 2 Cor. i. 20. Bp. Beveridge, W. Lowth.

18 But be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create: for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy.

19 And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the [d] voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying.

[d] Rev. 21. 4.

20 There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed.

21 And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them.

22 They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect † shall long enjoy the work of their hands.

† Heb. shall make them continue long, or, shall wear out.

23 They shall not labour in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the LORD, and their offspring with them.

of religion; different from that which God had given to the Jews, and subversive of it; for it follows, "the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." Bp. Hurd. The Prophet describes, under this character, the state of things in the days of the Messiah. Dr. Berriman. St. Peter, in his second Epistle, chap. iii. 13, applies this passage of Isaiah to that new and refined state which is to succeed to the dissolution of this world, and in which righteousness is to dwell, agreeably to what is said chap. lx. 20, 21; see also Rev. xxi. 1. Jos. Mede, W. Lowth. And many have taken this for the primary and principal sense of the passage; but it appears that the establishment of the Christian Church and religion is what is more obviously and primarily pointed at in the expression, "new heavens and new earth;" (see chap. li. 16;) and that it is only to their more hidden and fullest meaning that St. Peter (referring to this and other passages of Isaiah) applies them as above. This creation of new heavens and earth began, at the time when the Gospel of Christ began its progress; is to be completed at that other time, when it shall please God (the Creator) to render it perfect, in the consummation of all things. The beginning and end are here blended together. Vitringa. The two advents of Christ are for the most part not distinguished in the Old Testament. Dr. Berriman.

18. — rejoice for ever in that which I create:] Rather, "rejoice in the age to come, which I create," agreeing with ver. 17. Bp. Chandler.

20. There shall be no more thence an infant of days, &c.] There shall be no untimely deaths: the Prophet describes this renovation of the world as a state similar to that which the Patriarchs enjoyed before the flood; the purport of the latter part of this verse is, that he that died an hundred years old might be looked on as dying in childhood, cut off in the beginning of his days, as a punishment for sin: it may be more plainly rendered, "He that dies an hundred years old, shall die a child; and the sinner that dies an hundred years old, shall be accursed." W. Lowth. Or, "He that dies an hundred years old, shall be (esteemed) accursed as a sinner." Dr. Wells.

22. — as the days of a tree are the days of my people,] It is commonly supposed that the oak, one of the most long-lived of the trees, lasts about a thousand years; the Prophet's idea, that the people should live to the age of the antediluvians, is therefore very justly expressed by the days of a tree. Bp. Lowth.

Chap. LXVI. A continuation of the subject of the foregoing chapter, which the Prophet pursues with more express declaration of the new economy, and of the flourishing state of the Church under it. The increase of the Church is to be sudden and astonishing. They that escape of the Jews, that is, that become converts to the Christian faith, are to be employed in the Divine mission to the Gentiles, and are to act as priests in presenting the Gentiles as an offering to God. See Rom. xv. 16. And both, now collected into one body, shall be witnesses of the final perdition of the obstinate and irreclaimable. These two chapters manifestly relate to the calling of the Gentiles, the establishment of the Christian dispensation, and the reprobation of the apostate Jews, and their destruction executed by the Romans. Bp. Lowth.

Ver. 1. Thus saith the Lord, The heaven is my throne, &c.] It hath pleased the Divine goodness to signify to us by this, that He lives and reigns on high, infinitely above all that we can think; and that the earth is at His foot to do what He will with it, and all that is on it: so that the earth is full of His glory, and the heaven of heavens is not able to contain it. Yet nevertheless, as God is said to dwell in heaven, because He there unvails Himself, and shines forth in all His glory, before the pure and holy creatures that dwell there, and are capable of beholding it; so is He said to dwell upon earth, in those places where He is graciously pleased to discover any of His Divine perfections in a more peculiar manner than elsewhere: thus were the tabernacle, and afterwards the temple, called God's house; and now in the Christian Church, wheresoever His faithful people meet together in His name, He is there with them. Bp. Beveridge.

A temple, in the Jewish notion, was God's habitation, where He resided as a king. W. Lowth. See note on chap. lx. 13. The Jews valued themselves much upon their temple, and the pompous system of services performed in it, which they thought of perpetual duration. Bp. Lowth. God admonishes them not to rely on His temple's being among them; that the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; that an humble and truly pious man is a living temple to Him, ver. 2; (compare chap. lvii. 15;) and that without inward piety, "he that killeth an ox" for sacrifice "is as if he slew a man," &c. Dr. Wells. Or ver. 3 may be translated more literally, "He that killeth an ox (the words is as if having been supplied) killeth a man; that sacrificeth a lamb, beheadeth a dog," &c.; and understood to express instances of extreme wickedness joined with hypocrisy; of the most flagitious crimes committed by those, who at the same time effected great strictness in the external services of religion. God upbraids the Jews with the same practices, Ezek. xxiii. 39; and the hypocrisy of the Pharisees is described as much the same, Matt. xxiii. 14. Bp. Lowth.

unto me? and where is the place of my rest?

2 For all those things hath mine hand made, and all those things have been, saith the LORD: but to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word.

3 He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man; he that sacrificeth a ‖ lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck; he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered swine's blood; he that † burneth incense, as if he blessed an idol. Yea, they have chosen their own ways, and their soul delighteth in their abominations.

4 I also will choose their ‖ delusions, and will bring their fears upon them; [b] because when I called, none did answer; when I spake, they did not hear: but they did evil before mine eyes, and chose that in which I delighted not.

5 ¶ Hear the word of the LORD, ye that tremble at his word; Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, [c] Let the LORD be glorified: but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed.

[c] Chap. 5. 19.

6 A voice of noise from the city, a voice from the temple, a voice of the LORD that rendereth recompence to his enemies.

7 Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man child.

8 Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children.

Before CHRIST about 698.

9 Shall I bring to the birth, and not ‖ cause to bring forth? saith the LORD: shall I cause to bring forth, and shut the womb? saith thy God.

‖ Or, beget.

10 Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her, all ye that love her: rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn for her:

11 That ye may suck, and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations; that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the ‖ abundance of her glory.

‖ Or, brightness.

12 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream: then shall ye suck, ye shall be [d] borne upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees.

[d] Chap. 49. 22. & 60. 4.

13 As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem.

14 And when ye see this, your heart shall rejoice, and your bones shall flourish like an herb: and the hand of the LORD shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies.

15 For, behold, the LORD will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire.

16 For by fire and by his sword will the LORD plead with all flesh: and the slain of the LORD shall be many.

17 They that sanctify themselves, and purify themselves in the gardens ‖ behind one tree in the midst, eating swine's flesh,

‖ Or, one after another.

3, 4. — they have chosen their own ways, &c.] God threatens the people, that, because they were abominable in their lives, He would abandon them, and give them over to a spirit of delusion. God is said to choose those things for us, which He permits us to fall into: when men abandon themselves to wickedness and impiety, God withdraws His grace from them; and, by His secret and just judgment, they are deprived of the faculty of discerning between truth and errour, between good and evil. See Rom. i. 28; 2 Thess. ii. 10—12. Abp. Tillotson. See notes on chap. vi. 10.

5. — said, Let the Lord be glorified:] Or, in derision called on God to do something extraordinary in your behalf. W. Lowth.

7. Before she travailed, she brought forth; &c.] In the prophetick language, the affliction which a people suffers, or persecution, in labouring to bring forth a new kingdom, is represented by the pain of a woman in labour to bring forth a man-child. Sir I. Newton. It is intimated here, that the increase of the Christian Church should be so sudden, as to be compared to a woman's bringing forth before her pains came on her. Dr. Wells.

12. — I will extend peace to her like a river,] Compare chap. xlviii. 18. W. Lowth.

14. — your bones shall flourish like an herb:] Ye shall be renewed, as if dry bones should recover their moisture; (compare Ecclus. xlvi. 12; xlix. 10.) In like manner St. Paul calls the receiving of the Jews into the Church, "life from the dead," Rom. xi. 15. The Jews from ancient times have used this text as a form over a person interred, at the same time throwing grass into the grave, to testify their belief in a resurrection. W. Lowth. See notes on chap. xxvi. 19. This passage, as well as that in chap. xxvi, seems to be, if not a direct assertion, at least an allusion, to a future resurrection of the dead; when the worshippers of the true God, in all ages of the world, shall have their lot in the kingdom promised to the saints of the Most High. Dr. S. Clarke.

15. For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, &c.] See the introductory note on this chapter; and the note on chap. ii. 10.

17. — behind one tree] The last word is supplied. Some versions have the reading which is given in our margin: but many learned men have supposed, that by the Hebrew Achad (signifying one) may be meant the Syrian deity Achad or Adad, which they held to be the highest and greatest of the gods, the same with Jupiter and the Sun, and which name, says Macrobius, signifies one: we trace this idol in the names of the Syrian kings, Ben-hadad, Hadad-ezer, &c.; according to this interpretation we may render, "after the rites of Achad, in the midst of those who eat swine's flesh," &c. Vitringa, Bp. Lowth. Or, "behind (the chapel or shrine of Achad, or) the Sun, in the midst" (of the garden.) W. Lowth.

—— eating swine's flesh, and the abomination, and the mouse,] See notes on chap. lxv. 4. The heathens used some meats by way of purification, chiefly such as were not used for common food; such were several of those meats forbidden by the law, and called "abominable" by Moses, Deut. xiv. 3; of this kind was probably "the mouse," which is expressly prohibited, Lev. xi. 29. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 698.

and the abomination, and the mouse, shall be consumed together, saith the LORD.

18 For I know their works and their thoughts: it shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come, and see my glory.

19 And I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal, and Javan, to the isles afar off, that have not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles.

20 And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the LORD out of all nations upon horses, and in chariots, and in ‖ litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the LORD, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the LORD.

Before CHRIST about 698.

21 And I will also take of them for [e] priests and for Levites, saith the LORD.

22 For as the [f] new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the LORD, so shall your seed and your name remain.

23 And it shall come to pass, that † from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the LORD.

24 And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me: for their [g] worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

19. — unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, &c.] All quarters of the globe. "Pul" does not occur any where else; it is supposed to be a place in the extremity of Egypt: the Prophet's object here is to designate the most remote parts. Vitringa.

21. And I will also take of them for priests &c.] Such was to be the privilege of the Gospel times! They were not to be legal "priests and Levites," but "taken from all nations:" such as might be proper ministers of the great High Priest, who was to come from the tribe of Judah, and be, not after the order of Aaron, but after the order of Melchizedek. Dr. Berriman.

22. — the new heavens and the new earth, &c.] Very rationally then does the Apostle (Heb. xii. 28) call the Christian dispensation "a kingdom which cannot be moved." Dr. Berriman.

23. — from one new moon to another, — shall all flesh come to worship] The expression here is accommodated to the condition of the Church under the Old Testament; (see note on chap. xix. 19;) but we are to understand, that in the "new world" here treated of, not the Jews only, (as was the case at the time of the delivery of the prophecy,) but all nations should come before the Lord to worship, in the frequent festivals of those blessed times. Jos. Mede. We are perhaps to understand the words to speak of these saints as being perpetually employed in serving and praising Him: see Rev. iv. 8; vii. 15. W. Lowth.

24. — for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched;] These words of the Prophet are applied by our blessed Saviour (in the passage from St. Mark referred to in the margin) to express the everlasting punishment of the wicked in hell: as our Lord expressed the state of the blessed by sensible images, such as Paradise, Abraham's bosom, &c. so He represents the place of torment under the image of Gehenna, and the punishment of the wicked, by the worm which there preyed on the carcases, and the fire which consumed the wretched victims: (see note on chap. xxx. 33:) marking however this difference strongly, that in the figurative Gehenna, the instruments of punishment shall be everlasting, the suffering without end. Bp. Lowth.

In these two concluding chapters we are made acquainted with God's reasons for rejecting His ancient people the Jews, and for calling the Gentiles into the Church and kingdom of the Messiah. His reason for rejecting the Jews was their incorrigible wickedness: His reason for calling the Gentiles was, not any merit or worthiness in them, but His own free grace and goodness towards them. Let these considerations impress upon our minds a profound sense of gratitude and love for the mercy of God to us Gentiles, and an aweful apprehension of His justice towards those who refuse His grace: or, as St. Paul expresses it, let us in this extraordinary dispensation towards the Jews and Gentiles "behold the goodness and severity of God: on them which fell, severity; but toward us, goodness, if we continue in His goodness; otherwise we also shall be cut off." Reading, Wogan.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET JEREMIAH.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Prophet Jeremiah was of the sacerdotal race, being, as he records himself, one of the priests that dwelt at Anathoth in the land of Benjamin, a city appropriated out of that tribe to the use of the priests the sons of Aaron, (Josh. xxi. 18,) and situate, as we learn from St. Jerome, about three miles north of Jerusalem. Some have supposed his father to have been that Hilkiah the high priest, by whom the book of the law was found in the temple in the reign of Josiah; but for this there is no better ground than his having borne the same name, which was no uncommon one among the Jews; whereas had he been in reality the high priest, he would doubtless have been mentioned by that distinguishing title, and not put upon a level with priests of an ordinary and inferiour class.

Jeremiah appears to have been very young when he was called to the exercise of the prophetical office; from which he modestly endeavoured to excuse himself by pleading his youth and incapacity; but being overruled by the Divine authority, he set himself to discharge the duties of his function with unremitted diligence and fidelity during a period of at least forty-two years, reckoned from the thirteenth year of Josiah's reign. In the course of his ministry he met with great difficulties and opposition from his countrymen of all degrees; whose persecution and ill usage sometimes wrought so far upon his mind, as to draw from him expressions in the bitterness of his soul, which many have thought hard to reconcile with his religious principles; but which, when duly weighed, may be found to demand our pity for his unmerited sufferings, rather than our censure for any want of piety and reverence towards God. He was in truth a man of unblemished piety and conscientious integrity; a warm lover of his country, whose misery he pathetically deplores; and so affectionately attached to his countrymen, notwithstanding their injurious treatment of him, that he chose rather to abide with them, and undergo all hardships in their company, than separately to enjoy a state of ease and plenty, which the favour of the king of Babylon would have secured to him. At length, after the destruction of Jerusalem, being carried with the remnant of the Jews into Egypt, whither they had resolved to retire, though contrary to his advice, upon the murder of Gedaliah, whom the Chaldeans had left governour in Judea, he there continued warmly to remonstrate against their idolatrous practices, foretelling the consequences that would inevitably follow. But his freedom and zeal are said to have cost him his life; for the Jews at Tahpanhes, as tradition goes, took such offence thereat, that they stoned him to death; which account of the manner of his end, though not absolutely certain, is at least very probable, considering the temper and disposition of the parties concerned. Their wickedness however did not long pass without its reward; for, in a few years after, they were miserably destroyed by the Babylonian armies, which invaded Egypt according to the Prophet's prediction, chap. xliv. 27, 28.

The idolatrous apostasy, and other criminal enormities of the people of Judah, and the severe judgments which God was prepared to inflict upon them, but not without a distant prospect of future restoration and deliverance, are the principal subject matters of the following prophecies; excepting only the 45th chapter, which relates personally to Baruch; and the six succeeding chapters, which respect the fortunes of some particular heathen nations. It is observable however, that though many of these prophecies have their particular dates annexed to them, and other dates may be tolerably well conjectured from certain internal marks and circumstances, there appears much disorder in the arrangement, not easy to be accounted for on any principle of regular design, but probably the result of some accident or other, which has disturbed the original order. The best arrangement of the chapters appears to be according to the list, which will be presently subjoined: the different reigns, in which the prophecies were delivered, were most probably as follows.

The twelve first chapters seem to contain all the prophecies delivered in the reign of the good king Josiah.

During the short reign of Shallum, or Jehoahaz, his second son, who succeeded him, Jeremiah does not appear to have had any revelation.

Jehoiakim, the eldest son of Josiah, succeeded. The prophecies of this reign are continued on from the 13th to the 20th chapter inclusively; to which we must add the 22d, 23d, 25th, 26th, 35th, and 36th chapters, together with the 45th, 46th, 47th, and most probably the 48th, and as far as to verse 34 of the 49th chapter.

Jeconiah, the son of Jehoiakim, succeeded. We read of no prophecy that Jeremiah actually delivered in this king's reign: but the fate of Jeconiah, his being carried into captivity, and continuing an exile till the time of his death, were foretold early in his father's reign, as may be particularly seen in the 22d chapter.

The last king of Judah was Zedekiah, the youngest son of Josiah. The prophecies delivered in his reign are contained in the 21st and 24th chapters, the 27th to the 34th, and the 37th to the 39th inclusively, together with the six last verses of the 49th chapter, and the 50th and 51st chapters concerning the fall of Babylon.

The siege of Jerusalem in the reign of Zedekiah, and the capture of the city, are circumstantially related in the 52d chapter: and a particular account of the subsequent transactions is given in the 40th to the 44th inclusively.

The arrangement of the chapters, alluded to above, is here subjoined: 1—20, 22, 23, 25, 26, 35, 36, 45, 24, 29, 30, 31, 27, 28, 21, 34, 37, 32, 33, 38, 39 from the 15th to the 18th verse, 39 from the 1st to the 14th verse, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 46, and so on. Dr. Blayney.

The prophecies of Jeremiah, of which the circumstantial accomplishment is often specified in the Old and New Testament, are of a very distinguished and illustrious character. He foretold the fate of Zedekiah, chap. xxxiv. 2—5; (compare with 2 Chron. xxxvi. 19; 2 Kings xxv. 5; and Jer. lii. 11;) the Babylonish captivity, the precise time of its duration, and the return of the Jews. He described the destruction of Babylon, and the downfall of many nations, chap. xxv. 12, (see also chap. ix. 26; xxv. 19—25; xlii. 10—18; xlvi. and following chapters,) in predictions, of which the gradual and successive completion kept up the confidence of the Jews for the accomplishment of those prophecies, which he delivered relative to the Messiah and His period, chap. xxiii. 5, 6; xxx. 9; xxxi. 15; xxxiii. 14—18; xxxiii. 9, 26. He foreshewed the miraculous conception of Christ, chap. xxxi. 22; the virtue of His atonement; the spiritual character of His covenant; and the inward efficacy of His laws, chap. xxxi. 31—36; xxxiii. 8. Jeremiah, contemplating those calamities which impended over his country, represented, in the most descriptive terms, and under the most expressive images, the destruction that the invading enemy should produce. He bewailed, in pathetick expostulation, the shameless adulteries which had provoked the Almighty, after long forbearance, to threaten Judah with inevitable punishment, at the time that false prophets deluded the nation with the promises of "assured peace," and when the people, in impious contempt of "the Lord's word," defied its accomplishment. Jeremiah intermingles with his prophecies some historical relations relative to his own conduct, and to the completion of those predictions which he had delivered. The reputation of Jeremiah had spread among foreign nations, and his prophecies were deservedly celebrated in other countries. Many heathen writers have likewise undesignedly borne testimony to the truth and accuracy of his prophetick and historical descriptions. Dr. Gray.

As to the style of Jeremiah, this Prophet is by no means wanting either in elegance or sublimity, although, generally speaking, inferiour to Isaiah in both. His thoughts indeed are somewhat less elevated, and he is commonly more large and diffuse in his sentences; but the reason of this may be, that he is mostly taken up with the gentler passions of grief and pity, for the expression of which he has a peculiar talent. This is most evident in "the Lamentations," where those passions altogether predominate; but it is often visible also in his "Prophecies," in the former part of the book more especially, which is principally poetical; the middle parts are chiefly historical; but the last part, consisting of six chapters, is entirely poetical, and contains several oracles distinctly marked, in which this Prophet falls very little short of the lofty style of Isaiah. But of the whole book of Jeremiah it is hardly the one half which I look upon as poetical. Bp. Lowth.

Chap. I. ver. 1. The words of Jeremiah] This chapter forms an entire section by itself. It contains the call of Jeremiah, and the commission given him by God, the purport of which is explained by two symbolical images. God encourages him to proceed in the execution of it by assuring him of protection and support. Dr. Blayney.

—— Anathoth] See the Introduction for the situation of this place.

2, 3. — in the days of Josiah, — unto the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah] See the chapters distributed according to the reigns of the several kings in the Introduction to this book.

Jeremiah prophesied forty-one years and upwards, if we take in the prophecies he uttered in Egypt after the captivity, chap. xliii, xliv, which are not included between the reigns of Josiah and Zedekiah. W. Lowth.

4. Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,] This seems to have been a visible appearance of the Divine Majesty, made by the Son of God, or the second Person of the blessed Trinity; see note on Isai. vi. 1: who appeared in an human shape, as a prelude to the incarnation, first to Adam, Gen. iii. 8; then to Abraham, Gen. xviii. 2; afterwards to Joshua, Josh. v. 13; as also to Ezekiel, chap. i. 26; and to Daniel, chap. viii. 15, 18; x. 6, 10. Of the same kind was this vision represented to Jeremiah. Compare the ninth verse of this chapter with the forementioned texts of Daniel. W. Lowth.

5. — I knew thee;] Some persons have been designed for certain offices by a particular decree of God, from or before their coming into the world. So was John the Baptist, Luke i. 15; and St. Paul, Gal. i. 15; and the Prophet Jeremiah here in the text. This favour is expressed by "knowing" him, or taking especial notice of him, as if a prince should single out one particular person, and call him by name, and appoint him to some honourable office and trust. So God expresses His peculiar favour for Moses, by saying, "I know thee by name;" Exod. xxxiii. 12, 17. W. Lowth. The phrase "I knew thee" may signify, "I had thee in my view," or approved thee as a fit and proper object: as in Acts xv. 18, "Known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world:" He contemplated the plan of them, and approved it in His mind, before He created and brought them into being. Dr. Blayney.

To the same effect it is said, that God "sanctified" him, or set him apart for the prophetical office: the same phrase being applied to our Saviour Himself, whom God in an eminent manner "sanctified" or set apart for the offices of King, Priest, and Prophet; and in due time "sent Him into the world" to execute the same, John x. 36. W. Lowth.

6. — I am a child.] Not strictly within the years of childhood: but he calls himself "a child," by way of extenuating his abilities. Solomon calls himself "a little child" when he was married, and at least twenty years old, 1 Kings iii. 1, 7. And the word "child," or youth, is elsewhere used of those who were arrived at the first years of manhood. So Isaac is called a "lad," or youth, when he must have been twenty or thirty years old. The Romans extended their word for youth to thirty or forty years of age. W. Lowth. The same word is translated a "young man" in 2 Sam. xviii. 5.

8. Be not afraid of their faces: for I am with thee] The style of God's commission to His Prophets and messengers commonly runs in these words, "I will be with thee:" see Exod. iii. 12; Deut. xxxi. 8; Josh. i. 5; importing that God, who sent them, will enable them to discharge the office He has committed to them, and will give them strength proportioned to the business they undertake. W. Lowth.

am with thee to deliver thee, saith the LORD.

9 Then the LORD put forth his hand, and [f] touched my mouth. And the LORD said unto me, Behold, I have [g] put my words in thy mouth.

10 See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to [h] root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant.

11 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, Jeremiah, what seest thou? And I said, I see a rod of an almond tree.

12 Then said the LORD unto me, Thou hast well seen: for I will hasten my word to perform it.

13 And the word of the LORD came unto me the second time, saying, What seest thou? And I said, I see a seething pot; and the face thereof is † toward the north.

14 Then the LORD said unto me, Out of the [i] north an evil † shall break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land.

15 For, lo, I will [k] call all the families of the kingdoms of the north, saith the LORD; and they shall come, and they shall set every one his throne at the entering of the gates of Jerusalem, and against all the walls thereof round about, and against all the cities of Judah.

16 And I will utter my judgments against them touching all their wickedness, who have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, and worshipped the works of their own hands.

17 ¶ Thou therefore gird up thy loins, and arise, and speak unto them all that I command thee: be not dismayed at their faces, lest I ‖ confound thee before them.

18 For, behold, I have made thee this day [l] a defenced city, and an iron pillar, and brasen walls against the whole land, against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, and against the people of the land.

19 And they shall fight against thee; but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee, saith the LORD, to deliver thee.

10. — to root out, and to pull down, &c.] The Prophets are said to do things, when they declare God's purpose of doing them. See Isai. vi. 10; Ezek. xliii. 3. In the same manner God here appoints Jeremiah to declare His purposes concerning the overthrow or restoration of kingdoms and nations, according as they should persist in, or repent of, their sins: compare chap. xviii. 7. In pursuance of these directions, some of the following prophecies foretell the destruction of the Jewish and other nations; see chap. xxv. 15, &c.: and others predict their restoration; see chap. xxx. xxxi. xlviii. 47; xlix. 6, 39. W. Lowth. See Gen. xli. 13.

11. — I see a rod of an almond tree.] The almond tree is supposed to have received its Hebrew name, because it is the first tree that waketh or riseth from its winter repose. Accordingly, Pliny says, that this tree flowers in January, and by March brings its fruit to maturity; (meaning in warm southern climates;) and more modern travellers attest the same fact. And the word in the next verse, rendered "hasten," signifies properly to wake or watch: so that here is at once an allusion to the property of the almond tree, and in the original an affinity of sound, which makes the allusion more striking there, than it can be in a translation. Parkhurst, Dr. Blayney.

13. — toward the north.] The phrase should be rendered "from the north," or "from the face of the north," as in the margin. From the next verse it appears, that the evil was to come from the north: and therefore the steam, which was designed for an emblem of that evil, must have issued from that quarter. The pot denoted the empire of the Babylonians and Chaldeans, lying to the north of Judea, and pouring forth its multitudes, like a thick vapour, to overspread the land. Dr. Blayney. See the note on chap. iv. 6.

These comparisons had no appearance of meanness among a people accustomed to see in the temple of the Lord victims, the flesh of which was dressed in caldrons, for the use of the priests, and of the individuals who came thither to offer sacrifice. Calmet.

15. — all the families of the kingdoms of the north,] There were inferiour kings and princes, who were either allies or tributaries to the Babylonian empire: compare chap. xxxiv. 1; l. 41; li. 27. God saith, all these shall join their forces with the Chaldean army, in order to the conquest of Judea. The word "family" is equivalent to people here, and in chap. viii. 3; x. 25. W. Lowth.

In wars of this sort kings of extensive empires led with them inferiour princes, their subjects or allies. We may see an instance of this in the army of Holofernes, Judith ii. 7; and in that of Ben-hadad, king of Syria, who had with him as many as two and thirty kings, 1 Kings xx. 1. Calmet.

—— shall set every one his throne] Each prince shall pitch his royal pavilion, with all the marks of sovereignty belonging to it, in token of having obtained a complete victory, and taken entire possession of the city: see chap. xliii. 10. W. Lowth. To "set up a throne" in or over any place, denotes taking full possession of it, and exercising authority and dominion there. Dr. Blayney.

17. — gird up thy loins, &c.] See the notes on 1 Kings xviii. 46; Job xxxviii. 3.

18. For, behold, I have made thee this day a defenced city, &c.] For, behold, I do this day confirm thee against all the opposition which shall be made unto thee; thou shalt be more surely defended from henceforth than a strongly walled city; more firm than a pillar of iron, or walls of brass. Bp. Hall.

Chap. II. The prophecy, begun in this chapter, is continued to the end of the fifth verse of the next chapter. In it God professes to retain the same kindness and favourable disposition towards Israel which He had manifested in their earlier days. He expostulateth with them on their ungrateful returns for His past goodness; and sheweth, that it was not want of affection in Him, but their own extreme and unparalleled wickedness and disloyalty, which had already subjected, and would still subject, them to calamities and misery. He concludes with a pathetick address, exhorting them to return to Him, with an implied promise of acceptance; and laments the necessity He was under through their continued obstinacy, of giving them further marks of His displeasure. This prophecy may not improbably have been delivered soon after the beginning of the Prophet's mission. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 2. — I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, &c.] I remember My first kindness to thee, when I delivered thee out of Egypt, (compare Hos. ii. 15,) and espoused thee to Myself, to be My own peculiar people. The covenant which God made with the Jews at mount Sinai is commonly represented under the metaphor of a marriage contract. W. Lowth.

3. Israel was holiness unto the Lord, &c.] Israel was then consecrated to the Lord, and set apart for His service; as the firstfruits are wont to be sequestered and devoted to God, so that all who devour them bring evil upon themselves. Bp. Hall.

5. — walked after vanity,] That is, after the idolatrous worship of the heathens. Idols are commonly styled "vanities," chap. x. 15; xiv. 22; xvi. 19; and "things of nought," chap. xiv. 14; because "an idol is nothing in the world," as St. Paul speaks, 1 Cor. viii. 4. W. Lowth.

6. — a land—of pits,] Irwin describes the wilderness, through which God led His chosen people, as presenting in various parts a wild confusion of hanging precipices, disjointed rocks, and hideous and horrid chasms, which appear very alarming and tremendous to travellers. Harmer.

—— the shadow of death,] This image was borrowed from those dusky caverns and holes among the rocks, which the Jews ordinarily chose for their burying-places; where death seemed to hover continually, casting over them his broad shadow. Dr. Blayney.

8. The priests said not, Where is the Lord? &c.] The priests, whose office it was to instruct others in their duty, Mal. ii. 6, 7, were ignorant or regardless of it themselves. This was the principal reason of that degeneracy of manners which prevailed among the people. See Hos. iv. 6. W. Lowth.

9. — I will yet plead with you,] That is, I will maintain by arguments the equity of My proceedings, and the iniquity of yours. Dr. Blayney.

10. — the isles of Chittim,] See the note on Gen. x. 5.

"The isles of Chittim" are Italy, and the adjacent provinces of Europe which lie along the Mediterranean sea. And as these were to the west of Judea, and Kedar in Arabia to the east, the plain purport of this passage is, Look about you to the west and to the east. Dr. Blayney.

11. Hath a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods?] Men are very tenacious of the religion of their forefathers, and with difficulty prevailed on to renounce it, though the change be never so reasonable. Whereas the Jews have changed the worship of the true God for idols and vanities. W. Lowth.

12. Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, &c.] See the note on Isai. i. 2.

13. — they have forsaken me the fountain of living waters, &c.] God is the Author and Giver of all blessings, both spiritual and temporal; and from Him all good gifts are derived, as from an inexhaustible spring or fountain: see Ps. xxxvi. 9. And wherever else men place their happiness, whether in false religions, or in the uncertain comforts of worldly blessings, they will find themselves disappointed, just as they that expect to find water at broken cisterns or conduits. W. Lowth.

14. Is Israel a servant? &c.] God redeemed Israel from the bondage of Egypt, and adopted Him for His son, Exod. iv. 22: so that his present servitude, and his being made a prey to so many foreign enemies, cannot be ascribed to his birth or primitive condition, but must be imputed to his sins, of which his slavery is the consequence. Compare Isai. l. 1; lii. 3. W. Lowth.

15. The young lions roared upon him,] In the figurative style of prophecy, "lions" denote "powerful princes and conquerors." Such were Pharaoh-necho king of Egypt, and Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; whose successive hostilities against the kingdom of Judah seem here to be foretold.

It may be observed, that the verbs in this verse express the time past; but the context shews that they must be understood of the future. Nor is it unusual for the Prophets thus to speak of events foreseen by them, as if they had been already accomplished. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney. See the note on Deut. xxxii. 15.

16. Also the children of Noph &c.] This alludes to the severe blow which the nation received in a capital part, when the good king Josiah was defeated by the Egyptians, and slain in battle: or when afterwards, upon the deposition of Jehoahaz, the glory of the monarchy was debased, by its being changed into a tributary and dependant kingdom, 2 Kings xxiii. 33, 34. Noph and Tahapanes were two principal cities of Egypt, otherwise called Memphis, and Daphnæ Pelusiacæ. Dr. Blayney.

——have broken the crown of thy head.] The Prophet here pursues the metaphor of the lions, ver. 15, whose custom it is "to tear the arm with the crown of the head," Deut. xxxiii. 20. The margin reads, "feed upon thy crown;" that is, destroy and devour the principal or best parts of the country. So the best spices are called "the head of spices" in the original, Exod. xxx. 23; Cant. iv. 14. W. Lowth.

18. —to drink the waters of Sihor?] At ver. 13 it is said, that the people had "forsaken Jehovah, the fountain of living waters;" by a like figure they are here reproved for proceeding, after the manner of the Egyptians and Assyrians, "to drink the waters of their rivers;" that is, to have recourse for help to the gods, on whom those nations placed their dependence. Sihor is a name given to the Nile, Isai. xxiii. 3; and the Euphrates is called "the river" by way of eminence. Dr. Blayney. See note on Gen. xv. 18.

19. —it is an evil thing and bitter, &c.] This is applicable to individuals as well as to nations. Life was not intended to be led inconsistently; one part in doing wrong, the other in being sorry for it. Uniform obedience is our Maker's demand; and whoever departs from it wilfully, though he may return, will assuredly be made to "know and see," one way or other, that "it is a thing evil and bitter, that he hath forsaken the Lord his God." Abp. Secker.

22. For though thou wash thee with nitre, &c.] Though thou endeavourest to wash away thy sins by the rites of expiation prescribed by the law, or practised by idolaters; though thou insistest upon thy own innocence and justification, (ver. 23;) yet the "marks" or stains of thy sins will always appear in the sight of God, till they are cleansed by a sincere repentance and reformation. W. Lowth.

——nitre,] Natron, (which is here meant by nitre,) whether native or purified, dissolves in a very small quantity of water; and this solution is in many parts of Asia used for washing: it is made into soap by mixing it with oil. Parkhurst. See Note at Prov. xxv. 20.

23. —see thy way in the valley,] See how thou hast prostituted thyself, and practised the grossest idolatry in the valley; alluding to those idolatrous acts which were practised in the valley of Hinnom. See chap. vii. 31; Isai. lvii. 5, 6. Dr. Blayney. The horrible practice of the Jewish idolaters, in burning their sons and their daughters in the fire, effectually confuted their pretences to innocence, since this way of worship had been expressly forbidden by God, Lev. xx. 2, &c. W. Lowth.

——thou art a swift dromedary traversing her ways;] The impossibility of restraining one of these fleet animals, when hurried away by the impetuous call of nature, is represented as a parallel to that unbridled lust and eagerness, with which the people of Judah ran after the gratification of their passion for idolatry, which is called spiritual whoredom. Dr. Blayney.

For the dromedary, see the note on Gen. xxiv. 10; and for the wild ass, see the notes on Job xxxix. 5—8; Hosea viii. 9.

——traversing her ways;] That is, winding or crossing her way or path: running up and down in a disorderly manner. Parkhurst.

24. —all they that seek her will not weary themselves; &c.] The animal is described in the season of her lust, when "all they that seek her," that is, the males, "will not weary themselves," but on the contrary will find her eager to meet them. Calmet.

25. Withhold thy foot from being unshod, &c.] This is probably a warning to beware of the consequences of pursuing the courses they were addicted to; as if it had been said, Take care that thou dost not expose thyself by thy wicked ways to the wretched condition of going into captivity unshod, as the manner is represented, chap. xx. 4; and of serving thine enemies in hunger, and in thirst, and in want of the necessaries of life, Deut. xxviii. 48. Dr. Blayney.

——but thou saidst, There is no hope: no; &c.] But thou continuest obstinate, and sayest secretly, There is no hope of my reclaiming: no; I have taken a deep affection to the strange gods of the Gentiles, and I will go after them. Bp. Hall. They are the words of desperate sinners, who are resolved to continue in their wickedness, in spite of all the reason that can be offered to the contrary. Compare chap. xviii. 12. W. Lowth.

† THEY say, if a man put away his wife, and she go from him, and become another man's, [a] shall he return unto her again? shall not that land be greatly polluted? but thou hast played the harlot with many lovers; yet return again to me, saith the LORD.

† Heb. Saying. [a] Deut. 24. 4.

2 Lift up thine eyes unto the high places,

28.—according to the number of thy cities are thy gods, O Judah.] The Israelites had now contracted all the habits of the Egyptians. It had been long peculiar to their superstition, for every city of that empire to have its tutelary deity, besides those which were worshipped in common. Jeremiah here tells us, that the people of Judah bore part with them in that extravagance. Bp. Warburton.

30. In vain have I smitten your children; &c.] The design of God's judgments is men's reformation: and where they do not attain this end, it shews that such a people are incorrigible. The people of Judea were so far from "receiving correction," and turning God's chastisements to their own improvement, that they put to death the Prophets, who in God's name reproved them and exhorted them to repentance. See 2 Chron. xxiv. 20, 21; xxxvi. 16; Neh. ix. 26; Matt. xxiii. 30—37; Acts vii. 52. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

Merely feeling the pressure of distress will do us no service, without attending properly to Him from whom it comes. On the contrary, when God saith, "In vain have I smitten your children, they received no correction," it implies that they were hardened in wickedness; whereas, when "the voice of the Lord crieth, the man of wisdom will hear the rod, and who hath appointed it," Mic. vi. 9. Abp. Secker.

31. O generation, see ye the word of the Lord. &c.] O ye unthankful generation, attend to this word of the Lord. Have I been barren of My favours to you? Have I yielded you no variety of comfortable fruits? Have I not enlightened you with the knowledge of My name and My laws? and now, when I have brought you into your promised land, and settled you there, ye are ready to say in your presumption, We are lords, and have gotten to ourselves these dominions; we will regard Thee no more. Bp. Hall.

33. Why trimmest thou thy way to seek love?] The Prophet alludes, as before ver. 20, to the practices of a common harlot, who decks herself, and uses all the inveigling arts that may recommend her. Thus has Judea tried all methods to gain the friendship of foreign idolaters, who are called her lovers. See chap. iii. 1; iv. 30; xxii. 22. W. Lowth.

——therefore hast thou also taught the wicked ones thy ways.] Thou hast by these means not only confirmed those nations in their idolatrous practices, but hast also taught them to practise new idolatries, to which they were not accustomed. W. Lowth.

34. Also in thy skirts is found the blood of the souls of the poor innocents:] Thou art plainly found guilty of the blood of My Prophets. Bp. Hall. Or, of the children offered in sacrifice to Moloch: see ver. 23; chap. xix. 4; Ps. cvi. 38. The guilt of that innocent blood was as evident upon them, as if they had murdered them with their own hands, and the stains of blood had been found upon their clothes. W. Lowth. The "skirts" may signify both the skirts of a garment, and the outskirts or borders of a city or country; both which senses are probably here intended, the former being the metaphorical, the latter the literal, sense. Dr. Blayney.

——I have not found it by secret search,] "I have not found it (that is, the blood) by digging," as in the margin; or, according to the Greek and Latin versions, "in a digged hole or pit." Compare Ezek. xxiv. 7. Parkhurst.

36.—thou also shalt be ashamed of Egypt, &c.] The people of Judah seem to have courted the assistance of foreign nations by a sinful compliance with their idolatrous customs. This measure had failed them. Ahaz made himself tributary to the king of Assyria, but it turned to his disgrace and ruin: see 2 Chron. xxviii. 21. In like manner, the Prophet says, they shall be disappointed in their expectations of succour from Egypt: see chap. xxxvii. 5, 7; Lam. iv. 17; 2 Kings xxiv. 7. Dr. Blayney, W. Lowth.

37.—thine hands upon thine head:] To cover the head was a mark of great affliction. See chap. xiv. 3; 2 Sam. xiii. 19; xv. 30. Dr. Blayney.

2. — In the ways hast thou sat for them, as the Arabian in the wilderness;] That is, thou hast waited for opportunities of practising thine idolatries, as the Arabian waits for a prey in the wilderness. Bp. Hall. The Arabs wait for caravans with the most violent avidity, looking about them on all sides, raising themselves up on their horses, running here and there to see if they cannot perceive any smoke, or dust, or tracks on the ground, or any other marks of people passing along. Sir J. Chardin.

3. Therefore the showers have been withholden, &c.] The general import of this passage is, That God had begun in some degree to chastise His people, (as He threatened, Lev. xxvi. 19; Deut. xxviii. 23,) with a view to their reformation; yet His chastisement had not produced the desired effect, for they continued as abandoned as before, without shewing the least sign of shame or remorse. By "the showers" we are to understand what is otherwise called "the former or first rain," being the first that falls in autumn after a long summer's drought, which is usually terminated in Judea and the neighbouring countries by heavy showers, that last for some days. Dr. Blayney. Concerning the rains of Judea, see the notes on Deut. xi. 14; xxviii. 12.

5. Will he reserve his anger for ever? &c.] In this and the foregoing verse God puts into the people's mouths words, whereby they might express their humiliation and their hope in His mercy, which they might still expect on their true repentance. He concludes with affirming, that His arguments had no weight with them: "Behold, thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou couldest;" they continued to do as they had said or resolved; they carried their wicked thoughts into execution, in spite of all His remonstrances and expostulations. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

6. The Lord said also unto me] Here begins an entire new section, or distinct prophecy, which is continued to the end of the sixth chapter. The charge of hypocrisy upon Judah, ver. 10, points out the date of this prophecy to have been in the reign of Josiah, and some time after his eighteenth year, when the people under the influence of their good king were professedly engaged in measures of reformation; which however are here declared to have been insincere.

This prophecy consists of two distinct parts. The first part contains a complaint against Judah, for having exceeded the guilt of her sister Israel, whom God had already cast off for her idolatrous apostasy, ver. 6—12. The Prophet is hereupon sent to announce to Israel the promise of pardon upon her repentance, and the hopes of a glorious restoration in aftertimes, which are plainly marked out to be the times of the Gospel, when the Gentiles themselves were to become a part of the Church, ver. 12—21. The children of Israel, confessing and bewailing their sins, have the same comfortable assurances as before repeated to them, ver. 22; chap. iv. 2.

In the second part, which begins chap. iv. 3, and is prefaced with an address to the people of Judah and Jerusalem, exhorting them to prevent the Divine judgments by a timely repentance, the Babylonian invasion is clearly and fully foretold, with all the miseries which would attend it; and the universal and incorrigible depravity of the people is represented at large, and pointed out as the justly provoking cause of the national ruin. Dr. Blayney.

—— backsliding Israel] See the note on chap. vii. 24.

7. — And her treacherous sister Judah saw it.] The two kingdoms of Israel and Judah are described as sisters in iniquity. The same metaphor is applied to Samaria and Jerusalem, the two metropolis's of those kingdoms, Ezek. xxiii. 4, &c. The word "treacherous" properly denotes a wife unfaithful to her husband; see ver. 20. W. Lowth.

9. And it came to pass through the lightness &c.] She was not nice in her choice of objects; but eagerly fell in with all kinds of idolatrous worship indiscriminately, descending so low as to images of wood and stone. Dr. Blayney.

11. — The backsliding Israel hath justified herself] That is, hath appeared righteous in comparison with Judah. A phrase of the like sort occurs, Luke xviii. 14. Dr. Blayney.

Israel and Judah are both shamefully wicked: and yet, of the two, Judah is worse than Israel: her treachery is so much more, as she had more favours from Me. Bp. Hall. She sinned against greater convictions; and would not take warning by that desolation, which God brought on the whole kingdom of Israel for their idolatries. Compare Ezek. xvi. 51. W. Lowth.

12. — toward the north,] Assyria and Media, whither the ten tribes of Israel were carried by their conqueror, lay to the north of Judea. W. Lowth. See the note on chap. iv. 6.

14. — I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, &c.] The word "family" here is equivalent to a country or kingdom: compare chap. i. 15; Zech. xiv. 17, 18. W. Lowth. This passage relates to their call into the Christian Church, into which they were brought, not all at a time, nor in a national capacity, but severally as individuals, here and there one. So it is said, "And ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel," Isaiah xxvii. 12. Dr. Blayney.

16. — they shall say no more, The ark of the covenant of the Lord:] Here God comforts the Jews with an assurance, that, though upon their return to Him they might not find themselves in possession of exactly the same privileges as they had before, they should receive ample indemnification, so as to leave them no just cause of regret. The ark of the covenant was the visible seat of God's residence among His people; it was therefore the object of their boast; but after the destruction of the first temple, they had it no more. But to compensate this loss, they are told in the next verse, that "Jerusalem should be called the throne of the Lord," to which, not the Jews only, but "all the nations should be gathered." By Jerusalem is meant the Christian Church: see Gal. iv. 26; Rev. xxi. 2, 3. The greater privileges of this latter would supersede all boast on account of those, which had at any time belonged to the Jewish church. Dr. Blayney.

—— neither shall it come to mind: neither shall they remember it;] Meaning, The Jews shall then be convinced that the ark and other parts of the Mosaical dispensation are abrogated by Christ and His Gospel, which they will then embrace. Dr. Wells.

18. In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel,] Most of the prophecies, which mention the restoration of the Jews, join Judah and Israel together, as equal sharers in that blessing. See chap. xxx. 3; xxxi. 1; l. 4, 20; Isai. xi. 13; Ezek. xxxvii. 16, 22; Hos. i. 11; Zech. x. 6. W. Lowth.

19. But I said, How shall I put thee &c.] But I said, How shall it come about, that thou, which deservedst not the name of a servant, shalt become a dear son to Me; and shalt have a pleasant and happy inheritance bequeathed to thee, even a blessed room in My Church? And I answered Myself again, It is by the means of thy faithful invocation of Me, and of thy true repentance and holy obedience, that this shall be effected. Bp. Hall. The conditions of adoption into the Christian Church, and of enjoying the privileges of the Gospel covenant, are expressly stated by Christ and his Apostles to be the same as are here prescribed; namely, the profession of a true faith in God, and uniform obedience for the time to come. "Thou shalt call Me, My Father; and shalt not turn away from Me." Dr. Blayney.

21. A voice was heard upon the high places,] The Prophet, foreseeing that the Jews will at length be touched with an hearty repentance for all their misdoings, represents them as bewailing themselves upon "the high places," the scenes of their former idolatries. Compare chap. xxxi. 9; l. 4; Zech. xii. 10. W. Lowth.

22. — Behold, we come unto thee; &c.] What follows to the end of the chapter is spoken in the name of the Israelites, accepting the Divine invitation, ver. 22; acknowledging the vanity of their misplaced trust, ver. 23; and professing the deepest contrition and shame for their misbehaviour, ver. 24, 25. Dr. Blayney.

24. For shame hath devoured the labour of our fathers &c.] It is this shameful idolatry which hath undone both our late forefathers and us. Bp. Hall. "Shame," or "that shameful thing," meaning the idol that they worshipped, called by the same name, chap. xi. 13; Hos. ix. 10; and with good reason; because, in return for all the expense and pains bestowed on it, it only frustrated the hopes of its votaries; and left them mortified with disappointment, and overwhelmed with disgrace. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

The Hebrews, instead of pronouncing the name of Baal, of which they had a dread, used in its place the name of "Bosheth," shame, confusion. Thus instead of Mephi-baal, and Meri-baal, they said, Mephi-bosheth, and Meri-bosheth. Calmet.

Or it may mean in a general sense, that "shame;" that is, the destruction of our country and our captivity, attended with shame, have consumed us. Dr. Wells.

Chap. IV. The two first verses of this chapter ought not to have been separated from the foregoing; being spoken in reply to the confession of the people of Israel, and concluding that part of the prophecy which respected them. Dr. Blayney. See the note on chap. iii. 6.

Ver. 2. And thou shalt swear, The Lord liveth, &c.] This is as much as to say, Thou shalt be of the number of those that worship the true God. For an oath is one of the most solemn acts of religious invocation; and therefore God's people are expressly charged to swear by His name, and by no other, Deut. vi. 13; x. 20; Josh. xxiii. 7. And to "swear to," or by, "the Lord of hosts," is used as synonymous with the profession of His true religion, Isai. xix. 18. Dr. Blayney.

—— and the nations shall bless themselves in him, &c.] A prediction of the Gospel times, when the heathens shall join with the true Israelites in paying all solemn acts of worship and devotion to the true God alone; see Isai. lxv. 16; and in ascribing all honour and glory to Him and His only Son, the Messiah, in whom all nations were to be blessed. See Gen. xxii. 18; Gal. iii. 8; and compare Isai. xlv. 25. W. Lowth.

3. For thus saith the Lord &c.] See note on chap. iii. 6.

—— Break up your fallow ground, &c.] Hitherto, O my people, your hearts have been like a rough, thorny, uncultured ground: but now break up this fallow ground of yours, by an unfeigned repentance, and root up these thorns of your corruptions. Bp. Hall.

4. Circumcise yourselves to the Lord, &c.] Circumcision, as well as baptism, had a moral import, and denoted the obligation of putting away all sinful lusts of the flesh, every irregular and inordinate affection and appetite. Dr. Blayney.

5. — Blow ye the trumpet in the land: &c.] The Prophet here describes the dreadful preparations for war, such as "blowing the trumpet," and "setting up the standard," for assembling men together; in order to their leaving the open country, and retiring with their families and goods "into the defenced cities," both for their own safety, and that they might maintain those garrisons against the power of the invading enemy. W. Lowth.

6. — from the north,] Babylonia, Chaldea, Assyria, and Media, are constantly represented in Scripture as being to the north of Judea. Probably the Prophets speak of the kings of Babylonia and Chaldea, not so much with a view to their geographical situation, which is rather to the east of Palestine, as to the course which they took in their expeditions against Judea. The deserts of Arabia being not practicable for an army, they commonly crossed the Euphrates at Tiphsah, or Thapsacus, and approached Judea on the north side, by way of Damascus and Syria. Calmet.

7. The lion is come up from his thicket, &c.] Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon; compare chap. v. 6; whose monarchy is represented by a lion, Dan. vii. 4. He is called here "the destroyer of the Gentiles," or rather nations; Judea and all the neighbouring countries being given up into his hands by God's decree. See chap. xxv. 9; xxvii. 6. W. Lowth. In the language of prophecy, several animals, as a lion, a bear, a leopard, a goat, according to their qualities, are put for several kingdoms and bodies politick. Sir Isaac Newton.

10.—surely thou hast greatly deceived this people] That is, Thou hast suffered them to be greatly deceived by their false prophets: see the note on Isai. lxiii. 17. These pretenders to prophecy studied only to speak pleasing things to the people, and soothe them in their impenitency and carnal security: and Thou hast in Thy just judgment given them up to follow these delusions. Compare 2 Thess. ii. 11, 12. W. Lowth.

The Prophet takes care to remove all pretence of charging God, by throwing the blame upon the people themselves: see ver. 18. In one place "the sword" is said to "reach unto the soul:" in the other, the reason is assigned, because their "wickedness" had reached thither before. The people had been desperately wicked; would accept of no sober counsel, nor bear any just reproof: they loved "smooth things;" they delighted in flattery and lies; they "walked after the imagination of their own hearts," chap. xxiii. 17; and therefore God gave them up to strong delusions, and suffered them to be grossly imposed on by lying prophets of their own choosing. In Scripture phrase, God is frequently said to do what He permits to be done, because all events are in His disposal, and wait His pleasure. The device may be man's; but God directs it to better purposes than man could think of; and so, by taking the thing into His own hands, and governing the issue of it, He makes it in a certain sense His own. Dr. Waterland.

11. —A dry wind] The same with "a destroying wind," chap. li. 1; an hot pestilential wind, as the Arabick translates it in that place, which destroys great multitudes in a moment. W. Lowth. Concerning the hot wind of the Arabian desert, see the notes on Numb. xi. 1; 2 Kings xix. 35.

In prophetick language, tempestuous winds, or the motion of clouds, is put for wars. Sir Isaac Newton. In this place, under the metaphor of this wind, the Prophet describes the Chaldean armies invading Judea. W. Lowth.

12. —shall come unto me:] At My commandment: compare Matt. viii. 9. The winds, storms, and other meteors are said to fulfil God's word, and attend upon His commands. See Ps. cxlviii. 8; Job xxxviii. 35. W. Lowth. That the calamity spoken of was of God's appointment, coming from Him, for a judicial purpose, is apparent from the words that follow. Dr. Blayney.

13. —he shall come up] That is, the person designed by "the lion," and "the destroyer of the Gentiles," ver. 7; namely, the king of Babylon. Compare Isai. v. 26—28. Dr. Blayney.

14. —How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee?] That is, How long wilt thou delude thyself with vain hopes of escaping the judgments of God by any other way than by repentance? Notwithstanding the frequent relapses of the people into idolatry, with what patience did God expect their repentance, and the result of all the merciful messages and warnings given them from time to time by His Prophets, as one that earnestly desired it, and even longed for it! Compare ch. xiii. 27; and viii. 6; where God is represented, after the manner of men, waiting with great patience, as one that would have been glad to hear any penitent word drop from them, to see any sign of their repentance and return to a better mind. Abp. Tillotson.

15. For a voice declareth from Dan, &c.] The rumour of the enemy's approach is heard first from Dan, which, being the most northern part of Judea, was first of all invaded. See chap. viii. 16. And the evil tidings still increase, as the army marches forward toward Jerusalem, by the way of mount Ephraim. W. Lowth.

16. —watchers] By "watchers" are meant besiegers, placing centinels round the city, to prevent any from coming in or going out; and keeping the place in continual alarm by shouts of war. Dr. Blayney.

17. As keepers of a field, are they against her round about;] As in the East pulse, roots, &c. grow in open and uninclosed fields, when they begin to be fit to be gathered, guards are planted, if near a great road, more, if distant, fewer, in a round about these grounds, as is practised in Arabia. Sir J. Chardin.

18. —this is thy wickedness, because it is bitter, &c.] These are the bitter effects of thine obstinacy in wickedness, which, like a deadly wound or disease, toucheth the very heart and seat of life. W. Lowth.

19. My bowels, my bowels! I am pained at my very heart; &c.] Oh the unspeakable sorrow and affliction that I feel for the misery of my people! My bowels yearn, and my heart aches within me, to think of this woful destruction which is approaching to Jerusalem! I cannot contain myself, but I must break forth into lamentation; because I do, as it were, hear beforehand the sound of the trumpet of Nebuchadnezzar, and his alarm to this miserable war. Bp. Hall.

20. —suddenly are my tents spoiled, &c.] That is, the cities and houses; in allusion to the ancient way of dwelling in tents. Compare chap. x. 20; Isai. xxxiii. 20; liv. 2. W. Lowth.

23—26. I beheld the earth, &c.] The images, under which the Prophet represents the approaching desolation as foreseen by him, are such as are familiar to the Hebrew poets on the like occasions. But the assemblage is finely made, so as to delineate all together a most striking and interesting picture of a ruined country, and to justify what has been before observed of the author's happy talent for pathetick description. The earth is brought back, as it were, to its primitive state of chaos and confusion; the cheerful light of the heavens is withdrawn, and succeeded by a dismal gloom; the mountains tremble and the hills shake under dreadful apprehensions of the Almighty's displeasure; a frightful solitude reigns all around; not a vestige is to be seen of any of the human race; even the birds themselves have deserted the fields, unable to find any longer in them their usual food. The face of the country, in the once most fertile parts of it, now overgrown with briars and thorns, assumes the dreary wildness of the desert. The cities and villages are either thrown down and demolished by the hand of the enemy, or crumble into ruins of their own accord for want of being inhabited. Dr. Blayney.

5 I will get me unto the great men, and

The Prophets often describe God's judgments upon a land or nation, as if the whole frame of nature were in a state of dissolution, because these particular judgments are an earnest of the general judgment. W. Lowth.

27. — yet will I not make a full end.] In the severest judgments which God brings upon a people, He still reserves a remnant, to whom He will make good His promises: see chap. xxx. 11; xlvi. 28. This sense of the words may be confirmed by 1 Sam. iii. 12; "When I begin, I will also make an end:" that is, I will make a thorough destruction, and pursue Eli's family with judgments, till I have utterly consumed it. Or the words may be understood in this sense; Though I make the whole land desolate by sword and famine, yet still I have severer judgments in reserve; (compare chap. v. 10, 18;) namely, the destruction of the city and temple, and the captivity of the people that outlive the former captivities. W. Lowth.

28. — because I have spoken it, I have purposed it, and will not repent,] God's purpose of delivering up the Jews into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar was irreversible, upon the supposition that the greatest part of them would continue impenitent, which He likewise foresaw; see ver. 22, and chap. vii. 16, 27, 28; xiii. 14; xiv. 11, 12; xxv. 9—11. Though elsewhere upon their repentance, to which God frequently exhorted them by His Prophets, (see chap. xxv. 4, 5,) He promises the removal of His judgments: see ver. 14 of this chapter, and chap. vii. 3; xvii. 25; xviii. 11; xxii. 4; xxvi. 3; xxxvi. 3. Herein Jeremiah's preaching was very different from that of the false prophets, who promised peace and safety to the people, without interposing the condition of repentance and reformation: see ver. 10 of this chapter, and chap. xiv. 13; xxviii. 3, 4. W. Lowth.

30. — though thou rentest thy face with painting,] Rather, thy "eyes," as in the margin.

This alludes to the custom of the Eastern ladies, who, esteeming large eyes beautiful, make use of stibium, a sort of black paint, which is laid upon the eyelids with a pencil, and being of an astringent quality, partly contracts the eyelids, and partly, by the contrast of colour, tends to enlarge the appearance of the white part of the eyes. The original verb properly signifies to "rend" or tear, and may denote the use of this process to excess, so as it were to tear open the eyes, by way of enlarging them. Dr. Blayney.

The antiquity of this practice is undoubtedly great. Xenophon describes it as a custom among the Medes in the time of the elder Cyrus. Fragments to Calmet.

31. — the daughter of Zion,] Or of Jerusalem, is the same with Zion or Jerusalem: see chap. vi. 2, 23; Lam. i. 6; ii. 1. So "the daughter of my people" is to be understood, ver. 11 of this chapter; and the "daughter of Babylon," Ps. cxxxvii. 8. W. Lowth.

Chap. V. This chapter contains a vehement expostulation with the Jews for the manifold corruption of their manners, and the disorders of both their civil and their ecclesiastical government. And as a punishment for all these enormities, God threatens the invasion of the Chaldeans. W. Lowth. See Dr. Blayney's note on chap. iii. 6.

Ver. 1. — the broad places thereof,] The market places, and other spacious areas in the city, where citizens used to meet for the transaction of business. Dr. Blayney.

—— if ye can find a man,] See the note on Job xxii. 30.

2. And though they say, The Lord liveth; surely they swear falsely.] Though they make an outward and fashionable profession of the name of the Lord, in worshipping Him, in swearing by Him, yet it is but in falsehood and hypocrisy. Bp. Hall. "As the Lord liveth" was the common form of oath among the Jews; but now the only use they made of this sacred oath was to deceive and defraud. Wogan. See the note on chap. iv. 2.

3. O Lord, are not thine eyes upon the truth?] The eyes, turned upon or towards an object, denote not only a diligent inspection and nice discernment of it, but also an earnest expectation or looking after it. The phrase may here be taken in both senses: that God both seeth and discerneth the truth; and also expects it from others, especially from those who call upon His name in attestation of it. Dr. Blayney.

—— thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved; &c.] See the note on Isai. i. 5.

ignorant vulgar, who have neither leisure nor opportunity for learning their duty. One might expect from men of better education a truer sense of religion. W. Lowth.

There may be some hope, even for a wicked nation, while the fear of God remains in any considerable number of the wealthy and ruling part of it: but when once they come to be thoroughly corrupted, then every thing is ripe for ruin. And therefore the Prophet, after complaining very pathetically of the sinfulness and impiety of the bulk of his countrymen, still thought there was one resource left. But when he found that those of high condition were as bad or worse than the rest, he immediately gives up all, and pronounces their destruction. Abp. Secker.

6. — a lion, — a wolf, — a leopard] The wild beasts here spoken of are the king of Babylon and his army. See chap. iv. 7. Dr. Blayney.

The quality of watchfulness is well attributed to the leopard: for it is the property of that animal to lie hid in ambush for the purpose of seizing his prey, and to dart upon it with rapidity when it approaches. Calmet.

7. How shall I pardon thee for this? thy children have forsaken me,] Repentance and turning to God is the only condition of pardon: but they that forsake Him, thereby forsake all means of grace and possibility of salvation. Wogan.

—— sworn by them that are no gods:] See the notes on chap. iv. 2; Josh. xxiii. 7.

—— when I had fed them to the full, they then committed adultery,] When I gave them My blessings in abundance, they made an ill use of My mercies, and riotously run into both bodily and spiritual adultery, and impudently trooped together to work filthiness. Bp. Hall.

Their lewdness was sometimes a concomitant of their idolatries: for many rites of the heathen religions were celebrated with drunkenness, uncleanness, and all sorts of debauchery. Reading.

9. — shall not my soul be avenged &c.] God's anger and vengeance signify in Scripture the execution of His justice: the effects of which are as terrible against obstinate sinners, as if they proceeded from the highest resentment. W. Lowth. See the notes on Gen. vi. 6.

13. And the prophets shall become wind, &c.] These words, spoken by the unbelieving Jews, mean, that, the Prophets being nothing but wind and vanity, their prophecies shall return upon their own heads; and that they shall feel themselves the judgments which they denounce on others. W. Lowth.

14. — I will make my words in thy mouth fire, &c.] The effect of those threatenings that are denounced by thy mouth shall be as speedy and certain as that of fire when applied to dry wood. To the same sense are the words of Hosea, chap. vi. 5, "I have hewed them by the Prophets." W. Lowth.

15. — I will bring a nation upon you from far,] This was threatened in case of disobedience by Moses, Deut. xxviii. 49. Dr. Blayney. Babylon is called "a far country," Isai. xxxix. 3. Perhaps it is so called, in comparison of those of the Philistines, Moabites, Ammonites, and other borderers, who were the former oppressors of the Jews.

The words "house of Israel" are, after the captivity of the ten tribes, applied to the two tribes which remained. See chap. vi. 9; ix. 26; x. 1; Ezek. xiii. 5; xviii. 31. W. Lowth.

—— an ancient nation,] Babylon was built about an hundred years after the flood: and soon after, Nimrod erected a kingdom there: whence that country is called "the land of Nimrod," Mic. v. 6. W. Lowth.

—— a nation whose language thou knowest not,] The Chaldean or Syrian was a language unknown to the Jews, as appears from the history of Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 26; Isai. xxxvi. 11. Calmet.

16. Their quiver is as an open sepulchre,] Their quiver is full of deadly arrows, that shall send many to their graves. Bp. Hall. Their arrows scatter slaughter and carnage all around: they are as insatiable as the grave, as terrible as death. Calmet.

22. Fear ye not me?] Considering God's other attributes may breed in us a high esteem and hearty love of God; but the consideration of His power is that which naturally and reasonably produceth a great fear of Him: He is most amiable for His goodness, and in regard to His wisdom greatly venerable, but His power arming the rest renders Him exceedingly terrible. See also chap. x. 6, 7; Luke xii. 5. Dr. Isaac Barrow.

—— which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea &c.] The keeping of the waters within bounds, so that they cannot overflow the earth, is often mentioned in Scripture as an immediate effect of God's overruling power and providence, Job xxxviii. 10, 11; Ps. xxxiii. 7; civ. 9; Prov. viii. 29. W. Lowth.

We know that there are certain natural causes which produce these effects on the sea and the land. But this ought not to prevent us from regarding the all-powerful hand of the Creator, who hath created, and who preserves His creatures in their proper and natural stations. We ought to admire these surprising effects of the first cause, which is His almighty will. To this point the language of Scripture continually directs us, by attributing every thing to God, by referring every thing to Him, by considering Him as the prime Mover of all the events, and even of the effects, which we are accustomed to refer to nature, or to chance: terms confused and ambiguous, of which religion knows nothing. Calmet.

24. —that giveth rain, &c.] That giveth seasonable rain in the autumn and spring; and reserveth a dry season for the gathering in of the harvest. Bp. Hall. The vicissitude of seasons, of cold and heat, of drought and moisture, so wisely fitted for the growth of the fruits of the earth, and other uses of human life, is such a proof of a Divine providence, as is obvious to the meanest capacity: on which account it is frequently insisted upon by the sacred writers, Ps. cxlvii. 8; Matt. v. 45; Acts xiv. 17. W. Lowth.

31. The prophets prophesy &c.] The pretended prophets prophesy falsely, speaking only what they know will please the people; and the priests agree with these false prophets, and so "bear rule," or keep up their authority and interest among the people. Dr. Wells. It is indeed "a horrible thing," and a proof of extreme corruption, when the ministers whom God has established, instead of opposing the wickedness of the people, countenance and encourage it. Ostervald.

Chap. VI. ver. 1. O ye children of Benjamin, gather yourselves to flee &c.] Jerusalem was in the lot of the tribe of Benjamin, Josh. xviii. 28; on which account the inhabitants are addressed by the name of "the children of Benjamin;" and are directed to leave the city, which God was about to destroy, and to take refuge in the mountains. Tekoa, according to St. Jerome, was a little town about twelve miles from Jerusalem; and Beth-haccerem (probably so called from the vineyards round about it) another little town on the same side, but nearer Jerusalem; and both of them in the mountainous parts of Judah, south of the capital. Dr. Blayney.

—— blow the trumpet in Tekoa, &c.] The design of those signals of war is to assemble men together, in order to their mutual defence; but it is in vain to attempt any such matter, and therefore the only use that can be made of them is to give notice to the people, that they should disperse themselves, and fly from the approaching enemy. W. Lowth.

—— a sign of fire] The Prophets often speak of these signals, which were raised upon the heights, to give notice to distant people of the approach and the irruptions of an enemy. They are particularly convenient and useful in mountainous countries like Judea. Calmet.

ing the Chaldean generals, (for in that sense "shepherds" are sometimes understood; see chap. xxv. 34,) and their armies. W. Lowth.

4. Prepare ye war against her; &c.] Then shall the eager and furious commanders say, Hasten your preparations against her; arise, let us take the day before us; the time flees away; the evening hastens on; let no minutes be lost for our assault. Bp. Hall.

The alacrity and eagerness with which the Chaldeans undertake and execute the commission with which they were charged, is described in this and the following verse in a beautiful vein of poetry. Though it was late in the day before they received their orders, they are for beginning their march immediately; and, though it was night before they got to the place, they are unwilling to put off the assault till morning. Dr. Blayney.

6. — Hew ye down trees,] Which were to be employed in the siege of Jerusalem. Dr. Blayney. See the note on chap. xxxii. 24.

8. Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, &c.] Take warning by the many threatenings and judgments I have denounced against thee; amend thy ways and doings, lest, if thou persist in thy wickedness, My mind and affection be utterly alienated from thee, (see Ezek. xxiii. 17, 18; Hos. ix. 12,) and I cast off all bowels of compassion toward thee, and give thee up to ruin and desolation. This threatening God fulfilled afterwards, when He suffered the city and nation to be utterly ruined and destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar: but it still received a further completion, in that final desolation brought upon them by the Romans, under Titus and Vespasian. W. Lowth.

9. — turn back thine hand as a grapegatherer into the baskets.] That is, take them again into thine hand, and begin the work of gathering or gleaning anew. The address is from God to the Chaldeans; exhorting them, like a grapegatherer, to return again after the first time, and pick up those few inhabitants that were left before, like the grape-gleanings, and to carry them also into captivity. The Chaldeans did so, as may be seen, chap. lii. 28—30. Dr. Blayney.

10. — their ear is uncircumcised,] See the note on Exod. vi. 12.

—— and they cannot hearken:] While men are not duly disposed to hear the truth, they cannot give due attention to what God speaks to them. In the same sense Christ saith to the Jews, "How can ye believe, which receive honour one of another?" John v. 44; meaning, that such a temper was an obstacle to their believing on Him, and hindered them from receiving the truth in the love of it. W. Lowth. They cannot, because they will not, hear. Woe betide those, who have placed themselves by their own fault out of a condition of hearkening to the voice of God! It is the remark of St. Jerome upon this passage, "Inability, which proceeds from scorn and unbelief, is not exempted from punishment." Calmet.

—— the word of the Lord is unto them a reproach;] The subject of their scorn and derision: see chap. xx. 8. W. Lowth.

11. Therefore — I will pour it out &c.] See note on chap. i. 10. The Prophet is here said to pour out the Divine "fury upon the children abroad," who take delight in playing in the streets; see Zech. viii. 5; and the "young men who assemble" in meetings for diversion or conversation: compare chap. ix. 21. W. Lowth.

—— the aged with him that is full of days.] From hence it appears, that the word here rendered "the aged" means only a man that has passed a certain time of life, which may be considered as his zenith, so as from thenceforth to be upon the decline. In contradistinction to whom is placed one, who is arrived at what is esteemed the full period of human life; in respect to which the patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, David, and Job, are said to have died "full of years," or "days." See the same distinction made, Isai. lxv. 20. Dr. Blayney.

14. They have healed also the hurt &c.] Instead of sharp and seasonable reproofs, they have gone about to salve up the spiritual sores of My people with flattering and plausible words; Peace, peace, all shall be well; when there is nothing but fear and danger. Bp. Hall.

15. Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed,] Shame is a great restraint upon sinners at first; but that soon falls off: and when men have once lost their innocence, their modesty is not like to be long troublesome to them. For impudence comes on with vice, and grows up with it. Smaller vices do not banish all shame and modesty, but great and abominable crimes harden men's foreheads, and make them shameless. When men have the heart to do a very bad thing, they seldom want the face to bear it out. Abp. Tillotson.

16. — Stand ye in the ways, &c.] Do like travellers, when they are at a loss which way they must go: in like manner do ye inquire, what way the patriarchs of old, the judges, the kings, and prophets of former times walked in: imitate their practices, wherein you will find true comfort and satisfaction, and not the late devices of your princes and prophets, whereby you have been seduced into errour, and betrayed into many mischiefs. Compare chap. xviii. 15. W. Lowth.

20. To what purpose cometh there to me incense from Sheba,] See Isai. lx. 6. The Prophet reproves the hypocrisy of the Jews, whereby they sought to cover their inward corruption by the external shews of religion: which the Prophets often declare to be of no value when they do not proceed from a devout mind: see chap. vii. 21, 22; Isai. i. 11. W. Lowth.

—— the sweet cane from a far country?] The calamus aromaticus is a reed of a very fragrant smell; which, when cut down, dried, and powdered, becomes an ingredient of the richest perfumes. We are informed by heathen writers that it came from Saba. Dr. Blayney.

26. — gird thee with sackcloth,] See the note on Gen. xxxvii. 29.

27. I have set thee for a tower and a fortress] As for thee, O My Prophet, I have set thee as in a watchtower, to descry the ways of My people; yea, I have made thee as a strong tower and fortress against all the rage of them; so that thou mayest fearlessly discover and reprove them. Bp. Hall.

28. — they are brass and iron; they are all corrupters.] They are all but falsifiers and corrupters. Bp. Hall. Brass and iron are the baser metals, used to adulterate the pure silver. Dr. Blayney.

29. The bellows are burned, &c.] All the means, that can be used to purge this people of their dross, prove ineffectual: the wicked are not separated from the righteous. Therefore your city shall be as one common furnace, wherein you shall be melted down all together. See Ezek. xxii. 19, &c. W. Lowth.

—— the lead is consumed of the fire;] Before the use of quicksilver was known, the refiners made use of lead for separating the silver from the other substances mixed with it. So we learn from Pliny's Natural History. Dr. Blayney.

—— the wicked are not plucked away.] Or, "the bad are not separated." By "the bad" are meant, according to the metaphor, "the base ingredients;" that is, the bad principles and habits, which prevail so much, and adhere so closely, that all the endeavours and pains used by the refiner to purge them away and get clear of them are frustrated, and prove ineffectual: so that, as it follows in the next verse, nothing remains but to throw them aside, as a metal disallowed and cried down by authority, counterfeiting silver, but not capable of being brought to the sterling standard. Dr. Blayney.

30. Reprobate silver shall men call them, &c.] As base money is refused by every one, because it cannot bear the touchstone, so shall these hypocrites and evildoers be rejected both by God and by man; for none of their actions will bear the test of God's laws, or abide His severe trial. The Greek word, which is rendered "reprobate" in the New Testament, has an allusion to this place; and, in pursuance of the same metaphor, the laws and judgments of God are often compared to a refiner's fire: see Prov. xvii. 3; Isai. i. 25; Zech. xiii. 9; Mal. iii. 2, 3; 1 Pet. i. 7. W. Lowth.

Chap. VII. ver. 1. The word that came to Jeremiah] A new prophecy begins with this chapter, and is continued on to the end of chap. x. The date is not precisely marked; but the probability is, that it was delivered not long after the preceding one, and, as it should seem, on the following occasion. Besides the Prophets, who were commissioned to announce the approaching calamities of Judah and Jerusalem, there were others, who took on themselves to flatter the people with opposite predictions. They taught them to look upon such threats as groundless, since God, they said, would have too much regard for His own honour, to suffer His temple to be profaned, and the seat of His holiness given up into the hand of strangers. Jeremiah is commanded openly to reprove the falsehood of these assertions, and to shew, by an example in point, that the sanctity of the place would afford no security for the guilty; but that God would assuredly do by His house at Jerusalem, what He had done unto Shiloh; and cast the people of Judah out of His sight, as He had already cast off the people of Israel, for their wickedness, ver. 1—16. God justifies the severity of these proceedings by a representation of the people's impiety, ver. 17—20. The Prophet declares their sacrifices to be of no acceptance, whilst they continue deaf to the calls of God's messengers, ver. 21—28. He specifies the gross idolatries with which they were defiled; and pronounces a heavy sentence of Divine vengeance both on the dead and on the living, ver. 29; chap. viii. 3. Dr. Blayney.

4. Trust ye not in lying words,] Uttered by your false prophets, who foretell peace, and encourage you in impenitency. See chap. iv. 10; xiv. 13, 14. W. Lowth.

—— The temple of the Lord, are these.] As much as to say, God hath placed His name here, ver. 10, and hath chosen these stately buildings, as the place of His peculiar residence; and what reason is there to believe, that He will ever forsake it, and give it up to be destroyed by strangers and idolaters? Compare chap. xviii. 18; Mic. iii. 11. W. Lowth.

In the same manner our Saviour's disciples, immediately after their Lord had been foretelling the destruction of Jerusalem, came to Him, and with similar notions in their heads, as from our Saviour's reply may be collected, pointed out to Him the magnificent buildings of the temple, Matt. xxiv. 1, 2. Dr. Blayney.

The triple repetition of "The temple of the Lord" denotes a remarkable earnestness, and extreme presumption in the people. The Prophet employs the same repetition afterwards, in his apostrophe to Judea, "O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord," chap. xxii. 29. Calmet.

10. —and say, We are delivered to do all these abominations?] Will ye interpret the deliverances God hath formerly vouchsafed to you as so many licences to commit new abominations? Or do you think, when you offer your propitiatory sacrifices, that they will wipe away the guilt of all your past offences, and ye may securely renew your former ill practices, having such a certain and easy method of obtaining pardon? W. Lowth.

11. Is this house, which is called by my name, become a den of robbers &c.] Ye think all is well if ye present yourselves into My temple, though you bring with you the guilt of manifold sins: ye come hither full of theft, of oppression, of injustice: is My temple, think ye, for such worshippers? Is this house, which is called by My name, fit to be a den of thieves and robbers? Behold, I have well seen and noted with how wicked dispositions and hollow hearts ye come hither, saith the Lord. Bp. Hall.

12. But go ye now unto my place which was in Shiloh,] Shiloh was the place, where, upon the first coming of the Israelites into Canaan, the tabernacle, in which was the ark of God's presence, was set up, by Divine appointment, no doubt; and there it continued for a space of time, until the days of Samuel. It was during this residence that the Israelites received that signal defeat from the Philistines, when the ark of God was taken, as related, 1 Sam. iv. 10, 11: the pathetick description of which disaster, made by the Psalmist, Ps. lxxviii. 60—64, has caused it to be generally believed, that an allusion to it was likewise designed upon this occasion. Dr. Blayney.

13. —rising up early and speaking,] The phrase "rising up early," signifies diligence and assiduity: see Isai. l. 4. The same sense is elsewhere expressed in the Hebrew, by doing any thing "in the morning," which our translators render "early," Ps. xlvi. 5; xc. 14. See likewise Ps. cxliii. 8; Isai. xxxiii. 2. W. Lowth.

16. Therefore pray not thou for this people, &c.] Nothing but an universal reformation, which God foresaw would not be effected, could deliver the Jews from that captivity and desolation, which He had threatened to bring upon them. In some cases the intercessions of good men have been so far prevalent, as to rescue sinners from the punishments they deserved; but here God declares, that nothing but a general amendment shall avert the judgments threatened. W. Lowth.

18. The children gather wood, &c.] All the sort of them, of all ages and both sexes, conspire together in their idolatry: children, fathers, women, put their hands to the work, and all agree to offer cakes, in the way of sacrifice, to the sun or moon. Bp. Hall.

—— cakes] Certain idolatrous cakes, artificially prepared of dough, and offered to the moon under the title of the queen of heaven. Parkhurst.

—— queen of heaven,] When we consider that the moon was at the beginning appointed to "rule the night," as well as the sun "to rule the day," Gen. i. 16; and that she manifestly does so, since her light is greater than that of all the planets and stars put together; and that the idolaters called the sun, or solar fire, not only Lord of heaven, but also King, there can be little doubt, but by "the queen of heaven," they meant the moon. Parkhurst.

19. Do they provoke me to anger? — do they not provoke themselves &c.] Do they think to shew their malice towards Me, as if they could hurt Me by their wickedness? Will not their sins turn at last to their own utter confusion? W. Lowth.

21.—Put your burnt offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat flesh.] The burnt offerings, after they were flayed, were to be consumed wholly upon the altar, Lev. i. 9; whereas in the sacrifices of the peace offering, only the fat was burnt upon the altar, the remainder belonging partly to the priest, and the rest was spent in a religious entertainment. See Lev. vii. 29—34; Deut. xii. 11, 12. Here the Prophet tells the Jews, they may, if they please, eat the flesh of their burnt offerings, as well as of their peace offerings, for God will accept neither of them from their hands; (see chap. vi. 20;) and looks upon them only as common meats; compare Hos. viii. 13. W. Lowth.

22. For I spake not — concerning burnt offerings or sacrifices:] God hereby intimates, that He did not primarily intend to appoint this way of worship, and to impose it upon the Jews, as that which was most suitable to His own nature, and most agreeable to Him; but that He condescended to it, as most accommodated to their state and inclination, because of the carnality of their hearts, and the proneness of the people to idolatry. Abp. Tillotson. It is a way of speaking, usual in Scripture, to express the preference due to one thing over another, in terms which express the rejecting of that which is less worthy: and thus we may understand the text here in correspondence with the parallel passage of Hosea, "I desired mercy, and not sacrifice," chap. vi. 6: the words in both places implying, that God always laid a greater stress upon sincere obedience, than on external observances; and designed the latter, as so many mounds and fences to guard and preserve the former. W. Lowth.

24. — and went backward, and not forward.] The metaphor is taken from headstrong oxen, that draw back and refuse to put their necks under the yoke: see ver. 26; Nehem. ix. 29; Hos. iv. 16. In the same sense the word "backsliding" is often applied to the Jews in this prophecy. W. Lowth.

29. Cut off thine hair, &c.] Mourn thou solemnly, O Jerusalem; and express thy sorrow by publick acts of humiliation, that the world may take knowledge of it. Bp. Hall. The cutting off of the hair was commonly practised in the time of great sorrow and mourning, chap. xlvii. 5; xlviii. 37; Isai. xv. 2. W. Lowth.

This custom prevailed, not only amongst the Jews, but amongst Pagans also. Homer represents Achilles, as well as his soldiers, cutting off their hair at the funeral of Patroclus. Pope.

CHAP. VIII.

1 The calamity of the Jews, both dead and alive. 4 He upbraideth their foolish and shameless impenitency. 13 He sheweth their grievous judgment, 18 and bewaileth their desperate estate.

AT that time, saith the LORD, they shall bring out the bones of the kings of Judah, and the bones of his princes, and the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets, and the bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves:

2 And they shall spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the host of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped: they shall not be gathered, nor be buried; they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth.

3 And death shall be chosen rather than life by all the residue of them that remain of this evil family, which remain in all the places whither I have driven them, saith the LORD of hosts.

—— the generation of his wrath.] That is, a race of men obnoxious to God's wrath: in the same sense the Apostle speaks of "the children of wrath," Eph. ii. 3. Dr. Blayney.

30. — they have set their abominations in the house &c.] Meaning the image and altars for idolatrous worship, which Manasseh had set up in the temple and the courts near it. See chap. xxiii. 11; xxxii. 34; 2 Kings xxi. 4, 7; xxiii. 4. This gave occasion for other profanations of the temple in aftertimes. See Ezek. viii. 5, 6, &c. W. Lowth.

31. And they have built the high places of Tophet, &c.] Respecting "Tophet," &c. see note at 2 Kings xxiii. 10.

—— which I commanded them not,] So far was God from commanding this practice, that He expressed the greatest detestation of it, and forbade it under the severest penalties: compare chap. xxxii. 35; and Lev. xx. 1—5. The words are spoken by the figure, called Meiosis, by which a great deal more is implied than expressed; see Deut. xvii. 3: where the text, speaking of the worship of the host of heaven, adds, "which I have not commanded:" the meaning is, I expressly forbade it. See instances of the like form of expression, Isai. lxv. 12; Jer. ii. 8; Prov. xviii. 5; xxviii. 21; Rom. i. 28. W. Lowth.

32. — it shall no more be called Tophet, &c.] So great a slaughter shall be therefore in Jerusalem, that there shall not be room enough in the valley of Tophet for the burial of the slain; and therefore that valley shall change its name, and be called, "the valley of slaughter." Bp. Hall.

King Josiah first of all "defiled" this place, as it is said in 2 Kings xxiii. 10; that is, polluted it, or unconsecrated it, by burying dead bodies in it; compare ver. 16 of that chapter. And afterwards, when great numbers died in the siege of Jerusalem, and the famine that followed, it became a common burying-place of the Jews; see chap. xix. 6; whereby was fulfilled that prophecy of Ezekiel, chap. vi. 5; "I will lay the dead carcases of the children of Israel before their idols." Compare Lev. xxvi. 30; Ezek. vi. 4, 5, 13. W. Lowth.

34. — will I cause to cease — the voice of mirth, &c.] No more marriages shall be contracted in Jerusalem; no more shall there be heard in the cities of Judah the voice of mirth, and the songs of joy, and the noise of instruments of musick, which were wont to accompany these sorts of feasts. See chap. xvi. 9; xxv. 10 xxxiii. 11. Calmet.

There is no feast in the East without musick and dances, certainly then they are not omitted in nuptial solemnities. The noise of the musick, &c. is probably to be understood by "the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride," rather than the voices of the persons themselves. The voices of the "bridegroom" and of the "bride" appear to be distinctly mentioned, because in the East the women do not feast with the men. See note on Esth. i. 9. Sir J. Chardin, Harmer.

Chap. VIII. ver. 1—3. These three verses ought not to have been separated from those of the preceding chapter. Dr. Blayney.

1. At that time, saith the Lord, they shall bring out the bones &c.] The calamity, which I will bring upon the Jews and Jerusalem, shall not rest in the living, but shall reach to the very dead: for the very bones of their kings, and princes, and priests, and prophets, shall be torn up out of their graves. Bp. Hall.

2. — they shall not be gathered, nor be buried;] The bones, thus scattered about, shall not be gathered or laid up in their sepulchres. Not to enjoy the common rites of burial is spoken of as an aggravation of men's calamities, chap. xxii. 19; xxxvi. 30; Isai. xiv. 19, 20; Eccles. vi. 3. W. Lowth.

The terrible and just vengeance of God upon the crimes and idolatries of the Jews, in destroying their city, and in causing their carcases to be exposed in the very place where they had exercised their abominable idolatries, ought to excite our very serious attention. God, provoked with the sins of the Jews, destroyed them and their temple, and gave them up to their enemies, as He had before done the kingdom of the ten tribes. Let us grow wise by their example, as well as by the example of those Christian churches, whose candlestick, that is, the light of God's word, has been removed from them, because they abused it. Such considerations should produce in our hearts a wholesome dread of the judgments of God, and should effectually move us to regard Him with fear, and to serve Him with sincerity. Ostervald.

4. Moreover thou shalt say unto them, &c.] In that part of the prophecy which next follows, the difference of speakers requires to be attended to; the transitions being quick and sudden, but full of life and energy. The Prophet at first in the name of God reproves the people's incorrigibility; he charges their wise ones with folly, and threatens them with grievous calamities, ver. 4—13. In the three next verses he seems to address his countrymen in his own person, and as one of the people who dwelt in the open towns, advising those, that were in the like situation, to retire with him into some of the fortified cities, and there wait the event with patience; since there was nothing but terrour abroad, and the noise of the enemy, who had already begun to ravage the country, ver. 14—16. God speaks, ver. 17; and threatens to bring foes against them that should be irresistible. The Prophet appears again in his own person, commiserating the daughter of his people, who is heard bewailing her forlorn case in a distant land; whilst the voice of God, like that of conscience, breaks in upon her complaints, and shews her that all this ruin is brought upon her by her own infidelities, ver. 18—20. The Prophet once more resumes the discourse; he regrets that no remedy can be found to close up the wounds of his countrymen, and pathetically weeps over the number of the slain, ver. 21; chap. ix. 1. Dr. Blayney.

—— Shall they fall, and not arise? shall he turn away, and not return?] See the note on Gen. xix. 26.

The day of Jerusalem's visitation drew near: destruction was coming upon her like a whirlwind out of the north. Jeremiah appeared with a commission from above to predict as much, and withal to assign the reason. It was, not that the people had sinned—more or less all have sinned: not that they had grievously sinned—all sin may be forgiven: but that they, having sinned, and having grievously sinned, refused to repent, without doing which no forgiveness can be obtained; it cannot indeed be expected. That had happened to Israel, which often happens to others: temptations to evil had prevailed; single acts had grown into habits, and habits had grown inveterate, till they had at length lost the power, and even the desire, to reform and amend. In this situation of things, the Almighty is introduced expostulating with His people; "Moreover thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord; Shall they fall, and not arise? shall he turn away, and not return?" In the whole circle of common life, where men are usually guided by common sense, is there any instance to be found of a similar conduct? Was it ever seen, was it ever heard, that when a man had experienced the misfortune of falling, he should not wish and endeavour to rise again; that when he had by mistake gone out of his way, he should not, upon better information, be desirous of returning into it?—"Why then is this people of Jerusalem slidden back by a perpetual backsliding," one that is never to cease, or have an end? "They hold fast deceit," and, knowing it to be but deceit, for such every sinner well knows it to be, yet "they refuse to return." Bp. Horne.

6. I hearkened and heard, &c.] God is next pleased to speak of Himself after the manner of men, as inclining His ear, and with the affection of a parent fondly listening to catch the first accents of sorrow and contrition that should break forth from the relenting heart of his offending child: "I hearkened and heard, but they spake not aright: no man repented him of his wickedness, saying, What have I done?" No remorse, no reflection, no sensibility; hardened in vice, and regardless of danger, they pursued with fury and impetuosity their way to perdition; "every one turned to his course, as the horse rusheth into the battle." Bp. Horne.

7. Yea, the stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times; &c.] This earnest expostulation and tender complaint are succeeded by a beautiful allusion to the birds of the air, that species of them styled "birds of passage." They, by instinct, return annually, at a set time, to the country they had left; whereas, by all the reasoning, and all the exhortation in the world, obdurate man cannot be prevailed upon to forsake his iniquity, and return to God who made him. Bp. Horne.

—— her appointed times;] That is, such times as the Creator hath appointed these animals, and hath accordingly for this end imprinted on their natures such an instinct, as exciteth and moveth them thus, at proper times, to fly from one place to another more convenient for them. Dr. Derham.

—— the judgment of the Lord.] His law, or system of laws: that rule of moral conduct, which God prescribed for their observance; and which He furnished them with the means of knowing as certainly, as those birds of passage are taught by what we call natural instinct all that is convenient for them. See Isai. i. 3. Dr. Blayney.

8. How do ye say, We are wise, &c.] How do ye priests and scribes say, "We are wise, and the law of the Lord is with us;" when in the mean time ye live contrary to it? Certainly, if this be to know, and make a right use of the law, the law should seem to be to small purpose, either in the making or writing of it. Bp. Hall.

—— the pen of the scribes is in vain.] See notes at Ezra vii. 6; Matt. ii. 4. The expression in the text may relate to the answers, which those who were skilled in expounding the law gave in writing, when they were consulted in any difficult case: compare chap. xviii. 18. W. Lowth.

9. The wise men are ashamed, &c.] Those that have made this profession of wisdom have shamed themselves by their unanswerable practice: lo, they have cast off all care of doing that, which the word of God enjoins them; and how then can they challenge any true wisdom unto themselves? Bp. Hall.

10. — that shall inherit them:] Rather, that shall enter into possession. The Hebrew verb properly signifies to possess that which was the property of others, and therefore implies a dispossession of the former owners. Dr. Blayney.

13. —there shall be no grapes on the vine, &c.] These expressions appear to be metaphorical; signifying, that the nation should be deprived of all their real advantages, and also of what was ornamental, by a severe dispensation of God's providence. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

14. —let us be silent there:] The verb, rendered "be silent," implies forbearing to act, as well as to speak. The Prophet therefore hereby seems to advise, not to take measures of resistance, as they would be ineffectually employed against what God had determined. Dr. Blayney.

——water of gall] Or, bitter water; that is, a severe judgment, which is often expressed by "the cup of God's wrath," or "displeasure." See chap. xxv. 15, 17; and ix. 15; xxiii. 15. W. Lowth.

16. —from Dan:] Nebuchadnezzar, having subdued Phenicia, passed through the tribe of Dan in his way to Jerusalem. Dr. Blayney.

——strong ones;] The word, thus translated, signifies horses in several places: see chap. xlvii. 3; Judg. v. 22; and it is so understood here by the Seventy. W. Lowth.

17. —which will not be charmed,] See note at Ps. lviii. 4. That some persons possessed the power of rendering serpents harmless, is a well attested fact: but whether by certain herbs, or musical sounds, or by breaking out their teeth, or in what manner, is uncertain. Whatever were the methods commonly practised, the enemies of the Jews are here compared to such serpents as were not to be mollified or disarmed by any of those means: "They shall bite you, saith the Lord." Dr. Blayney.

19. Behold the voice of the cry &c.] For, behold, methinks I hear already the shrieks and cries of the Jews, because of the Babylonians, that are come in upon them from Chaldea; and yet they are still ready to presume upon their title and interest with God; and say, Is not the Lord worshipped by us in Zion? Bp. Hall.

20. The harvest is past, &c.] "The harvest is past, the summer is ended," which might have given us hopes and opportunities of succours; yet we hear of none from Egypt, or any other our associates: so that we have now lost all hopes of deliverance. Bp. Hall.

21. —I am black;] I look ghastly, as those who are dying: compare chap. xiv. 2; Joel ii. 6; Nahum ii. 10. W. Lowth.

22. Is there no balm in Gilead;] Either that particular balsam, now distinguished by the same name, and much celebrated by various ancient writers for its costliness and its medicinal virtues: or, as Bochart contends, the resin drawn from the terebinthus or turpentine tree, which was well known to have healing virtues; at least sufficient to answer the Prophet's question on this occasion: which was metaphorically to ask, if there were no salutary means within reach, or no persons that knew how to apply them, for the relief of his country from those miseries, with which it was afflicted. Dr. Blayney.

Chap. IX. ver. 2. Oh that I had &c.] The corrupt and profligate manners of the people are here set forth at large, and the denunciations of Divine vengeance are renewed against them, ver. 2—16. God summons the mourning women to bewail the calamities of the nation, ver. 17—22; forbids setting any value on personal endowments, except the knowledge of God and His attributes only, ver. 23, 24; and shews the punishment of the surrounding nations, circumcised and uncircumcised, to be near at hand. Dr. Blayney.

——a lodging place of wayfaring men;] Travellers in the East are not, nor ever were, accommodated at inns on the road, after the manner of the European nations. In some towns indeed, but not in all, there are large publick buildings provided for their reception, which they call caravanseras: but these afford merely a covering, being absolutely without furniture, Judg. xix. 15. a cave, or a hut, which some one before them may have erected for a temporary shelter. This is what appears to be here meant by "a lodging place;" a solitary, and not very comfortable, situation; but yet preferable to the chagrin of living continually in the society of men of profligate manners. Dr. Blayney.

6. Thine habitation is in the midst of deceit;] These are the words of God to the Prophet. W. Lowth.

—— through deceit they refuse to know me, saith the Lord.] The knowledge of God, which is true religion, is incompatible with the habitual practice of any wickedness. And therefore it is natural enough for those, who are resolved at all events to abide in their evil courses, to endeavour, if possible, to divest themselves of all religious principles, which, if insufficient to restrain, will be sure at least to be very troublesome to them. For this cause they are ready to "say unto God, Depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of Thy ways," Job xxi. 14. Dr. Blayney.

7. — Behold, I will melt them, and try them; &c.] In the fire of affliction. Bp. Hall.

10. — the habitations of the wilderness] This is more properly rendered in the margin, "The pastures of the wilderness." Compare Joel i. 19; ii. 22. "The wilderness" sometimes signifies the plain or champaign country, and is opposed to the mountains: see Isai. lxiii. 13; Lam. iv. 19; Joel i. 19. W. Lowth. It properly signifies a thinly inhabited country, used chiefly for sheep-walks. Dr. Blayney.

—— neither can men hear the voice of the cattle;] There shall be heard no more, in the plains or on the mountains, either the bleating of sheep, or the lowing of oxen: there shall no animal, wild or tame, be seen any more. Calmet.

11. — a den of dragons;] A place of horrour and desolation. Bp. Hall. The word, translated "dragons," among several other significations, is taken for a serpent, such as are usually found in ruins and desolate places. Compare chap. li. 37; Isai. xiii. 22; xxxiv. 13; Ps. xliv. 19. W. Lowth.

12. Who is the wise man, &c.] In this style of interrogation the Prophet indirectly declares himself to be the person qualified by Divine inspiration to answer the question proposed in the latter part of the verse; which he accordingly does in the verses that follow. Dr. Blayney.

15. — I will feed them,—with wormwood, &c.] Compare this expression with Ps. lxxx. 5; 1 Kings xxii. 27. W. Lowth. See the note on Deut. xxix. 18.

17.—the mourning women,—cunning women,] It was an ancient custom of the Hebrews, at funerals, and on other like occasions, to make use of hired mourners, whose profession it was to exhibit in publick all the signs and gestures of immoderate and frantick grief, and by their loud outcries and doleful songs to excite and stir up a real passion of sorrow in others. Women were chiefly employed in this office; and St. Jerome, in his comment upon this verse, says, that the practice was continued in Judea down to his days. As it required a degree of skill to discharge this office, for that reason these "mourning women" are likewise called "cunning;" that is, skilful women. Frequent allusions to this custom are to be met with in Scripture, particularly 2 Chron. xxxv. 25; Eccles. xii. 5; Amos v. 16; Matt. ix. 23; Mark v. 38. Nor was this practice peculiar to the Jews, as many instances of it occur in heathen writers. Dr. Blayney.

It is usual at funerals in Barbary to hire women, who, like "the mourning women" of old, are mistresses of the art, and indeed perform their parts with such proper gestures and commotions, that they rarely fail to work up the assembly into some extraordinary pitch of thoughtfulness and sorrow. Dr. Shaw.

Travellers inform us, that the same practice prevails in most of the provinces of the Levant. Calmet.

21. For death is come up into our windows, &c.] For the Chaldeans have scaled our walls, and entered into our cities; and are now breaking upon us in our houses, to inflict a sudden and cruel death upon us, wherein they will spare no age or sex, but put all without mercy to the sword. Bp. Hall.

22. — as the handful after the harvestman, &c.] This alludes to the manner of reaping corn in a field, where the reaper, as soon as he has cut what he can hold in his hand, lets it fall, and passes on; but is usually followed by another, who gathers what is cut, and binds it into sheaves. But here it is said, that there would be none to gather; and consequently the corn, after being cut, would lie neglected and rot on the ground: which renders the simile a very apt one. Dr. Blayney.

23. — Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, &c.] Let not men value themselves for their wisdom, strength, or riches, which are things of themselves of a very uncertain continuance, and such calamities are coming, (see ver. 25, 26,) in which they will stand the owners of them in very little stead. The only true valuable endowment is the knowledge of God, not as He is in Himself, which is too high an attainment for poor mortals to pretend to, but with respect to His dealings with man; to have a serious sense of His mercies to the penitent, of His judgments to the obstinate, and of His truth and integrity, in making good His promises and threatenings to both. 'Tis in the exercise of these attributes God chiefly delights; and 'tis by these He desires to make Himself known to the world; and he, that forms an apprehension of God chiefly with regard to these perfections, will always demean himself suitably towards Him. "Judgment" and "righteousness" are often equivalent terms; but if we distinguish them here, "judgment" denotes God's severity against the wicked, and "righteousness" His truth or holiness. W. Lowth.

26. Egypt, and Judah, and Edom, &c.] See these judgments denounced more at large, chap. xxv. 18, &c. The Prophet places Judah among the heathen nations, because the Jews were, in effect, that is, in a spiritual sense, uncircumcised as well as they: contenting themselves with the outward sign of circumcision, without endeavouring to procure the inward purity signified by it. W. Lowth.

— all that are in the utmost corners,] If we prefer the marginal reading, "they that have the corners of their hair polled," the expression denotes those Arabians who cut their hair upon the fore part of the head round, and let the hair behind grow long; which custom of theirs Herodotus mentions, and tells us, that they did it in imitation of Bacchus. It is probable, that the precept in Lev. xix. 27, "Ye shall not round the corners of your heads," hath reference to this custom, which was a rite in several countries near Judea, whereby they devoted themselves to the worship of some false god. W. Lowth.

Chap. X. The beginning of this chapter to the end of ver. 16. contains an earnest dissuasive against the practice of heathen idolatry, setting forth the vanity of idols in comparison with the true God. And this, no doubt, was designed by way of precaution to the Jews against the time of their removal out of their own land, to dwell amongst idolaters, as is predicted, ver. 17, 18. Jerusalem lamenteth the completion of her ruin, ver. 19; and humbly supplicateth the intervention of God's mercy, ver. 23. to the end. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 2. — be not dismayed at the signs of heaven; &c.] The word of God, far from encouraging groundless and superstitious horrours, cautions against them strongly. In all ages and nations, men have been terrified with eclipses of the sun and moon; in many, with conjunctions, oppositions, and aspects of the stars, and other celestial appearances: things altogether harmless. Therefore such groundless terrours the Prophet expressly condemns. But whatsoever things are real instruments of our Maker's will, we are to consider as such; and respect all that is wrought by them, as proceeding from His appointment. Abp. Secker.

— the signs of heaven;] The Chaldeans, among whom the Jews were destined to live in captivity, were particularly addicted to astrology, and attributed to the heavenly bodies a considerable influence over human affairs. This naturally tended to beget a religious dread and awe of those objects, from whence so much good or evil was supposed to be derived. Dr. Blayney.

5. They are upright as the palm tree,] This comparison agrees very well with those ancient statues which were seen in Egypt and elsewhere, before the Greeks had carried the art of sculpture to that perfection, to which it afterwards arrived. The Orientals, before the empire of the Greeks, had very little taste for things of this sort. Their figures were carved in a straight line, with their hands hanging down and fixed to their sides, their eyes closed, their feet joined: so that they differed little from the trunks of the palm trees, to which Jeremiah here compares them. Calmet.

7. — for to thee doth it appertain:] To Thee doth fear appertain. Dr. Durell.

—— among all the wise men of the nations, &c.] The phrase, "among all the wise," or the wisest, "of the nations," may signify, either all those nations which were most distinguished for the cultivation and improvement of their rational faculties; or else those from whom better notions of God and religion might have been expected, than from the rude and illiterate vulgar. And yet the fact was, that all their boasted wisdom and knowledge had failed of leading them to an object of worship, in any degree corresponding with the infinite perfections and majesty of the Divine nature. Dr. Blayney.

8. But they are altogether brutish &c.] "They that make images are like unto them," saith the Psalmist, Ps. cxv. 8; that is, they are equally stupid and insensible. An image is called "a teacher of lies," Hab. ii. 18. W. Lowth.

9. — Tarshish, — Uphaz,] For "Tarshish," see the notes at 1 Kings ix. 28; x. 22. Bochart supposes "Uphaz" to be the same with Ophir in India. W. Lowth. Concerning Ophir see the former note on Kings.

—— blue and purple is their clothing:] The excellency of the Tyrian purple is celebrated by both sacred and profane authors. And the blue, which from many passages in Scripture we find to have been in great request, was also imported from remote countries, as an article of elegant and expensive luxury. See Ezek. xxvii. 7, 24. Dr. Blayney.

—— they are all the work of cunning men.] As the insignificancy of idols may be argued from the vile and perishable matter out of which they are composed, (see Isai. xliv. 19,) the same may be inferred from their being indebted to the art and labour of man for all their costly ornaments, their splendid outward shew. "They are all," says the Prophet, internally and externally, "the work of cunning" or skilful men. And so says the prophet Hosea, "All of it the work of the craftsmen," chap. xiii. 2. Upon what ground then could the thing formed pretend to a nature more excellent than its former? Dr. Blayney.

10. — at his wrath the earth shall tremble,] Jeremiah here represents the power and the greatness of God by the effects which they produce in nature. The things which strike men with most astonishment are earthquakes, thunder, lightning, the production of rain and winds, the creation of the universe. All these things are the work of the Lord. In His wrath He makes the earth tremble. When He speaks, He causes the thunder. If He makes the lightning shine, it is to cause the rain to descend from the clouds. The winds are shut up in His treasures; He confines them by His power. He draws from the ends of the earth the materials, of which He forms the clouds. Such was the notion of the Hebrews concerning the production of these effects, which strike mortals with astonishment. They referred them immediately to God, as their natural cause. Calmet.

11. Thus shall ye say unto them, &c.] This verse is written in Chaldee, as if the Prophet designed to put these words in the mouths of the Jews, wherewith they might make a publick profession of their own faith in the true God, and be able to answer the heathens that would entice them to idolatry. W. Lowth. The title, "Creator of heaven and earth," that is, of the universe, (see note on Gen. i. 1,) is that which most especially characterizes and distinguishes the true God from all false and fictitious deities: see Ps. xcvi. 5; 2 Kings xix. 15, 19; Acts xiv. 15; xvii. 24. Dr. Isaac Barrow.

—— even they shall perish from the earth, &c.] The Prophet foretells, that there shall be a final period put to idolatry: see ver. 15; Isai. ii. 18; xlv. 16; Zech. xiii. 2. God hath already blotted out the names of many of the heathen idols, as an earnest of the utter destruction of the remainders of idolatry in His due time. W. Lowth.

13. When he uttereth his voice, &c.] When God signifies His will and pleasure; (compare Job xxxviii. 34;) or when He sends His thunder, called in Scripture the "voice of God;" the clouds immediately fall down in abundance of rain; and that moisture, coming upon the ground that was scorched with heat before, does not only cool and refresh it, but makes all vegetables grow and flourish in it. W. Lowth.

man is brutish, while he so employs his skill as to make a god to himself by his own art: every founder, if he had but reason to consider it, must needs be confounded in himself, at the sight of his own folly, in making that image which he will adore. Bp. Hall.

15. They are — the work of errors:] The making of them is owing to men's erroneous notions concerning the nature of God. See ver. 8. W. Lowth.

16. The portion of Jacob is not like them:] Upon the principles of heathenism, every nation was committed to the care and superintendency of its own tutelary god; who might with propriety be styled its own "portion," on account of the peculiar relation that subsisted between them. "The portion of Jacob" therefore is the same as the God of Jacob; He who had taken upon Himself the guardianship and protection of that family. But He was distinguished from all the rest, who, as before observed, were falsehood and vanity all of them, having no other existence than as lifeless images, the work of deluded men; whereas He was the Creator of the universe, of all that exists; and, that there might be no room to mistake the Being intended, He is further characterized as He who made choice of Israel for the special object of His concern, had marked him out for His own possession, as with a measuring rod; and to whom the name of Jehovah belonged. Dr. Blayney.

—— the rod of his inheritance:] This expression is taken from the first division of the land of Canaan, when the inheritance of each tribe and family was meted out with a line or a rod. W. Lowth.

17. Gather up thy wares out of the land, &c.] The Prophet here returns to his former denunciations against Jerusalem, and warns her to move her effects, and prepare for her going into captivity; compare Ezek. xii. 3; for though she thought herself secure, as dwelling in a place of great strength and well fortified, yet her enemies should prevail and take it. W. Lowth.

18. — Behold, I will sling out &c.] Behold, I will suddenly and violently cast out the inhabitants of the land, as a stone out of a sling. Bp. Hall.

—— at this once,] Or, "at this time." This implies, that though they had been often saved by God's providence from hostile attacks, they would however on this occasion find it otherwise. Dr. Blayney.

19. Woe is me &c.] In this and the following verses, the Prophet seems by anticipation to suggest motives of patience and consolation to his country, in regard to the evils that were coming upon her. These he puts into her own mouth, and makes her observe, first, that her affliction, though great, was such as by experience she had found to be tolerable: secondly, that she had less reason to complain of what she suffered, as it was no other than might have been expected from the misconduct of those who had the direction of her affairs: and lastly, that she was not without hope in the mercy of God, who, upon the humble supplication of His people, might be moved to mitigate their chastisement, and turn His hand against the heathen that oppressed them. Dr. Blayney.

20. My tabernacle is spoiled, &c.] My cities and houses are rifled and destroyed, as if they were so many shepherds' tents. See the note on chap. iv. 20. W. Lowth. By the breaking of the cords, the use of which is to fasten the tent on every side to stakes in the ground, and on the breaking of which the tent falls, it is implied that all the supports of city and country were gone. Poole.

23. O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: &c.] Success does not depend upon human endeavours, but upon God's good pleasure; compare Ps. xxxvii. 23; Prov. xx. 24; and therefore Thou canst easily disappoint all the designs of our enemies. W. Lowth.

24. O Lord, correct me, but with judgment; &c.] O Lord, correct me, but in a gracious moderation; not in the extreme rigour of Thy justice; not, as we have deserved, in Thy wrath and displeasure. Bp. Hall.

The speaker here humbly entreats Almighty God to deal out His corrections in such a moderate degree, as to shew that He aimed at the amendment, and not the destruction, of the offender. The Hebrew word here translated "judgment," properly signifies "calm and dispassionate judgment," which stands opposed to the hasty sallies of anger and furious revenge. And though the latter cannot actually exist in God, it is sometimes however nominally attributed to Him, whenever the effects of His displeasure are so violent, as to stop nothing short of utter ruin; although such a proceeding may be justifiable upon the most solid principles of reason and equity. As therefore to "punish with anger," implies an unrelenting rigour and severity; so to "correct with judgment," admits the use of such moderation, as is consistent with the sinner's personal safety, whilst it promotes his reformation. Dr. Blayney.

25. Pour out thy fury upon the heathen &c.] Let Thy justice be made known, by bringing an exemplary punishment upon the Chaldeans and their allies, see chap. i. 15; who do not acknowledge Thy providence, but ascribe all their successes to their own idols. W. Lowth.

CHAP. XI.

Before CHRIST about 608. 1 Jeremiah proclaimeth God's covenant, 8 rebuketh the Jews' disobeying thereof, 11 prophesieth evils to come upon them, 18 and upon the men of Anathoth, for conspiring to kill Jeremiah.

about 608. THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Hear ye the words of this covenant, and speak unto the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem;

3 And say thou unto them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel; [a] Cursed be the man that obeyeth not the words of this covenant,

4 Which I commanded your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, from the iron furnace, saying, [b] Obey my voice, and do them, according to all which I command you: so shall ye be my people, and I will be your God:

5 That I may perform the [c] oath which I have sworn unto your fathers, to give them a land flowing with milk and honey, as it is this day. Then answered I, and said, † So be it, O LORD.

6 Then the LORD said unto me, Proclaim all these words in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, saying, Hear ye the words of this covenant, and do them.

7 For I earnestly protested unto your fathers in the day that I brought them up out of the land of Egypt, even unto this day, rising early and protesting, saying, Obey my voice.

8 Yet they obeyed not, nor inclined their ear, but walked every one in the ‖ imagination of their evil heart: therefore I will bring upon them all the words of this covenant, which I commanded them to do; but they did them not.

9 And the LORD said unto me, A conspiracy is found among the men of Judah, and among the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

10 They are turned back to the iniquities of their forefathers, which refused to hear my words; and they went after other gods to serve them: the house of Israel and the house of Judah have broken my covenant which I made with their fathers.

11 ¶ Therefore thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able † to escape; and [d] though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them.

12 Then shall the cities of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem go, and cry unto the gods unto whom they offer incense: but they shall not save them at all in the time of their † trouble.

13 For according to the number of thy [e] cities were thy gods, O Judah; and according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem have ye set up altars to that † shameful thing, even altars to burn incense unto Baal.

Chap. XI. ver. 1. The word that came to Jeremiah &c.] The prophecy contained in this and the following chapter may not improperly be assigned to the reign of Josiah; only to the latter end of it, when the people, who in the eighteenth year of that prince had solemnly engaged to perform the obligations of the Divine covenant, may in course of time be supposed to have relapsed into their former disregard and neglect. The Prophet is therefore sent to recall them to their duty, by proclaiming anew the terms of the covenant, and rebuking them sharply for their hereditary disobedience, ver. 1—8. He denounceth evil against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem for their idolatrous apostasy, ver. 9—17; and being informed of the conspiracy of the men of Anathoth against his life by Divine revelation, he prayeth against them, and is authorized to foretell their utter destruction. Dr. Blayney.

3. — Cursed be the man &c.] It is a way of speaking usual in Scripture, to denounce God's judgments in the form of imprecation: so the Apostle pronounces an excommunication, by saying, "Let him be accursed," or "Anathema," Gal. i. 8; 1 Cor. xvi. 22. To the same sense St. Paul saith of Alexander the coppersmith, "The Lord reward him according to his works," 2 Tim. iv. 14. Thus the imprecations we meet with in several of the Psalms are to be understood as so many predictions, or denunciations of God's judgments. Accordingly St. Peter, speaking of the 109th Psalm, saith, that in it the Holy Ghost "spake before (or prophesied) by the mouth of David concerning Judas," Acts i. 16. W. Lowth.

A wholesome instruction is to be derived from the curse, which God denounces against those who keep not His covenant. Let us reflect on this, and remember that God hath made a more excellent covenant with us than with the Jews; and that this covenant engages us still more strictly to hear His voice, and to do all that He hath commanded us; so that, if we break it, we shall incur a much heavier punishment. We ought farther to consider, that it is not only by worshipping idols that the Divine covenant is broken; but that may be done likewise by breaking the vows which we have made to God, and by withdrawing our hearts from Him and giving them to the world. Ostervald.

5. — Then answered I, and said, So be it, O Lord.] The Prophet confirms the words of this curse, according to the form prescribed in Deut. xxvii. 26; and thereby approves the justice of it. W. Lowth.

seeing they have committed spiritual fornication with many idols; and those sacrifices, which now they pretend to offer, are not holy oblations, but profane and common flesh? Yea, O My people, thou art come to that height of impiety, as that thou rejoicest in evil. Bp. Hall.

—— the holy flesh is passed from thee?] The flesh of thy sacrifices, which thou offerest up unto Me, as an atonement for thy sins, doth not at all profit thee, being polluted and rendered unacceptable to Me, through those many and great sins, in which thou continuest without remorse, and even takest a pride in committing them: see chap. vi; and compare Hag. ii. 12—14. W. Lowth.

16. The Lord called thy name, A green olive tree, &c.] St. Paul plainly alludes to this verse, Rom. xi. 17. The Jewish nation, in its flourishing state, is sometimes compared to a vine, sometimes to an olive tree, chiefly because of the fruits of good works, which God might justly expect from them, after all the care and pains He had bestowed upon them, to make them thrive and fructify. See Ps. lii. 8. W. Lowth.

—— with the noise of a great tumult] These words signify the confused murmur of the Chaldean army, coming tumultuously to desolate Jerusalem and its dependencies with fire and sword. Dr. Blayney.

18. And the Lord hath given me knowledge of it, &c.] This relates to the evil designs of the men of Anathoth against the Prophet, which, he saith, God had revealed to him. See the following verses. W. Lowth.

19. — Let us destroy the tree with the fruit thereof, &c.] Let us not only burn his prophecies, but kill the man: let us despatch him from off the earth. Bp. Hall.

20. — let me see thy vengeance on them: &c.] O God, I do not desire it in any malice to them, or thirst of revenge, but in a holy zeal for Thy glory: being by Thee so directed, and committing my cause to Thee, I pray for a sight of Thy just retribution to them. Bp. Hall.

23. — the year of their visitation.] When I will visit their sins upon them: see chap. xxiii. 12; xlvi. 21; xlviii. 44; l. 27. The words "year" and "day" often signify a set or determined time. See Isai. lxi. 2. W. Lowth.

Chap. XII. The Prophet here ventures freely, though with professions of confidence in the Divine justice, to expostulate with God concerning the prosperity of wicked men in general; whose punishment he solicits, attesting the mischiefs that were continually brought on the land by their unrestrained wickedness, ver. 1—4. In reply he is forewarned to expect, that, in proportion to the power of his enemies, his own personal grievances would naturally increase; whilst the distractions of the state, and the unkindness of his kinsfolks, precluded him all hopes of either publick or private redress, ver. 5, 6. But God expressly challenges the national calamities as the result of His own special determination and judgment. He had discarded His people for their malicious behaviour towards Him, and they were therefore given up to the outrage and devastation of fierce and merciless invaders, ver. 7—13. At last He promises them a restoration in future, and threatens punishment upon their heathen neighbours who had oppressed them; but with this reservation, that such of these, as would come over to His established worship, He would receive and incorporate into His Church; but the unbelieving part should be utterly extirpated. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. Righteous art thou, O Lord, &c.] Though I doubt not of Thy justice and holiness, yet suffer me to argue with Thee concerning the prosperity of the wicked, and the afflictions of the righteous: a dispensation, which hath in all ages been made an objection against Providence, and upon that account been a stumblingblock even to good men: see Job xii. 6; xxi. 7, &c.; Ps. xxxvii. and lxxiii. W. Lowth.

2. — thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins.] The true character of hypocrites, who, according to Isaiah's description of them, "honour God with their lips, but their heart is far from Him," Isaiah xxix. 13; Mark vii. 6. "The reins" in Scripture signify the thoughts and inward dispositions. W. Lowth.

4. — because they said, He shall not see our last end.] That is, He will not concern Himself about rewarding or punishing us hereafter. The inference, which bad men are apt to draw from God's past forbearance, is, that He is totally regardless of the moral conduct of mankind. Hence, promising themselves the same impunity in future, which they have hitherto experienced, they are led to a free indulgence of all their vicious inclinations. Accordingly the Psalmist, complaining, as the Prophet does here, of the prosperity of the wicked, represents their behaviour and their principles in terms exactly similar. See Ps. xciv. 5—7. Dr. Blayney.

5. If thou hast run with the footmen, &c.] Here God answers the complaint of the Prophet, and applies a proverbial expression to his case. W. Lowth. The sense of the proverb seems to be, If thou art not able to encounter less dangers, how wilt thou be able to overcome greater? Poole.

—— in the swelling of Jordan?] The ravages of war and hostile invasion are often represented in Scripture under the image of a river rising rapidly above its banks, and carrying all before it. To these inundations the river Jordan was very subject. Dr. Blayney.

9. Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird, &c.] My people are become wild and savage, (see ver. 8,) and not to be tamed; and, like "a speckled" or "taloned bird," are only fit for prey and deeds of violence. And as all the rest of the birds flock round such an one, and are ready to pull it to pieces; so I have stirred up all the enemies of My people to annoy them on every side; compared here to so many beasts of prey: see chap. ii. 15; Isai. lvi. 9; Hab. ii. 17. The word here rendered "speckled" is of an uncertain signification, being found but in this one place of the Bible, unless, perhaps, 1 Sam. xiii. 18, where some look upon it as a proper name. The Septuagint understand it of the hyena, which sense is followed by Bochart. But if we take it in either signification, the sense is much the same. W. Lowth.

10. Many pastors have destroyed my vineyard,] By "many pastors" are meant the generals of the Chaldean army; so the Chaldee paraphrase rightly explains it: see ver. 12, and compare chap. vi. 3. God calls Judea "His vineyard and pleasant portion," because of the care He took to cultivate and improve it, and the fruit He might justly have expected from it: see the note on chap. xi. 16. W. Lowth.

12. — upon all high places through the wilderness:] Rather, "upon all the plains in the wilderness;" that is, the smooth plots of greensward in the waste or uncultivated country, which afford pasturage to the cattle. Dr. Blayney. See note on chap. ix. 10.

13. — they shall be ashamed of your revenues] Or, "Be ye ashamed of your increase." God's displeasure shall make all your designs abortive, they shall not bring forth their expected fruit, and you shall be seized with shame and confusion to see yourselves disappointed: compare chap. ii. 36, 37. The word "revenues," or "increase," alludes to the "reaping of thorns," mentioned in the foregoing part of the verse. W. Lowth.

14. Thus saith the Lord against all mine evil neighbours, &c.] This prophecy threatens chiefly Idumeans, Moabites, Ammonites, and Philistines, against whom Jeremiah prophesies, chap. xlvii, xlviii, and xlix; and Ezekiel, chap. xxv. These are called "evil neighbours," because of the spite and ill-will which they shewed toward the Jews on all occasions, at this time especially, when most of them joined with the Chaldeans and Syrians in opposing them: see 2 Kings xxiv. 2. This sin is particularly laid to their charge by the Prophets, and they are threatened with captivity chiefly on that account: see chap. xlix. 1, 2; Ezek. xxv. 3, 6, 8, 12, 15; Amos i. 11; Obad. ver. 10; Zeph. ii. 8. W. Lowth.

15. And it shall come to pass, after that I have plucked them out &c.] The captivity threatened to the Jews and their neighbours seems to be confined to seventy years: see chap. xxv. 11; xxvii. 7; Isai. xxiii. 15. We may observe likewise, that after Jeremiah hath threatened severe judgments upon several countries, he con-

Before CHRIST about 608. have compassion on them, and will bring them again, every man to his heritage, and every man to his land.

16 And it shall come to pass, if they will diligently learn the ways of my people, to swear by my name, The LORD liveth; as they taught my people to swear by Baal; then shall they be built in the midst of my people.

g Isai. 60.12. 17 But if they will not g obey, I will utterly pluck up and destroy that nation, saith the LORD.

CHAP. XIII.

1 In the type of a linen girdle, hidden at Euphrates, God prefigureth the destruction of his people. 12 Under the parable of the bottles filled with wine he foretelleth their drunkenness in misery. 15 He exhorteth to prevent their future judgments. 22 He sheweth their abominations are the cause thereof, about 602. THUS saith the LORD unto me, Go and get thee a linen girdle, and put it upon thy loins, and put it not in water.

2 So I got a girdle according to the word of the LORD, and put it on my loins.

3 And the word of the LORD came unto me the second time, saying,

4 Take the girdle that thou hast got, which is upon thy loins, and arise, go to Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock.

5 So I went, and hid it by Euphrates, as the LORD commanded me.

6 And it came to pass after many days, that the LORD said unto me, Arise, go to Euphrates, and take the girdle from thence, which I commanded thee to hide there. Before CHRIST about 602.

7 Then I went to Euphrates, and digged, and took the girdle from the place where I had hid it: and, behold, the girdle was marred, it was profitable for nothing.

8 Then the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

9 Thus saith the LORD, After this manner will I mar the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem.

10 This evil people, which refuse to hear my words, which walk in the ‖ imagination of their heart, and walk after other gods, to serve them, and to worship them, shall even be as this girdle, which is good for nothing. ‖ Or, stubbornness.

11 For as the girdle cleaveth to the loins of a man, so have I caused to cleave unto me the whole house of Israel and the whole house of Judah, saith the LORD; that they might be unto me for a people, and for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory: but they would not hear.

12 ¶ Therefore thou shalt speak unto them this word; Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Every bottle shall be filled with wine: and they shall say unto thee, Do we not certainly know that every bottle shall be filled with wine?

cludes with a general promise of returning from their captivity in the latter days: see chap. xlviii. 47; xlix. 6, 39. Which promise relates probably to their conversion under the Gospel, called in Scripture "the latter days." W. Lowth.

16. — then shall they be built in the midst of my people.] I will make one Church of Jews and Gentiles; and if those nations shall frame themselves to the true worship of My name, and to the profession of the religion of My people, then will I establish them in My Church, as true and lively members thereof. Bp. Hall. The acceptance of the believing Gentiles is here clearly intimated; and their union with the Church of God, the middle wall of partition being broken down. See concerning the actual accomplishment of this prophecy, Eph. ii. 13—22. Dr. Blayney.

17. But if they will not obey, &c.] Those that will not have God and Christ to reign over them, shall in the end be punished with everlasting destruction. See Isai. lx. 12; Luke xix. 27; compared with Rev. xix. 21. W. Lowth.

It is never to be believed, that the wicked and the hypocrites shall escape unpunished, or that they are truly happy, because God spares them for a while. The threatenings of the Lord have sooner or later their effect: nor are they less sure, because He defers the execution of them. Ostervald.

Chap. XIII. This chapter contains a single and distinct prophecy, which, under two symbols, a linen girdle left to rot, and all vessels being filled with wine, foretells the utter destruction that was destined to fall upon the whole Jewish nation, including individuals of every rank and denomination, ver. 15—21; and the cause of all the evils is assigned in the general corruption and profligacy of manners that prevailed without a prospect of amendment, ver. 22 to the end. The particular mention of the joint downfall of the king and queen (ver. 18.) seems to justify the opinion which ascribes this prophecy to the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim, whose fate with that of his queen is in like manner noticed together. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. — and put it not in water.] God explains at ver. 11 what was meant by the symbol of the girdle or sash worn about the loins, namely, His people Israel, whom He purchased and redeemed of old, and attached to Himself by a special covenant; that as a girdle serveth for an ornament to the wearer, so they should be subservient to the honour and glory of His name. But, it is added, "they would not hear" or conform to His intentions; therefore being polluted with the guilt of their disobedience, they were in that state, and on that very account, to be carried into captivity; conformably to which the Prophet was directed, "not to put the girdle in water;" that is, not to wash it, but to leave it in that filthiness, which it had contracted in wearing. Dr. Blayney.

4. — arise, go to Euphrates,] God commanded the Prophet to hide the girdle by the bank of the Euphrates, to signify the Jews being carried captive over that river, called "the waters of Babylon," Ps. cxxxvii. 1. Most commentators are of opinion, that this was performed by the Prophet only in a vision: it not being probable that God should send him on two such long journeys as are mentioned here, and ver. 6, merely upon this errand: see a like instance chap. xxv. 17. Several things are related in Scripture as actually done, which yet were only transacted in a vision. W. Lowth.

the brim with wine. Then shall the hearers take this prophecy in scorn, and say, What wonders are these thou tellest us? As if we knew not that the use of bottles is to be filled with wine! Bp. Hall.

13. — Behold, I will fill all the inhabitants &c.] Even thus every inhabitant of this land shall be filled up with the wine of God's wrath; and shall be, as it were, drunken therewith. Bp. Hall.

God's judgments are often represented under the figure of a cup full of intoxicating liquor: see this metaphor at large pursued, chap. xxv. 15, &c. W. Lowth. See Bp. Lowth's note on Isai. li. 17.

14. And I will dash them one against another,] I will confound and destroy them all, as earthen vessels are broken to pieces, when they are dashed one against another. The words allude to the earthen bottles, which were to be filled with wine, ver. 12. Compare chap. xix. 10, 11; xlviii. 12. W. Lowth.

16. Give glory to the Lord your God, &c.] Confess your faults, (compare Josh. vii. 19,) and humble yourselves under His mighty hand, before He bring upon you the night of affliction. Light is the emblem of joy, and happy times are expressed by bright and pleasant days; as, on the contrary, troubles and calamities are represented by the night and darkness, when every thing looks melancholy and dismal: see chap. iv. 23; xv. 9; Isai. v. 30; viii. 22; Joel ii. 10; Amos viii. 9, 10. W. Lowth.

—— the dark mountains,] Before the time comes, when ye shall be forced to fly by night upon the mountains, for fear of your enemies. See chap. xvi. 16; Ps. xi. 1; Ezek. vii. 16; Matt. xxiv. 16. W. Lowth.

18. — Humble yourselves, sit down:] That sitting was a posture of humiliation under circumstances of affliction and distress, see Judg. xx. 26; Job ii. 8; Isai. iii. 26. Dr. Blayney.

19. The cities of the south shall be shut up,] Judah lying south in respect of Chaldea, which in the next verse is characterized by the name of "the north," the "cities of the south" may mean the cities of Judah in general. Or, they may mean those cities in particular which lay in the southern parts of Judah, at the greatest distance from the enemy; which yet were subjected to the common calamity, as well as those which were nearer at hand. Dr. Blayney.

20. — where is the flock that was given thee,] Judah seems here to be addressed as a person, being asked with a sarcastical sneer what was become of all the numerous multitudes, which God had given her formerly, constituting, like flocks of sheep, the national wealth and glory? Dr. Blayney.

21. — for thou hast taught them to be captains, &c.] Some have understood the alliances, contracted heretofore with the Assyrians by Ahaz, and the conduct of Hezekiah towards the ambassadours of the king of Babylon, to be here alluded to, as having paved or prepared the way for the future invasion of the country by the Chaldeans. But I rather think the irreligious and wicked manners of the people are principally designed; which put them out of the protection of Almighty God, and rendered them an easy conquest to any enemy that came against them. Thus they taught their enemies to oppress and to be lords over them; against whom, but for their own faults, they might have maintained their security and independence. Dr. Blayney.

22. — are thy skirts discovered, and thy heels made bare.] Thine enormous crimes deserve no less punishment than that of captivity; when thou shalt be carried away unto a strange country, stripped and bare, without any covering to thy nakedness; for such was the barbarous cruelty of conquerors to their captives: see Isai. iii. 17; xx. 4; xlvii. 3; Lam. i. 8; iv. 21; Nahum iii. 5. W. Lowth.

23. — then may ye also do good, &c.] The meaning of this is, that they who are accustomed to do evil will find the work of repentance and reformation to be, not indeed impossible, but extremely difficult. The genius of sublime and figurative language requires such lively expressions, and describes things which are hard to be accomplished as quite impossible. That the words are to be thus understood appears from the whole chapter, which contains terrible denunciations against the Jews, of evils which should come upon them for their impiety. These threats are mixed with exhortations to repentance, and then follow the words, "Can the Ethiopian" &c.; which must not therefore be taken as a declaration that they could not possibly repent: for then the Prophet ought not to have pressed them in the same discourse to amend their ways, and to give glory to the Lord, before He caused darkness, and before their feet stumbled, and they should fall to rise no more. Dr. Jortin.

Chap. XIV. It may be presumed, that this prophecy was delivered in the beginning of Jehoiakim's reign, not long after the foregoing. The six first verses of this chapter foretell great distress that should be occasioned in Judah by means of a long drought. The Prophet in the name of the people makes a confession of sins, and supplicates the Divine mercy, ver. 7—9. God declareth His resolution to punish, and will not be entreated, ver. 10—12. Jeremiah complains of false prophets, who amuse the people with contrary predictions; God disclaimeth them, and threatens both them, and the people who listen to them, with sword and famine, ver. 13—18. The Prophet renews his supplications in the people's name and behalf, ver. 19. to the end of the chapter. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. —concerning the dearth.] Or, "the drought:" so the word is rendered by the Greek, Chaldee, and Syriack versions; and so it is rendered by our translators also in chap. xvii. 8. The Hebrew word signifies restraint; that is, "when the heaven is shut up, that there is no rain," as the Scriptures express it, Deut. xi. 17; 1 Kings viii. 35. W. Lowth. That drought was a calamity incident to the land of Israel, and applied as a punishment for sin, may be seen from comparing Deut. xi. 17; xxviii. 23; 1 Kings viii. 35. Dr. Blayney.

2. —the gates thereof languish;] The gates of cities, being places of publick resort, where the courts of justice were held, and other common business transacted, seem here to be put for the persons that meet there: as when we say, "the court is in mourning," we mean the persons that attend the court or king's palace. So by this passage we are to understand, that all the persons who appear in publick are dejected, and put on black or mourning, on account of the national distress. Dr. Blayney. Or, that they look black and ghastly, and cast themselves down upon the ground out of grief and despair. Compare chap. viii. 21; xiii. 18. W. Lowth.

3. —their little ones] The meaner people. Bp. Hall. The younger members of their family, or their children. Dr. Blayney.

——to the pits,] Or, "to the cisterns." Jerusalem was supplied with water by two lakes or pools, called "the upper pool," and "the lower pool;" see Isai. vii. 3; xxii. 9; whence the water was conveyed in cisterns for the use of the city. W. Lowth.

——they were ashamed and confounded,] At the disappointment. W. Lowth. See Job vi. 20.

——covered their heads.] See note on chap. ii. 37.

4. Because the ground is chapt,] See note at Ps. cxliii. 6. The Prophet, by speaking of ploughmen, shews that he is speaking of the autumnal state of those countries: and if the cracks are so deep from the common dryness of their summers, what must they be when the rains are withheld, as in the present case, beyond the usual time? Sir J. Chardin.

5. —forsook it,] Namely, what she had just calved; (Dr. Blayney;) to seek for sustenance in some other place. W. Lowth.

6. —they snuffed up the wind like dragons;] They sucked in the air for want of water to cool their internal heat. Bochart observes, that the comparison to dragons or great serpents is very just; for Ælian describes these animals as standing daily for some hours with their heads erect and their mouths wide open towards the sky, and drawing in the air. Bochart adds, that the eyes of the wild asses are properly noticed, as being by nature extremely sharpsighted. But for want of nourishment these must fail and be exhausted. Dr. Blayney.

7. —do thou it for thy name's sake:] Deal not with us according to our deservings, but so as not to give occasion to strangers to speak evil of Thy name, to question Thy power, wisdom, or goodness. So God says, Ezek. xx. 9, 14, 22, 44, that amidst the various provocations He had received, He had still acted uniformly upon that principle. Dr. Blayney.

8. —why shouldest thou be as a stranger in the land,] Thou that wert wont to dwell and continue among Thy people, why shouldest Thou now be as a stranger that passes through the land, and lodges there a night, and away? Bp. Hall. As one who, having no permanent interest in the land, is little concerned for its welfare. Dr. Blayney.

15. Therefore thus saith the Lord concerning the prophets &c.] The ministers of the Lord ought seriously to reflect upon what is here said of the crime and punishment of those false prophets, who promised peace to the Jews at the very time their ruin was approaching; that it may be a warning to them never to flatter sinners, nor lull them into security; but to speak always with zeal and sincerity what God has commanded. And the people ought likewise to learn from hence to hearken diligently to those who declare the truth to them sincerely and without flattery. Ostervald.

17. —the virgin daughter of my people] Those cities are called "virgins" which never came into a conqueror's hands. In the same sense the Prophet here calls Jerusalem "a virgin," because she had been hitherto under God's immediate protection, and preserved by Him from all attempts of her enemies: compare Amos v. 2. The dissolution of a government or body politick is called a "breach," by way of allusion to the breaking or disjointing of the limbs of an human body: see chap. viii. 21; Lam. ii. 13. W. Lowth.

18. —both the prophet and the priest go about] Or, wander "into a land that they know not." The priests and prophets confirmed the people in their corruptions and impenitence, thereby seeking to advance their own interest and authority: see chap. ii. 8; v. 31. To which sense the marginal reading renders the former part of the sentence thus, "The prophet and the priest make merchandise against a land;" and now they receive the reward of their prevarications, by going into captivity with those they have misled. See ver. 15. W. Lowth.

21. —do not disgrace the throne of thy glory:] Jerusalem is called the "city of God," Ps. xlviii. 1; lxxxvii. 3; as He was in a peculiar manner the King of the Jews, and this was His royal city, or chief seat of His kingdom: see chap. iii. 17. But the words are chiefly to be understood of the temple; and the Prophet beseeches God not to give that up to be profaned by infidels; the place which He had chosen for His peculiar residence; where He sat between the cherubims as upon a throne: see the note upon Isai. lxvi. 1. W. Lowth.

Chap. XV. To the supplication at the close of the preceding chapter God replies by declaring, that not even the intercession of His favoured servants Moses and Samuel should divert Him from executing His purpose of vengeance against Judah, which is denounced in terms of great severity, ver. 1—9. At ver. 10, Jeremiah breaks out into a passionate exclamation, on account of the odium and persecution that was brought upon him. God reproves him for speaking slightingly of the Divine aid, the benefit of which he had already experienced; and threatens him with the loss of his fortunes, as a punishment for his sins, ver. 11—14. The Prophet deprecates the ill effects of God's displeasure, representing the cheerful readiness with which he had obeyed the Divine call, and the continual uneasiness he had felt in contemplating the melancholy subject of his commission, ver. 15—18.

Ver. 1. — Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, &c.] Moses obtained pardon for the people after their sin of making the golden calf, Exod. xxxii. 34; and again, after their despising the promised land, Numb. xiv. 20: Samuel's intercession prevailed for their deliverance out of the hands of the Philistines, 1 Sam. vii. 9: and these two persons are mentioned together, as remarkably prevalent by their prayers, Psal. xcix. 6, 8. But here God saith, that, if these very persons were alive, and in that near attendance to Him, which they formerly enjoyed, (for that is the import of the phrase "to stand before Him," see ver. 19; chap. xviii. 20; Deut. x. 8; 1 Kings xvii. 1;) yet even their prayers should not avert His judgments from His people: compare Ezek. xiv. 14. W. Lowth.

2. — for death,] It is obvious from the foregoing enumeration, that death here means the pestilence. See chap. xiv. 12. Dr. Blayney.

4. And I will cause them to be removed into all kingdoms of the earth,] Several Jews were carried captive into other countries, besides Chaldea; see note on chap. xii. 14; others turned voluntary exiles, to avoid the miseries they saw coming upon their country; see chap. xl. 11. The words here are taken out of Deut. xxviii. 25; where Moses threatens them with a general dispersion over the world, which received its utmost completion after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. W. Lowth.

6. — I am weary with repenting.] When God suspends the execution of His judgments, He is said to "repent of the evil" He had threatened: see chap. xviii. 8. This He had done so often, that He is represented as a man whose patience is at last quite tired out, it being to no purpose to withhold His hand any longer from striking. Compare Isai. xliii. 24; Hos. xiii. 14; Mal. ii. 17. W. Lowth.

7. And I will fan them with a fan in the gates of the land;] I will toss and scatter them in all the defenced cities of the land, as corn is shaken and dispersed in the winnowing. Bp. Hall.

8. — against the mother of the young men] The nation in general is called "the mother" of each Jew in particular; Isai. l. 1; Hos. ii. 2—5; or, as Lowth thinks, Jerusalem. Abp. Secker.

——a spoiler] Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon is undoubtedly here designed. In the margin, the preceding word is rendered "a young man:" this would very properly characterize the same person. For Josephus cites from Berosus, the Chaldean historian, a passage to the following purport; "that Nabopollassar king of Babylon, hearing that the provinces of Egypt, Cœle-Syria, and Phenice had revolted, and being himself infirm from age, sent a part of his forces under his son Nebuchadnezzar, then in the prime of youth, by whom these provinces were again reduced." This was the expedition said to have been undertaken by him in the third year of Jehoiakim king of Judah: in the course of which, after having defeated the Egyptian army at Carchemish, he laid siege to Jerusalem, took, and plundered it, carrying away much spoil and many captives to Babylon. See chap. xlvi. 2; Dan. i. 1—3; 2 Kings xxiv. 1. Dr. Blayney.

9. She that hath borne seven] "Seven" is put for many: and the multitude of the inhabitants or children of Jerusalem, the mother city, is here alluded to. Dr. Blayney.

10. — that thou hast borne me a man of strife &c.] The Prophet here complains of the opposition he met with from his countrymen, for speaking unwelcome truths, which had occasioned him so much uneasiness, as if he had engaged in the most invidious of all occupations, and the most likely to engender strife, that of lending and borrowing upon usury. Dr. Blayney.

The Jews were forbidden to take usury of their brethren, Deut. xxiii. 19; especially of the poor, Exod. xxii. 25; which was thought so great an oppression, that it made the man who was guilty of it hated and cursed by every one. The Prophet saith, this was just his own case, every body was his enemy for delivering those messages which he had received from God. W. Lowth.

should escape the evils coming upon the Jewish nation when the "residue of them should be delivered to the sword," ver. 9. W. Lowth.

12. Shall iron break the northern iron and the steel?] The meaning probably is, Shall the enemy crush or overpower one whom I have made like the hardest iron or brass? alluding to what God said to the Prophet when he first engaged him in His service, chap. i. 18. "Iron from the north" is perhaps justly supposed to denote, in a primary sense, that species of hardened iron, or steel, called in Greek Chalybs, from the Chalybes, a people bordering on the Euxine sea, and consequently lying to the north of Judea, by whom the art of tempering steel is said to have been discovered. Strabo speaks of this people as being known in former times by the name of the Chalybes, but afterwards called Chaldæi; and mentions their iron mines. These however were a different people from the Chaldeans, who were united with the Babylonians. Dr. Blayney.

13. — without price,] That is, not making thee any compensation, but inflicting these losses upon thee as a punishment for thy sins. Dr. Blayney.

15. — take me not away in thy longsuffering:] The sense may be, according to our old version, "take me not away in the continuance of Thine anger:" the Prophet seeming to think, that, during a long course of God's anger against His people, he himself, however innocent, might naturally be involved in those sufferings, which were intended for the punishment of the guilty. Dr. Blayney.

16. Thy words were found, and I did eat them;] As soon as I received or understood Thy word, and the messages Thou didst deliver to me, I treasured them up in my memory; I meditated upon them, and did inwardly digest them. It was a pleasure to me to think, I should be an instrument of conveying Thy commands to my brethren, and that I should have the honour of being called Thy prophet or messenger. The receiving of God's word, by which the soul is nourished, is elsewhere compared to corporeal food: see Ezek. iii. 1, 3; Rev. x. 9; Isai. lv. 1, 2; Amos viii. 11; John vi. 27. W. Lowth.

17. I sat not in the assembly of the mockers,] The word translated "mockers" is more properly rendered "them that make merry," chap. xxx. 19; xxxi. 4. In the preceding verse the Prophet had declared, that he had felt great satisfaction at first in being appointed to the office of God's messenger. But his joy was not of long continuance; the tenour of his commission was such as to affect him, like St. Paul, and much upon the same account, with "great heaviness and continual sorrow of heart," Rom. ix. 2; so that, renouncing all cheerful society, he indulged a solitary melancholy, in prospect of the dire effects of God's indignation against his unhappy country. Dr. Blayney.

God's judgments, as they were represented to the Prophets, often raised such dreadful ideas in their mind, as to affect them in an extraordinary manner, especially if their threatenings concerned their own country, or the church of God: see chap. xxiii. 9; Ezek. iii. 14; Dan. vii. 28; Hab. iii. 2, 16. W. Lowth.

—— because of thy hand:] God's hand may be understood either of His judgments, which, being denounced by the Prophet, might be compared to a "hand" stretched out, and just ready to strike: or else of the prophetical impulse, which was strong upon Jeremiah, and in a manner forced him to be the messenger of evil tidings: compare 2 Kings iii. 15; Isai. viii. 11; Ezek. i. 3; iii. 14. W. Lowth.

18. — wilt thou be altogether unto me as a liar,] The words might be better translated, "Wilt Thou be altogether unto me as a disappointment, and as waters that fail?" namely, that dry up and disappoint the thirsty traveller. The Prophet means, that God had in a manner deserted him for a time, had left him to struggle with difficulties unforeseen or unexpected, thereby disappointing in some measure his hopes of better success. Presently however, as if he had said too much, he corrects himself, and expresses his entire confidence in the Divine promises to support and strengthen him. See ver. 19—21. Dr. Waterland.

—— as waters that fail?] Compare Job vi. 15.

19. — If thou return, then will I bring thee again, &c.] If thou bethink thyself of this thine impatience, and of thy too great regard to this murmuring and disobedient people, I will so confirm thee that they shall be forced to acknowledge thee My faithful servant; and, if thou do wisely make difference betwixt erroneous doctrine and the truth, and betwixt godly and profane persons, then will I admit thee to be My mouth unto My people: do not thou give way to them in their vicious courses; but let them, if it may be, come in to thee. Bp. Hall.

Chap. XVI. The prophecy, which begins here, is continued to the end of the 18th verse of the next chapter. It may have been delivered, as well as those of the preceding chapters, towards the beginning of Jehoiakim's evil reign.

The Prophet is forbidden to marry or beget children, because of the judgments that were about to fall upon all the inhabitants of the land, both old and young, ver. 1—4. For the like reasons he is desired not to join with any of his neighbours either in their mourning or in their convivial mirth, ver. 5—9. He shews, that their calamities were the effect of their apostasy and disobedience, for which God would drive them into exile, and give them no quarter, till He had fully requited their wickedness, ver. 10—13. But their future restoration is immediately foretold, ver. 14, 15; as is also the conversion of the Gentiles, ver. 19—21. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 6. —neither shall men lament for them,] The thoughts of men shall be wholly taken up with bewailing themselves: their own calamities shall be so great, they shall be unconcerned for the misfortunes of others. W. Lowth.

—— nor cut themselves, nor make themselves bald] See the notes on the places referred to in the margin.

7. Neither shall men tear themselves for them in mourning,] If this translation be correct, it is only a repetition of what went before. The translation in the margin, "neither shall men break bread for them," is much to be preferred. As to the custom alluded to, see the note on 2 Sam. iii. 35. To this custom the writer of the book of Tobit refers, when, amongst other good exhortations to his son, he directs him to "pour out his bread on the burial of the just," Tobit iv. 17. Sir J. Chardin tells us, that "the Oriental Christians still make banquets of the same kind, by a custom derived from the Jews; and that healths were also drunk to the survivors of the family." These latter meant, no doubt, or were taken from, "the cup of consolation." In like manner he explains (as many other commentators have also done) "the bread of men," mentioned Ezek. xxiv. 17, as signifying "the bread of others;" the bread sent to mourners; the bread that the neighbours, friends, and relations sent. Dr. Blayney.

13. —there shall ye serve other gods] The opportunities of frequenting the publick worship of the true God shall be taken from you, as a just judgment for your neglect of His service in your own country; and you shall be exposed to the peril of committing idolatry, and being seduced by the Chaldeans to the worship of their idols. Compare Deut. iv. 28; xxviii. 36; 1 Sam. xxvi. 19. W. Lowth.

14. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord,] The particle, rendered "therefore," sometimes signifies "nevertheless;" (W. Lowth;) here it seems more properly to signify, "after this." Dr. Blayney.

God here gives the people notice of a future restoration, on purpose to guard them during their exile from falling into idolatry through despair, by letting them see they had still a prospect of recovering God's wonted favour and protection. Dr. Blayney.

—— it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth, &c.] The days come, wherein God shall not be celebrated so much by the memory of His deliverance of His people out of Egypt, which was long since done; as by the fresh remembrance of the great mercy, which He hath wrought for them, in bringing them back from their captivity in Babylon, and in all those lands whither they were driven. *Bp. 16. Behold, I will send for many fishers, &c.] But, in the mean time, their desolation shall be grievous and universal: I will call for the Chaldeans, who shall be as so many fishers, to drag them out of their good land; and as so many hunters, to chase them from their houses, and to drive them from all their refuges. Bp. Hall.

Enemies and oppressors are elsewhere represented under the metaphors of "fishers" and "hunters:" see Gen. x. 9; Amos iv. 2; Hab. i. 14, 15: because they use all the methods of open force and secret wiles, frequently compared to nets, in order to make men their prey: see Ezek. xii. 13; Hos. v. 1. These two similitudes imply, that the Chaldeans shall make an entire conquest and booty of the whole land, of its inhabitants and their riches: and what shall escape one party, shall fall into the hands of another. W. Lowth.

18. — I will recompense their iniquity — double;] Not double of what they deserved, but double of what, that is, much greater than, would have been inflicted on the heathen for the like offences. Compare Rev. xviii. 6. Parkhurst. See the note on Isai. xl. 2.

—— with the carcases of their detestable and abominable things.] With the carcases of their abominable sacrifices, which they have made to their idols; and with those very shameful idols, to which they have sacrificed. Bp. Hall. Idols are elsewhere called "carcases," not only because they are without life, but also because of their filthiness and hatefulness in the eyes of God: see Lev. xxvi. 30; Ezek. xliii. 7, 9. W. Lowth.

19. O Lord, — the Gentiles shall come unto thee &c.] The more emphatically to demonstrate the absurdity of forsaking the true God, and apostatizing to idolatry, the Prophet foretells, that the time will come when the Gentiles shall be ashamed of the idolatry of which they and their forefathers have been so long guilty, shall humbly confess this their sin, and address themselves in all their wants to the true God, as their only refuge and protection. W. Lowth.

20. Shall a man make gods unto himself, and they are no gods?] This seems to be a reply from God, accounting for what was said before, that the heathens had no benefit from the objects in which they placed their religious confidence, by asking whether it was likely that men could create gods, giving them power and perfections, which they had not in themselves? Dr. Blayney.

21. Therefore, behold, I will this once cause them to know,] The phrase, which our translation renders "this once," may be translated "at this time," as it is 2 Sam. xvii. 7. If we understand the verse of the Gentiles, mentioned in the foregoing verse, the sense is, that God will, at the time foretold, ver. 19, exert His power in an extraordinary manner for their conversion: compare Isai. lii. 10. If we apply the words to the Jews, they import, that He will manifest His power, in bringing upon them all the evils already threatened against them, and they should know that He is the LORD, a fulfiller of all His threatenings, as well as a performer of His promises. Compare Ezek. vi. 7; xii. 20; xxiv. 24, 27. W. Lowth. See the note on Exod. vi. 3.

Chap. XVII. In this chapter the Prophet describes in the four first verses the attachment of Judah to idolatry, and foretelleth the fatal consequences. He contrasteth the accursed condition of him, who resteth his trust on man, with the blessedness of one, that trusteth in God; and illustrates both by apt comparisons, ver. 5—8. He sheweth, that, be the human heart ever so wily, God can detect, and will finally punish, its double-dealing, ver. 9—11. He acknowledgeth, that sure salvation cometh from God and from Him only, ver. 12—14. And, complaining of those that scoffed at his predictions, he prayeth for the Divine countenance and support against them, ver. 15—18.

The remaining part of the chapter is taken up with a distinct prophecy relative to the strict observance of the sabbath day; which the Prophet was sent, most probably immediately after the delivery of the foregoing, to proclaim aloud, in all the gates of Jerusalem, as a matter which concerned the conduct of every individual, and the general happiness of the whole. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. — with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond:] This is spoken metaphorically, and is meant to denote that idolatry was indelibly fixed in their affections and memory, as much as if it had been engraved with instruments, capable of making the strongest and most durable impression, upon their hearts, as upon a writing tablet, and upon their altars, so as to be for ever present before their eyes. Compare Deut. xi. 18—20; Prov. iii. 3; vii. 3. Dr. Blayney.

3. O my mountain in the field, I will give thy substance &c.] Rather, "O My mountain, I will give thy substance in the field," &c. Nations and princes of great power and eminence are figuratively called "mountains," in regard to their strength and elevation: see chap. li. 25; Isai. xli. 15; Zech. iv. 7. Judah is therefore styled God's mountain, as having been chosen by Him, and thereby raised to a degree of elevation above all other people. See chap. xxxi. 23. Dr. Blayney.

6. — he shall be like the heath &c.] That man shall be like the heath in a dry wilderness, that shall not partake of the sweet showers when they fall. Bp. Hall.

—— in a salt land] Saltness in Hebrew expresses barren ground; see Deut. xxix. 23; Ps. cvii. 34; Zeph. ii. 9. W. Lowth.

The borders of the Dead sea, and of the Red sea, and part of Arabia Petrea, were barren from containing a quantity of various salts. Calmet.

9. The heart is deceitful above all things, &c.] The words were spoken by Jeremiah concerning his own countrymen, not all of them, probably, but the more corrupted part of the nation, who to their other vices had added a consummate hypocrisy; and of the hearts of these men he draws a most hideous picture, and describes them under three bad characters. The first is fraud and treachery: "the heart is deceitful above all things." The second is excessive malice: it is "desperately wicked." The third is deep dissimulation and hypocrisy, expressed in the way of question, "who can know it?" A worse representation than this can hardly be made of any creature: and therefore it must not be supposed that this was intended to be a description of human nature, or of the heart of man in general, but rather of the most habitual and depraved sort of sinners. Dr. Jortin.

—— who can know it?] The meaning is, that the wicked intentions of bad men are so covered over with fair appearances, that none but God can see through the disguise, as it follows in the next verse, "I the Lord search the heart." Abp. Sharp.

10. I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins,] Signifying, the most secret thoughts and motions of the soul: these God is said to "search" and "try," not as if it were a work of labour and difficulty to the Divine knowledge to penetrate the hearts of men, and to dive into their thoughts, but to signify to us the perfection and exactness of the Divine knowledge: as, when men would know a thing exactly, they search into every part of it, and examine every thing narrowly. On the same account He is elsewhere said "to weigh the spirits" of men, Prov. xvi. 2; intimating that He has that perfect knowledge of the secrets of men's hearts, which men have of those things that they weigh in a balance with the greatest exactness. Abp. Tillotson.

11. As the partridge sitteth on eggs, &c.] It is here said of the partridge, rather than of any other bird, that it "sitteth and hatcheth not," because, the partridge's nest being made on the ground, the eggs are frequently broken by men or other animals, and the bird is often obliged to quit them for fear of cattle, dogs, or sportsmen, which chills the eggs, and makes them unfruitful. Rain and moisture also may spoil them. Calmet, Parkhurst.

—— and at his end shall be a fool] In the end shall find that he hath been a fool. Bp. Hall. So God calls the rich man, Luke xii. 20; who was cut off in the midst of his life, when he promised himself the enjoyment of many years. W. Lowth.

12. A glorious high throne from the beginning &c.] As in the preceding verses was set forth the vain dependence of him who seeks to advance himself by indirect methods; so here we are taught the solid foundation, which he builds upon, who has recourse to the Divine blessing, and seeks to recommend himself to the favour of that Being, to whom Israel was taught to look up for support, and whose kingdom from all eternity ruleth over all. Dr. Blayney.

13. — they that depart from me shall be written in the earth,] They that forsake My laws, saith God, and their reliance upon Me, shall not be registered among My people, nor shall their names be written in heaven, or in the book of life: compare Ezek. xiii. 9; Ps. lxix. 28; Luke x. 20; Phil. iv. 3; Ezra ii. 59. W. Lowth.

14. Heal me, O Lord, and I shall be healed; &c.] It is from Thee only that I expect comfort and relief in all my troubles and afflictions: see ver. 15—17. And as I acknowledge that all the blessings I enjoy come from thee, so it is to Thee that I return all thanks and praise: compare Ps. cix. 1; cxlviii. 14; Deut. x. 21. The expression, "Save me, and I shall be saved," is much the same with that in chap. xxxi. 18, "Turn Thou me, and I shall be turned;" and both of them import, that it is the Divine assistance and blessing alone which can crown human endeavours with success. See the note there. W. Lowth.

15. Behold, they say unto me, Where is the word of the Lord?] This is an objection common in the mouths of infidels and libertines, that God doth not speedily fulfil His promises and threatenings, so as to give them ocular demonstration of their certainty: see Isai. v. 19; Amos v. 18; 2 Pet. iii. 4. This was objected against the truth of Jeremiah's prophecy by the unprincipled persons of the age. W. Lowth.

27 But if ye will not hearken unto me to hallow the sabbath day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the sabbath day; then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched.

16. As for me, I have not hastened from being a pastor &c.] It is Thou, O Lord, that hast called me; and I have not dared to be averse from following Thee in that charge which Thou hast laid upon me; neither have I been ambitious and desirous of this sad and busy task, as Thou well knowest, and that which I have spoken is Thy true message, and no other. Bp. Hall.

19. — the gate of the children of the people,] This probably means the gate most frequented by the people, being that nearest the palace, where the kings of Judah held their most solemn courts of judicature. Dr. Blayney.

20. — Hear ye the word of the Lord, ye kings of Judah,] Compare chap. xix. 3. The words are directed both to the king himself, and likewise to the princes, or those of the blood royal: see ver. 25. The word "king," in the Hebrew language, signifies any person in authority: see chap. xxv. 20, &c.; l. 41; li. 28. W. Lowth.

25. Then shall there enter into the gates of this city &c.] Compare chap. xxii. 4. Hence it appears, that the judgments denounced against Jerusalem, at least as far as they threatened the city with utter destruction, were not irreversible. And from the Prophet's advice to Zedekiah, chap. xxxviii. 17, it may be concluded, that if the king had listened to that counsel, the city would not have been destroyed, and he himself might have continued a tributary king under Nebuchadnezzar. It is true, that in several other chapters of this prophecy, God, upon foresight of the Jews' impenitence, pronounces a peremptory sentence upon them: see the note on chap. iv. 28. W. Lowth.

—— riding in chariots and on horses,] This is plainly a description of a state of peace and security; compare ver. 27: taken in any other sense, it must stand in contradiction to the law in Deut. xvii. 16, and to many other texts in Scripture. Bp. Sherlock.

26. — from the plain, and from the mountains, and from the south,] These divisions of the country, belonging to the tribe of Judah, may be found Josh. xv. 21, 33, 48; and these, together with the tribe of Benjamin, make up the whole kingdom of Judah, when taken separate from the kingdom of Israel, or of the ten tribes. See the same enumeration, chap. xxxii. 44. Dr. Blayney.

Chap. XVIII. The prophecies and transactions, contained in this and the two following chapters successively, hang together, and must be referred to some part of the three first years of the reign of Jehoiakim. The Prophet is shewn, first, under the type of the potter, God's absolute authority over nations and kingdoms to regulate and alter their condition at His own discretion, ver. 1—10. He is then directed to exhort the people to avert the evil designed them by repentance and amendment; and upon their refusal to charge them with the guilt of unprecedented revolt, and to foretell their destruction, ver. 11—17. They conspire against him: he protesteth against their unmerited and ungrateful persecution of him, and calleth for justice against them. Dr. Blayney.

Before CHRIST about 605.

4 And the vessel ‖ that he made of clay was marred in the hand of the potter: so he † made it again another vessel, as seemed good to the potter to make it.

5 Then the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

6 O house of Israel, [a] cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the LORD. Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand, O house of Israel.

7 At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to [b] pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it;

8 If that nation, against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, [c] I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them.

9 And at what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to build and to plant it;

10 If it do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, then I will repent of the good, wherewith I said I would benefit them.

[h] Chap. 6. 16.

[i] Chap. 19. 8. & 49. 13. & 50. 13.

Ver. 6. —cannot I do with you as this potter?] The comparison of a potter, here proposed, does not signify that God has created men to destroy them, or render them unhappy, by the mere effect of His will; but the design of it was, to teach the Jews that they were in the hands of God, and that He was able to punish them, and afterwards to restore them: in the same manner as a potter, who, thinking to make a good vessel and not succeeding, might break it, and make another with the same clay. Thus God Himself explains it, when He says, that if a nation, which He had purposed to destroy, turned from its iniquity, He would not destroy it; and on the contrary, if a nation, which He had determined to bless, did not hearken to His voice, He would withdraw His favour from that nation. Ostervald.

7. At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, &c.] God does not threaten evil, because He is resolved to inflict it; rather, He threatens it, that we may by our repentance prevent it, and so He may not inflict it. "He foretelleth," saith St. Chrysostom, "what He will bring upon us, for this very purpose, that He may not bring it upon us; and warneth before He striketh, to make us careful to avoid the stroke." God sends His servants, the Prophets, to threaten vengeance against sinners, not thereby to drive them from hope of mercy, but to draw them to repentance and humiliation. Nor is it to be accounted among the least of God's mercies, that, when He might in His just displeasure overwhelm us in the very act of sin, yet He forbeareth and forewarneth, and foretelleth and threateneth us, before He punish; that, if we will take any warning, He may do better to us than He hath said, and not bring upon us what He hath threatened. Bp. Sanderson.

8. —I will repent of the evil] See the notes on Gen. vi. 6.

10. —I will repent of the good, &c.] From this and the foregoing verse we may infer, that God's promises in Scripture, however uttered in general terms, are yet for the most part to be understood conditionally, according as men behave themselves, especially when applied to particular persons: see Numb. xiv. 34. And as God did justly reject those Jews who refused to embrace the Gospel, notwithstanding the general promises He had made to that people; so neither can particular Christians, nor churches, lay any claim to God's general promise of preserving His Church, any further than as they adhere to that rule of faith and manners, which He hath prescribed to them in His holy word. W. Lowth.

11. —return ye now every one from his evil way,] See the note on chap. xvii. 25.

14. Will a man leave the snow of Lebanon which cometh from the rock of the field?] It is as strange and incredible for men to forsake the true God for idols, as it would be for a thirsty traveller to forego the cold refreshing streams that come in his way. See Prov. xxv. 25. Lebanon derives its name from the whiteness of the snow which, even in the heat of summer, covers its top. W. Lowth.

By its exceeding height it proves a conservatory for abundance of snow, which thawing in the heat of summer affords supplies of water to the rivers and fountains in the valleys below. Maundrell.

It appears also, that the snow of mount Lebanon is used in the summer to mix with wine, for the purpose of cooling it: and it may have been employed in the same way in the time of Jeremiah. See note at Prov. xxv. 13. Harmer.

——or shall the cold flowing waters that come from another place be forsaken?] The passage may be translated, "Shall the running waters be forsaken for the muddy waters?" and so it is parallel to chap. ii. 13, 18. Or, the sense is much the same if translated, "Shall the running waters be forsaken for strange waters, or waters that come from another place?" that is, waters conveyed in pipes or conduits. See the margin. W. Lowth.

15. —have caused them to stumble in their ways &c.] The worship of idols hath perverted them from following the old beaten track, plainly set forth in the law of Moses, and in the examples and practice of former ages; see chap. vi. 16; and hath engaged them in such new and untried ways of worship, as will end in their utter ruin, ver. 16. W. Lowth.

17. I will scatter them as with an east wind] The calamities of war and the like wasting judgments are elsewhere compared to an east wind, which is dry and blasting. See Isai. xxvii. 8; Ezek. xvii. 10; xix. 12; Hos. xiii. 15. W. Lowth.

——I will shew them the back, and not the face,] I will not so much as look upon them in their distress. Bp. Hall.

6 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that this place shall no more be called Tophet, nor The valley of the son of Hinnom, but The valley of slaughter.

7 And I will make void the counsel of Judah and Jerusalem in this place; and I will cause them to fall by the sword before their enemies, and by the hands of them that seek their lives: and their [c] carcases

18. Then said they, Come, and let us devise devices &c.] The people to whom Jeremiah had delivered his message from God, seem to have been incensed against him on much the same ground as the Jews were in aftertimes against our Saviour and His Apostles. They had persuaded themselves, that God had intended for them a perpetual establishment; and would accordingly provide them with a constant succession of men in all departments to preserve and maintain the general welfare; namely, priests to direct all matters of law and religion; wise statesmen to manage their civil concerns; and prophets to make known to them the immediate will of God on all important and extraordinary occasions. Upon this presumption they inferred, that Jeremiah, who foretold the contrary, was a false prophet, and as such they determined to punish him. Dr. Blayney.

20. —they have digged a pit for my soul.] To entrap and destroy me; as men dig pits to ensnare wolves, bears, and other wild beasts. Calmet.

21. Therefore deliver up their children to the famine, &c.] Since they are thus incorrigible, I shall not any more intercede for them; but let them be overtaken by those calamities of fire and sword, with which Thou hast threatened them. See chap. xvi. 4; and the note on chap. xi. 20. W. Lowth.

Chap. XIX. Under the type of breaking a potter's vessel, Jeremiah, in the presence of the elders of the priests and people, foresheweth the ruin and desolation of Judah and Jerusalem for their sins, ver. 1—13; and repeateth the like denunciations in the court of the temple, ver. 14, 15: for which being beaten and imprisoned by Pashur, captain of the temple, on his release he pronounceth a terrible sentence against Pashur and his friends, foretelling their being carried away captives with all Judah unto Babylon, where Pashur and all that belonged to him should die in exile, chap. xx. 1—6. Jeremiah complaineth of the mockery of his enemies, and their malicious attempts to hurt him, but professeth his trust, that God would still defeat their purposes, and avenge his wrongs; and celebrateth his deliverance with a song of praise, ver. 7—13. He bitterly lamenteth his being born to a life of so much sorrow and uneasiness, ver. 14. to the end. Dr. Blayney.

2. —which is by the entry of the east gate,] The valley of Hinnom lay south of the temple. In the Hebrew it is the gate Harsith, which some interpret the dung gate, mentioned Nehem. ii. 13; others the potter's gate; the potter's field being near the temple. See Zech. xi. 13; Matt. xxvii. 10. W. Lowth.

CHAP. XX.

1 Pashur, smiting Jeremiah, receiveth a new name, and a fearful doom. 7 Jeremiah complaineth of contempt, 10 of treachery, 14 and of his birth.

[a] 1 Chron 24. 14.

NOW Pashur the son of [a] Immer the priest, who was also chief governor in the house of the LORD, heard that Jeremiah prophesied these things.

2 Then Pashur smote Jeremiah the prophet, and put him in the stocks that were in the high gate of Benjamin, which was by the house of the LORD.

3 And it came to pass on the morrow, that Pashur brought forth Jeremiah out of the stocks. Then said Jeremiah unto him, The LORD hath not called thy name Pashur, but ‖ Magor-missabib.

‖ That is, fear round about.

4 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will make thee a terror to thyself, and to all thy friends: and they shall fall by the sword of their enemies, and thine eyes shall behold it: and I will give all Judah into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall carry them captive into Babylon, and shall slay them with the sword.

[b] 2 Kings 20. 17.

5 Moreover I [b] will deliver all the strength of this city, and all the labours thereof, and all the precious things thereof, and all the treasures of the kings of Judah will I give into the hand of their enemies, which shall spoil them, and take them, and carry them to Babylon.

---

8. — an hissing;] "Hissing" seems to mean here an inarticulate sound, expressing not so much contempt, as astonishment mixed with horrour. See chap. xviii. 16. Dr. Blayney.

9. — I will cause them to eat the flesh &c.] See particularly Deut. xxviii. 53, with the note upon it.

12. — and even make this city as Tophet:] A place of slaughter and burial for the inhabitants. Bp. Hall.

13. — upon whose roofs they have burned incense unto all the host of heaven,] The Jews having their houses with flat roofs, (see Deut. xxii. 8,) there dedicated altars to the host of heaven, where they could have the fullest view of them: see 2 Kings xxiii. 12; Zeph. i. 5. W. Lowth.

14. — he stood in the court of the Lord's house;] The great court of the temple, which is called the "outer court," Ezek. xlvi. 21. W. Lowth.

15. — upon all her towns] All the cities of Judah and Benjamin are meant, which acknowledged Jerusalem for their metropolis, and were subordinate to her. Dr. Blayney.

Chap. XX. ver. 1. Now Pashur the son of Immer the priest, &c.] The family of Immer was the sixteenth in order of the four and twenty courses of the priests: see 1 Chron. xxiv. 14: and this Pashur, by being head of his family, had a principal authority in directing matters relating to the temple, and keeping good order there. He is therefore called "chief governour," or "a chief governour in the house of the Lord:" see 1 Chron. xxiv. 5. So Hilkiah, Zechariah, and Jehiel, are called "rulers of the house of God," 2 Chron. xxxv. 8; because the first of them was chief priest, and the other two probably heads of their courses. W. Lowth.

2. — the stocks] More properly "the house of correction." The original word occurs twice besides; chap. xxix. 26, and 2 Chron. xvi. 10; in both which places it is rendered simply a "prison;" and is mentioned as a punishment due to or inflicted on one, who assumed the character of a prophet without a proper call; or was presumed to have behaved unbecomingly as such. It is probable, that Pashur, having caused Jeremiah to be beaten or scourged, ordered him into confinement afterwards; whence he released him the next day. Dr. Blayney.

—— the high gate of Benjamin,] This gate was probably on the north side of the city, (Ezek. ix. 2,) and so named from its situation towards the tribe of Benjamin. Dr. Wells.

3. — Magor-missabib.] See the margin. God's calling him by that name implies, that He would render him such as He called him. So when God called Abram by the new name of Abraham, He assigns the reason, "for a father of many nations have I made thee," Gen. xvii. 5. Dr. Blayney.

5. — all the strength of this city, &c.] All its wealth, and all that the inhabitants have gotten by their industry. The word rendered "strength" is elsewhere translated "treasure," Prov. xv. 6; Ezek. xxii. 25. W. Lowth. Or, the word rendered "strength" means the men of war, who constitute the strength of a city or state. Dr. Blayney.

8 For since I spake, I cried out, I cried violence and spoil; because the word of the LORD was made a reproach unto me, and a derision, daily.

[i] Gen. 19. 25.

7. O Lord, thou hast deceived me, &c.] The original word here may signify to "persuade" or "allure," and that by fair, as well as by indirect, means. The passage alludes to that encouragement, which the Prophet received from God, either at his first appointment, chap. i. 7, 8, 17—19; or afterwards, when he began to complain of hardships, chap. xv. 19—21. The meaning therefore of the Prophet's words in this place is consistent with the most perfect piety and reverence towards God: who, he says, had prevailed on him to undertake an honourable, though painful, employment; and had encouraged him to go on with it by assurances, which he acknowledges to have been made good, ver. 11—13; notwithstanding the unmerited scorn and reproaches of his countrymen had often tempted him to wish that he could withdraw himself out of the way, ver. 8, 9. Dr. Blayney.

8. For since I spake, I cried out, I cried violence and spoil;] Or, "I cried out of violence, and complained aloud of spoil." Since I began to prophesy, I have reason to complain of the hardships which I have undergone upon that account: see chap. xi. 19, &c.; xv. 15; xviii. 18. This verse may also be thus explained: Since I began to prophesy as God commanded me, I have freely expostulated with my countrymen of the violence and oppression of which they have been guilty; see chap. vi. 7; and therefore all the requital that I have had for the faithful discharge of my office, has been contempt and ill usage. W. Lowth.

9. —was in mine heart as a burning fire] What is here meant probably is, that the conscience of the Prophet would not let him be easy in suppressing that which he knew it was his duty to speak out. In like manner St. Paul says of himself, that "necessity was laid upon him, so that woe would be to him if he preached not the Gospel, the dispensation of which was committed unto him," 1 Cor. ix. 16, 17. The Psalmist makes use of the like expression, "the fire burned," to denote the inward agitation he felt, whilst he endeavoured to stifle the sentiments which laboured for utterance, Ps. xxxix. 3. Dr. Blayney.

There is no heat so raging and insupportable, as that in the bosom of an honest man on doing any thing which he ought not to have done, or refraining from that which his conscience informs him he ought to do. Lord Clarendon.

10. For I heard the defaming of many, fear on every side.] Or, Magor-missabib. Many upbraided me with the ill usage I received from Pashur, and with my prophecy against him, by the name of Magor-missabib. If we follow the received translation, as the expression is the same with Psalm xxxi. 13, so the sense seems to be much the same in both places; namely, From the slanderous reports raised about me, I had reason to apprehend some evil design against my life, as well from treacherous friends, as from open enemies. W. Lowth.

—— Report, say they, and we will report it. All my familiars &c.] My pretended friends encourage one another in spreading false reports of me; or desire to hear from my mouth more prophecies, in hopes to find some matter of accusation against me, whereby they might take away my life, and so satisfy their desire of revenge. W. Lowth.

12. But, O Lord of hosts, that triest the righteous,] Who makest trial of his faith and patience by affliction. See Ps. xi. 5. W. Lowth.

14. Cursed be the day &c.] What we here read is a lamentation written in a poetical strain, like the dirges which the mourning women used to sing; wherein strong poetical figures are used, and all the circumstances brought in, that are proper to raise the passions, but which it would be extremely wrong to interpret in a strict and literal sense; and therefore the imprecations of the Prophet are not to be looked upon as so many expressions of indignation and malice, but rather of mourning and sorrow. Divested of this poetical heightening, all that the Prophet says amounts only to this; that the man, who had brought his father the tidings of his birth, had been in reality the messenger of ill news instead of good; for that, as things had turned out with him, it would have been a kinder and more charitable office to have strangled him in the womb, than to have assisted in bringing him into the world, to lead a life of so much bitterness and disquietude. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney. Compare Job iii. 1.

15. —the man who brought tidings to my father,] It is the custom in Persia, to announce to the father the birth of his male children with particular ceremonies. Sir J. Chardin. And something of this kind appears to have prevailed among the Jews. Harmer. See Job iii. 3; and the note there.

16. —let him hear the cry in the morning, and the shouting at noontide;] The alarm of war, or such a rejoicing as the enemies make over the vanquished. The verse signifies the being perpetually beset with terrours of hostile invasion. W. Lowth.

THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, when king Zedekiah sent unto him Pashur the son of Melchiah, and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, saying,

2 Enquire, I pray thee, of the LORD for us; for Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon maketh war against us; if so be that the LORD will deal with us according to all his wondrous works, that he may go up from us.

3 ¶ Then said Jeremiah unto them, Thus shall ye say to Zedekiah:

4 Thus saith the LORD God of Israel; Behold, I will turn back the weapons of war that are in your hands, wherewith ye fight against the king of Babylon, and against the Chaldeans, which besiege you without the walls, and I will assemble them into the midst of this city.

Before CHRIST about 589.

[a] Exod. 6. 6.

6 And I will smite the inhabitants of this city, both man and beast: they shall die of a great pestilence.

7 And afterward, saith the LORD, I will deliver Zedekiah king of Judah, and his servants, and the people, and such as are left in this city from the pestilence, from the sword, and from the famine, into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of those that seek their life: and he shall smite them with the edge of the sword; he shall not spare them, neither have pity, nor have mercy.

8 ¶ And unto this people thou shalt say, Thus saith the LORD; Behold, I set before you the way of life, and the way of death.

9 He that [b] abideth in this city shall die by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth out, and falleth to the Chaldeans that besiege you, he shall live, and [c] his life shall be unto him for a prey.

[c] Chap. 39. 18. & 45. 5.

Chap. XXI. From the two first verses of this chapter we learn, that it was delivered in answer to a message sent by king Zedekiah, when Nebuchadnezzar was coming to make war against him: that is, about the ninth year of his reign. All the intermediate prophecies therefore of Jehoiakim's reign, and of the eight first years of Zedekiah's, ought properly to precede this.

This chapter contains the first of those prophecies, which were delivered by Jeremiah subsequent to the revolt of Zedekiah, and the breaking out of the war thereupon; and which are continued on to the taking of Jerusalem, related in chap. xxxix, in the following order: chap. xxi, xxxiv, xxxvii, xxxii, xxxiii, xxxviii, xxxix.

The message in this chapter has by some been confounded with that in chap. xxxvii: but they appear to be clearly distinct from each other. From the reply given to that in chap. xxxvii, it is manifest, that the Chaldeans, who had been besieging Jerusalem for sometime, had already raised the siege, and were gone to meet the Egyptian army, leaving the Jews in great hopes that they would never return again. But the terms of this message seem to imply, that the king of Babylon had but just commenced his hostilities against Judah, of which Zedekiah informs the Prophet, as of a matter that might not have come to his certain knowledge; and desires him to intercede with God, that He would divert the storm by some such extraordinary interposition, as He had been wont to manifest in favour of His people, ver. 1, 2. The answer likewise takes no notice of any siege or operations past, but simply regards the future, which it is declared should end unfortunately, because God would take an active part against the inhabitants of Judah, and would deliver both their city, and also the king and his people into the hands of their merciless enemies, ver. 3—7. It is further shewn, that the only resource of the people for safety was to surrender to the Chaldeans, ver. 8—10. And for the royal house, they are warned to prevent the effects of God's indignation by doing justice and right, and not to trust to their strong hold, which would stand them in no stead when God was bent on their destruction, ver. 11. to the end. The time of this transaction, therefore, I conceive to be in the ninth year of Zedekiah, previous to the siege of Jerusalem, which began in the tenth month of that year. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 2.—Nebuchadrezzar] Dr. Kennicott has observed, that in the printed copies the name of the king of Babylon is thus spelt in twenty-six other places of this book; and in ten places, Nebuchadnezzar. There is a great variation in the manuscripts. Dr. Blayney.

——if so be that the Lord will deal with us according to all his wondrous works,] If He will shew His wonderful power, in giving us a total deliverance from the hands of our enemies the Chaldeans. W. Lowth.

4.—Behold, I will turn back the weapons of war &c.] I will utterly disable all your forces, and your weapons that are in your hands, from hurting or opposing your enemies, or helping yourselves. Bp. Hall.

5. And I myself will fight against you &c.] By the executioners of My wrath, the sword, the famine, and the pestilence. I will plainly appear on your enemies' side, by the success I will give to their arms. W. Lowth.

7.—he shall smite them with the edge of the sword;] Zedekiah himself was not put to death, but was carried to Babylon, where he died: see chap. xxiv. 5. But his sons and his great men were slain by the command of Nebuchadnezzar; see 2 Kings xxv. 7, 8. It is common with all writers to express that indefinitely, which is true of the greater part of the persons concerned. W. Lowth.

9.—he that goeth out,—shall live,] God had declared His purpose of giving up the Jews and the neighbouring countries to the dominion of the Chaldeans, chap. xxv. 9; xxvii. 6. So they, who would comply with His declared will, should preserve their lives; the rest should be destroyed, as fighting against God. W. Lowth.

——his life shall be unto him for a prey.] Or, "as spoil." This is a proverbial expression, found also in chap. xxxviii. 2; xxxix.

THUS saith the LORD; Go down to the house of the king of Judah, and speak there this word,

Before CHRIST about 609.

2 And say, Hear the word of the LORD, O king of Judah, that sittest upon the throne of David, thou, and thy servants, and thy people that enter in by these gates:

3 Thus saith the LORD; [a] Execute ye judgment and righteousness, and deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor: and do no wrong, do no violence to the stranger, the fatherless, nor the widow, neither shed innocent blood in this place.

[a] Chap. 21. 12.

4 For if ye do this thing indeed, [b] then shall there enter in by the gates of this house kings sitting † upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, he, and his servants, and his people.

[b] Chap. 17. 25.
† Heb. for David upon his throne.

5 But if ye will not hear these words, I swear by myself, saith the LORD, that this house shall become a desolation.

6 For thus saith the LORD unto the king's house of Judah; Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon: yet surely I will make thee a wilderness, and cities which are not inhabited.

18; xlv. 5. The meaning is, that his life shall be saved under such circumstances, that he shall have reason to look upon himself as extremely fortunate, or to speak more properly, as indebted to the favour of Divine providence for a singular and extraordinary benefit. Dr Blayney.

12. — Execute judgment in the morning,] The king was supreme judge in all causes and controversies; see 2 Sam. viii. 15. The courts of judicature usually sat in the morning; see note at Ps. ci. 8. W. Lowth.

13. — O inhabitant of the valley, and rock of the plain,] A description of Jerusalem. The former expression denoting the lower part of the city, which was surrounded with hills; see Ps. cxxv. 2: the latter describing mount Zion; compare chap. xvii. 3. W. Lowth.

14. — I will kindle a fire in the forest thereof,] The word "forest" is often metaphorically taken for a city in the prophetical writings: because its stately buildings, or its principal inhabitants, resemble tall cedars standing in their several ranks. See chap. xxii. 7; Is. xxxvii. 24; Ezek. xx. 46; Zech. xi. 1. W. Lowth.

The prophet in this chapter declares, that if the people would submit themselves to the Chaldeans, and obey the voice of God, they should be spared; but if not, they should perish. Thus God gave proofs of His goodness, at the same time that He exercised His justice. This shews very plainly, that the perdition of sinners is not so determined, but that they may prevent it. God is always inclined to pardon and spare them, even when He chastises them; and if at last He overwhelms them with His judgments, it is because He is forced to it by their impenitence. Ostervald.

Chap. XXII. The prophecy which follows to chap. xxiii. ver. 9, was evidently delivered in the reign of Jehoiakim; for it speaks of his immediate predecessor as already gone into captivity, and foretells the death of Jehoiakim himself. It is likewise probable, that it followed immediately after what is said, in the 19th and 20th chapters, to have passed in the temple precincts; from whence, as from higher ground, the Prophet is ordered to "go down to the house of the king of Judah." Compare chap. xxxvi. 12.

The beginning of this prophecy is an address to the king of Judah, his servants, and people, recommending an inviolable adherence to right and justice, as the only means of establishing a throne, and preventing the ruin of both prince and people, ver. 1—9. The captivity of Shallum is declared to be irreversible, ver. 10—12. Jehoiakim is severely reproved for his tyrannical oppressions, and his miserable end foretold, ver. 13—19. His family is threatened with a continuance of the like calamities; the fall and captivity of his son Jeconiah are explicitly set forth, and the perpetual exclusion of his seed from the throne, ver. 20—30. The name of Zedekiah is not mentioned for obvious reasons; but he is no doubt principally intended in the two verses of chap. xxiii, under the general character of those evil shepherds, who should be punished for dispersing, instead of feeding, the flock. In the six following verses, with which the prophecy concludes, the people are consoled with gracious promises of future blessings; of their return from captivity, and of happier times under better governours; of the glorious establishment of the Messiah's kingdom; and, it may be, of the subsequent restoration of all the dispersed Israelites to dwell once more in their own land. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 3. Thus saith the Lord; Execute ye judgment &c.] Kings and magistrates are God's vicegerents; their principal business is to "execute judgment" and justice in the earth. If they pervert or neglect this, they abuse the authority they have received of God; they rebel against their own liege Lord and Sovereign, and violate the great end and design of their office; at the same time that they sap and weaken by degrees the foundation of their own power. Wogan.

4. — then shall there enter in by the gates of this house] See the note on chap. xvii. 25. Instead of "the gates of this house," the text there reads, "the gates of this city:" and the context here shews, that the prophecy is directed, not only to the king's court in particular, but likewise to the whole city of Jerusalem, one part of which was called the city of David; and the whole looked upon as a royal city, and the place of their king's residence. Compare ver. 2, and 8. W. Lowth.

6. — Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon:] Lebanon was the highest mountain in Israel: and was therefore an apt emblem of the reigning family, advanced to the highest rank and dignity in the state. Gilead was the richest and most fertile part of the country. The meaning then is plainly this, By My providence thou art not only supreme in rank, but hast been rendered exceedingly wealthy and flourishing: but the same power, that raised thee, will likewise be exerted in reducing thee to the lowest state of indigence and distress. Dr. Blayney.

Hence we are taught, that the greater privileges any church or nation enjoys, the sorer will prove its punishment, if it abuses the favour and goodness of God. Wogan.

7. — they shall cut down thy choice cedars,] The Prophet, having compared the king's palace or the city of Jerusalem to Lebanon, (ver. 6,) here pursues the metaphor, and threatens to destroy both houses and inhabitants by the Chaldean army: see the note on chap. xxi. 14. W. Lowth.

8. And many nations shall pass by this city, &c.] They who had heard that this city had been called the city of God, and the place of His especial residence, would be astonished to find it the scene of His judgments and vengeance. Thus was fulfilled that threatening of Moses, that God would make the Jews "an astonishment" to other nations, Deut. xxviii. 37. See likewise 1 Kings ix. 8. W. Lowth.

10. Weep ye not for the dead, &c.] "Weep not for the dead;" that is, for the good Josiah, who, though dead, was happy, and in peace; but weep rather for his wicked son Shallum, or Jehoahaz; who, after a very short and impious reign, was carried captive into Egypt, and was never to return or see his native country any more. Wogan.

11. — Shallum the son of Josiah] The son of Josiah, who immediately succeeded his father on the throne, was Jehoahaz, whom Pharaoh-necho deposed after a reign of three months, and carried captive to Egypt, where he died, 2 Kings xxiii. 30—34. It is therefore probable, that, before he ascended the throne, his name was Shallum, which he changed for Jehoahaz, as his brothers Eliakim and Mattaniah also assumed the names of Jehoiakim and Zedekiah on the like occasion, 2 Kings xxiii. 34; xxiv. 17. Dr. Blayney.

13. Woe unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, &c.] The Prophet proceeds to denounce God's judgments against Jehoiakim, who succeeded Shallum; but taking no warning by his brother's fall, nor forsaking the sins that had caused it, becomes also a monument of Divine vengeance, and a fearful example to warn others. Wogan.

14. — large chambers,] Several modern travellers give accounts of the large and lofty halls, and of different contrivances for letting in fresh air into the Eastern houses; and Sir J. Chardin speaks of the great size of the Eastern windows. Harmer.

—— it is cieled with cedar, &c.] In houses of better fashion in Barbary, the chambers are hung with velvet or damask from the middle of the wall downwards; the rest is adorned with the most ingenious wreathings and devices in stucco and fret-work. The cieling is generally of wainscot, either very artfully painted, or else thrown into a variety of pannels, with gilded mouldings, and scrolls of the Koran intermixed. The Prophet Jeremiah exclaims against some of the Eastern houses, that were "cieled with cedar, and painted with vermilion." Dr. Shaw. At Aleppo, the walls and cielings of the state apartments are adorned with flowers, fruits, or other fancy ornaments, painted in lively colours, intermixed with gilding, and richly varnished. Dr. Russell.

15. Shalt thou reign, because thou closest thyself in cedar? &c.] Dost thou think to reign ever the more happily and securely, because thou hast closed up thyself in cedar? Thy father, good king Josiah, lived in much content and happiness, by doing justice and right unto his subjects, and prospered in so doing. Bp. Hall.

—— did not thy father eat and drink,] That is, did not he live in a state suitable to his character? But at the same time governing with impartial justice and equity, he enjoyed in consequence thereof that solid and true felicity, which nothing but the practice of virtue and religion, emphatically called "the knowledge of God," can bestow. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

18. — They shall not lament for him, &c.] The Prophet repeats part of the funeral dirge, which the publick mourners used at such solemnities; see the note on chap. ix. 17; xx. 14; and compare 1 Kings xiii. 30; signifying that Jehoiakim should not be buried with those solemn lamentations, with which the memory of his predecessors, particularly that of his father, had been honoured: see 2 Chron. xxxv. 25. W. Lowth.

19. He shall be buried with the burial of an ass, &c.] His carcase shall be shamefully left unburied; exposed to the fowls of the air, or to ravenous beasts; even as the carcase of an ass, which is left to rot in a ditch. Bp. Hall.

And so it came to pass. For being taken by the Chaldeans, as they were carrying him captive to Babylon, he died by the way, and they would not stay to bury him, but threw his body into a ditch, where it lay exposed "in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost," as the Prophet had foreseen in his Divine vision. See chap. xxxvi. 30. Reading.

20. Go up to Lebanon, and cry; &c.] This is an ironical expression, addressed to Jerusalem, or more probably to the royal house or family of Judah; the whole chapter being a prophecy concerning it and its several branches. She is styled "inhabitant of Lebanon," (ver. 23,) for the same reason as her state and dignity is denoted by "the head (or summit) of Lebanon," (ver. 6,) as being highest of all. See the note there. Here she is called upon ironically to go to the tops of the highest mountains, and to the frontiers of the country, and cry aloud for help to the neighbouring powers, but in vain; since all those who had any inclination to favour her, the Egyptians in particular, were themselves crushed and disabled by the arms of the king of Babylon. Dr. Blayney.

—— cry from the passages:] From the borders or rivers, which are the bounds of your country. W. Lowth.

21. I spake unto thee in thy prosperity; but thou saidst, I will not hear.] The common infirmity of mankind, who, being elated with prosperity, think themselves too wise to need good advice, and therefore put off all attention to it till they are in extremities, when it will do them little or no benefit. W. Lowth.

22. The wind shall eat up all thy pastors,] God's judgments are compared to a scorching and blasting wind. See chap. iv. 12; Isai. xli. 16; lvii. 13. This, it is here said, should consume all the heads and governours of the family; as it happened to the four last kings of it in succession. Dr. Blayney.

23. O inhabitant of Lebanon, &c.] See the notes on chap. xxi. 14, and ver. 20. of this chapter.

—— how gracious shalt thou be] That is, from having been obstinate and inflexible in prosperity, thou wilt be changed by adversity, and be made courteous and condescending, ready to comply with and follow admonition and good advice. Dr Blayney.

24. — though Coniah — were the signet upon my right hand, &c.] Though he were never so near and dear to Me, continuing always under My eye and superintendence; (compare Cant. viii. 6; Hag. ii. 23;) yet his wickedness would make him forfeit all My favour towards him: see 2 Kings xxiv. 9. W. Lowth. Coniah appears to have been another name for Jeconiah.

26. And I will cast thee out, and thy mother that bare thee,] See this fulfilled in 2 Kings xxiv. 15.

28. Is this man Coniah a despised broken idol?] An interrogation by way of admiration. The meaning is, Would any one have thought that this man, who was invested with royal dignity, should come to be no better than a broken image of royalty, divested of all power and authority, and an object of scorn and reproach? Nothing can be more contemptible than a broken idol, which can be put to no further use, and is no longer an object of worship, but of derision. W. Lowth.

—— wherefore are they cast out, he and his seed,] The children, which he probably had after he was carried to Babylon, where he lived many years a captive; see 2 Kings xxv. 27; though none of them lived to succeed to the royal authority. W. Lowth. See below, note on ver. 30.

30. — Write ye this man childless,] Not that Jeconiah died absolutely childless. Other parts of Scripture positively assert him to have had children, 1 Chron. iii. 17, 18; Matt. i. 12. And both verse 28, and the subsequent part of this verse, imply that he either had, or should have, seed. But the historians and chroniclers of the times are called upon and directed to set him down "childless;" because he should have no child to succeed him on the throne. Dr. Blayney.

It is no improper reflection which may be drawn from the denunciations contained in this chapter, and from the subsequent accomplishment of them, that if the crimes here threatened with special judgments, such as oppression and violence, fraud and extortion, covetousness and injustice, have destroyed the thrones and families of the mightiest princes; how shall sinners and oppressors of inferiour quality expect to escape the punishments denounced against all such violations of the Divine law? Wogan.

† Heb. Jehŏvah-tsidkenu.

Chap. XXIII. ver. 2. — the pastors that feed my people;] That undertake the care of My people, though they do not faithfully execute their trust. W. Lowth.

—— have not visited them: behold, I will visit upon you &c.] In Scripture language, to "visit" any one is to take such notice of him, and treat him in such a manner, as his condition requires. "The day of God's visitation" therefore, when wicked persons or nations are the subject, is the day of His vengeance, Isai. x. 3; but that "the Lord hath visited and redeemed His people," is the highest expression of His love, Luke i. 68. In this passage of Jeremiah these different senses of the word are found together in a beautiful opposition. Abp. Secker. "To visit," in scriptural language, signifies to send good or evil judicially. Dr. Johnson.

3. And I will gather the remnant &c.] In that happy time of restoration, I will gather the remnant of Mine elect people out of all countries, both them of Judah and of Israel, into the bosom of My Church; where they shall be fruitful of all good works. Bp. Hall.

4. And I will set up shepherds over them which shall feed them:] I will set over them holy, conscientious, able pastors, which shall feed them with the bread of life. Bp. Hall.

5. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, &c.] It hath been universally agreed by Christian, and allowed by several of the most eminent Jewish, interpreters, that this is a prophecy of the coming of Christ, and the glorious state of God's Church consequent thereupon. Nor is it possible to think of any other person or event, to which the characters here mentioned agree; whilst they all evidently conspire to point out the Messiah and His kingdom. Dean Stanhope.

—— I will raise unto David a righteous Branch,] It is an usual figure, for the head of a family, and the descendants from him, to be represented by the root or body of a tree, and the branches growing out of that tree. God therefore having frequently declared, that the Messiah should be born of the house and lineage of David, the Prophet, here and in chap. xxxiii. 15, with allusion to this figure, mentions it as an act of Divine power and mercy, that "God would raise unto David a righteous Branch." Dean Stanhope. The Messiah is often called "the Branch," to denote His descent from the stock of David: see Isai. iv. 2; Zech. iii. 8; vi. 12: and compare Isaiah xi. 1. W. Lowth.

—— and a King shall reign and prosper,] The Messiah was, continually from the time of David, foretold under this character; and, as such, He was expected by the Jews. Accordingly the New Testament abounds in affirmations concerning the regal character of Jesus; in conformity with which, though His kingly authority be not so visibly and powerfully exerted, as it shall one day be, yet we are not left under any reasonable doubt, whether our blessed Lord be the promised Messiah. The amazing vengeance taken on His murderers, in destroying their city and their constitution; and the no less wonderful success of His Gospel, propagated and preserved in opposition to all its enemies, are instances of His unlimited "power in heaven and in earth," Matt. xxviii. 18. The enlightening of Jews and Gentiles, by bringing such multitudes of the one, and so many nations of the other, to the acknowledgment of the truth, are a partial completion of the prophecies, though there be still a nobler in reserve, when the fulness of both shall come in. He reigns now actually in the hearts of men, and subdues the most formidable of our enemies by the holiness of His law, and the mighty operations of His grace. His dominion and conquest indeed will be much more absolute, when the time shall come for every enemy to be utterly destroyed. In the mean time we may be well assured, that what remains shall certainly come to pass, because nothing has hitherto failed of what was seasonable and expedient to be done, as an evidence of Christ's regal authority. Dean Stanhope.

—— and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth.] This character is elsewhere given of the kingdom of Christ; see Ps. lxxii. 2; Isai. xi. 5; xxxii. 1; His laws being the most perfect rule of righteousness, and He Himself the most impartial Rewarder of every man according to his works, Rev. xxii. 12. W. Lowth.

6. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely:] The laws which Christ has enacted are so holy, so wise, so good, that, if duly observed, the effect of them must be such exact justice, such uninterrupted order and peace, such gentleness and good-will, and universal charity, as would make even an heaven upon earth. Thus would the true Judah, the Israel of God, they that believe and practise His blessed doctrine, dwell in profound safety. Dean Stanhope.

Or we may understand this prophecy to be in part fulfilled in all true believers, the mystical Israel; and that it will probably receive its utmost completion when the Jewish nation shall be restored: a blessing foretold by most of the ancient Prophets, who generally join Judah and Israel together, as equally sharers in the blessings, and forming no more two, but one kingdom. See note on chap. iii. 18. W. Lowth.

—— and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS.] He shall really be what the title imports; (see the note on Isai. vii. 14;) He shall be "JEHOVAH," or the true God, and "our Righteousness," or the means of our justification: compare Isai. xlv. 24, 25; 1 Cor. i. 30. The title of Jehovah is elsewhere given to the Messiah by the Prophets; see Isai. xl. 10; xlviii. 17; Hos. i. 7; Zech. ii. 10, 11; Mal. iii. 1; and being that name which denotes the essence and immutability of God, and acknowledged by the Jews as incommunicable to any creature, intimates to us the Divinity of Christ. By the personal union of this to the human nature, and by the invaluable merit which His sufferings thence derived, He expiated the sins of the whole world, and so became "our Righteousness." W. Lowth, Dean Stanhope.

We seldom find the kingdom of Christ mentioned, but Righteousness is immediately mentioned as the firstfruits of it. Righteousness left the earth at the fall of Adam, and returned again to visit and to bless it, at the birth of Christ. He was conceived without stain, lived without sin, and died without guilt. He conversed in the world, yet contracted none of its pollution. His bitterest enemies, Jews and Gentiles, joined to attest His uprightness. See Matt. xxvii. 19; Luke xxiii. 4; Matt. xxvii. 4; Luke xxiii. 47. The kingdom which He came to establish was a kingdom of righteousness. He called men from the way of sin by His sermons; He allured them from its pleasures by His example; He cleansed them from its guilt by His blood; and rescued them from its power by His Spirit. Thus did Jesus of Nazareth answer His title of "the Just One;" and evince Himself to be the true Melchisedek, or "King of Righteousness." Bp. Horne.

7, 8. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, &c.] This wonderful work of God's, in restoring the Jewish nation after their dispersions all the world over, together with the bringing in of the fulness of the Gentiles, which will be also effected by these means, will so far exceed the miracles which He wrought in their deliverance out of Egypt, that this latter will not deserve to be compared or mentioned with the former. W. Lowth.

Meanwhile, the deliverance of Israel after the flesh is infinitely surpassed by the rescue of Israel after the Spirit from a tyranny and bondage, with which the Egyptian is not worthy of being named. And the remembrance of the former is in great measure swallowed up and defaced by the abolition of those ceremonial rites and festivals; in the place of which have succeeded the two Christian sacraments, and our seasons of publick thanksgiving, as commemorations and perpetual monuments of this latter and better redemption. Dean Stanhope.

9. Mine heart within me is broken because of the prophets;] The following head of prophecy, though probably delivered at the same time with the foregoing one, treats of a subject entirely different. Jeremiah testifies the horrour he felt within him on contemplating the wickedness of the priests and prophets of Judah, and the vengeance which God was about to execute upon them for the corruption which had been diffused through the whole land, by the influence of their evil doctrines and example, ver. 9—15. He exhorts the people in the name of God, not to listen to the words of the prophets, who prophesied of peace when evil was determined, and would infallibly take place, as would in time appear; and charges those prophets with speaking of themselves, and not from the Divine commission, ver. 16—22. God asserts His omnipresence and omniscience; and reproveth the audaciousness of the false prophets, who affected to place their own idle dreams on a level with the all-powerful and efficacious word of Divine revelation; declaring Himself against the several species of those impostors, ver. 23—32. In fine, He requireth all sorts of persons to desist from an indecency in common use, of styling His word "a burden;" and threatens severely to punish those, who, in defiance of this command, should continue to cast such a slur upon it. Dr. Blayney.

—— all my bones shake; I am like a drunken man, &c.] The Prophets were sometimes struck with a dreadful apprehension of those judgments which they denounced upon others. See the note on chap. xv. 18; Isai. xv. 5; Hab. iii. 6. W. Lowth.

10. —for because of swearing the land mourneth;] However slightly some may think of taking God's name in vain, it is a notorious fact, that all manner of crimes grow common and barefaced along with it: and therefore, in proportion as that increases among any people, they gradually ripen for destruction. Accordingly we find the Prophet here declaring expressly, that, "because of swearing the land mourneth." And Hosea puts that down in the first place, as the leading sin of those many, for which "the Lord had a controversy with the children of Israel. By swearing, and lying, and killing, and stealing, and committing adultery, they break out, and blood toucheth blood. Therefore shall the land mourn, and every one that dwelleth therein shall languish," Hos. iv. 1—3. Abp. Secker.

—— and their course is evil, and their force is not right.] Or, "And their violence is evil," as in the margin. Men abuse their power to the wronging and oppressing of their brethren, and add violence to the power they are possessed of, in order to compass their wicked designs. W. Lowth.

11. —in my house have I found their wickedness,] See the note on chap. vii. 30.

13, 14. —I have seen folly in the prophets of Samaria; &c.] He compares the sins of the prophets of Samaria and of those of Jerusalem together, and pronounces the latter to be more enormous; because the prophets of Jerusalem pronounced their false prophecies in the name of the true God, and made Him responsible for all their impostures: the wickedness of their lives also reflected dishonour upon His name and religion. 25 I have heard what the prophets said, that prophesy lies in my name, saying, I have dreamed, I have dreamed.

Before CHRIST 599.

26 How long shall this be in the heart of the prophets that prophesy lies? yea, they are prophets of the deceit of their own heart;

27 Which think to cause my people to forget my name by their dreams which they tell every man to his neighbour, [n] as their fathers have forgotten my name for Baal.

[n] Judg. 3. 7. & 8. 33.

28 The prophet † that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the LORD.

30 Therefore, behold, [o] I am against the prophets, saith the LORD, that steal my words every one from his neighbour.

31 Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the LORD, ‖ that use their tongues, and say, He saith.

---

18. For who hath stood in the counsel of the Lord, &c.] As if the Prophet had said, Who among these false prophets can pretend to have the secret counsels of the Almighty communicated to him? Compare 1 Cor. ii. 16. W. Lowth.

19. Behold, a whirlwind of the Lord &c.] This is spoken metaphorically. See chap. iv. 11, 12.

20. The anger of the Lord shall not return, &c.] "It shall not return unto Me void," as we read in Isai. lv. 11. The expression is taken from a messenger, who comes back without executing his commission. W. Lowth.

—— in the latter days ye shall consider] At last ye shall by woeful experience find all this verified, and shall then be deeply affected by it. Bp. Hall.

22. But if they had stood in my counsel, &c.] If they had received a commission and directions from Me, and had delivered them accordingly to My people, they would have laboured to turn them back from their vicious courses. Bp. Hall.

23. Am I a God at hand, saith the Lord, and not a God afar off?] Can these false prophets think to impose upon Me, or vent their own dreams in My name, and I not discover them? As if either distance or secrecy could place any thing out of the reach of My power and knowledge. W. Lowth.

In these words are set forth three Divine perfections, to expose the folly of those wicked men who thought, or who acted as if they thought, that they could sin securely, and that God had no knowledge, and took no notice, of their ways. God therefore, by the mouth of His Prophet, declares that He is present in all places: "Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord." He declares, that no transactions can escape His inspection: "Can any hide himself in secret places, that I shall not see him? saith the Lord." These two perfections are mentioned expressly. A third is plainly implied, namely, His irresistible power: for if a sinner, who thinks to conceal himself from his Maker, is not only mistaken, but pursues his own ruin, the reason is, because God, who is present every where, and who beholds every thing, hath also a power to deal with every one as His wisdom shall direct Him. His presence is infinite, His knowledge is unlimited, and His power is irresistible. Dr. Jortin.

28. The prophet that hath a dream, &c.] Away with all fraud in this holy service: that prophet, which hath but dreamed, let him confess it is but a dream; and he, that hath indeed a vision and word from Me, let him deliver it as My message faithfully: for what hath this "chaff" of idle dreams to do with the pure grain of My visions and revelations? Bp. Hall. The difference between true prophecies and counterfeits is as evident as that between "the chaff" and "the wheat." W. Lowth.

29. Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer] Like a "fire," to dissolve and melt the hearts of relenting sinners; but like a strong "hammer," to batter and break in pieces the rocky and flinty consciences of obstinate and hardened offenders. Witness Saul submitting to the reproof of Samuel, 1 Sam. xv. 24; the Ninevites repenting at the menaces of Jonas, Jonah iii. 5; Felix trembling at the reasoning of St. Paul, Acts xxiv. 25; and Ahab mourning, when Elijah telleth him of his sin, and forewarns him of his punishment, 1 Kings xxi. 29. That, which in the Epistle to the Hebrews is spoken, if I mistake not, of the essential WORD of GOD, the second Person in the ever blessed Trinity, is also in an analogy true of the revealed word of God, the Scriptures of the Prophets and Apostles; that it is "quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow," Heb. iv. 12. Bp. Sanderson.

30. —the prophets, —that steal my words] That fraudulently keep back the word of the Lord from the people; and that take from each other, by compact and agreement, those prophecies, which themselves have falsely devised, and unjustly ascribed to God. Bp. Hall.

31. —that use their tongues, and say, &c.] Who, by their smooth tongues, persuade the people it is the word of the Lord which they deliver, when it is nothing but their own fancy. Bp. Hall.

Before CHRIST 599.

their lies, and by their lightness; yet I sent them not, nor commanded them: therefore they shall not profit this people at all, saith the LORD.

33 ¶ And when this people, or the prophet, or a priest, shall ask thee, saying, What is the burden of the LORD? thou shalt then say unto them, What burden? I will even forsake you, saith the LORD.

34 And as for the prophet, and the priest, and the people, that shall say, The burden of the LORD, I will even † punish that man and his house.

† Heb. visit upon.

35 Thus shall ye say every one to his neighbour, and every one to his brother, What hath the LORD answered? and, What hath the LORD spoken?

36 And the burden of the LORD shall ye mention no more: for every man's word shall be his burden; for ye have perverted the words of the living God, of the LORD of hosts our God.

37 Thus shalt thou say to the prophet, What hath the LORD answered thee? and, What hath the LORD spoken?

38 But since ye say, The burden of the LORD; therefore thus saith the LORD; Because ye say this word, The burden of the LORD, and I have sent unto you, saying, Ye shall not say, The burden of the LORD;

39 Therefore, behold, I, even I, will utterly forget you, and I will forsake you, and the city that I gave you and your fathers, and cast you out of my presence:

CHAP. XXIV.

1 Under the type of good and bad figs, 4 he foreshewed the restoration of them that were in captivity, 8 and the desolation of Zedekiah and the rest.

THE LORD shewed me, and, behold, two baskets of figs were set before the temple of the LORD, after that Nebuchadrezzar [a] king of Babylon had carried away captive Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, and the princes of Judah, with the carpenters and smiths, from Jerusalem, and had brought them to Babylon.

about 598.

[a] 2 Kings 24. 12. 2 Chron. 36. 10.

2 One basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe: and the other basket had very naughty figs, which could not be eaten, † they were so bad.

† Heb. for badness.

3 Then said the LORD unto me, What seest thou, Jeremiah? And I said, Figs; the good figs, very good; and the evil, very evil, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

4 ¶ Again the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

5 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel; Like these good figs, so will I acknowledge † them that are carried away captive of Judah, whom I have sent out of this place into the land of the Chaldeans for their good.

† Heb. the captivity.

6 For I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and I will bring them again to this land: and I will build them, and not pull them down; and I will plant them, and not pluck them up.

---

33. And when this people, &c.] The remaining part of this chapter is directed against those, who called the word of God, spoken by the true Prophets, "a burden," by way of reproach; meaning, that it always portended evil, and never good; a burden signifying a calamitous prophecy. Ahab intended to cast the same slur on the Prophet Micaiah, when he represented him as one that "never prophesied good concerning him, but evil," 1 Kings xxii. 8. Dr. Blayney. The Jews quibbled on the word, which in the original has different senses. See the note on Isai. xiii. 1.

36. —every man's word shall be his burden; &c.] You shall be severely accountable for your loose and profane speeches, wherewith you deride and pervert the words and messages of God Himself. W. Lowth. The words of God were delivered with a salutary tendency to warn sinners of the danger of their situation, and to call them to repentance. Those therefore, who make a right use of them, will have no cause to complain; but those, who despise and reject them, pervert that, which should have been for their wealth, into an occasion of falling. Dr. Blayney.

39. —I will utterly forget you,] Rather, "I will take you up altogether:" "I will carry you away, or remove you," as a burden; with a more striking and pertinent allusion to what was said in the foregoing verses. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

Chap. XXIV. This is one of those prophecies, which were delivered after the reign of Jehoiakim, and in the former or peaceable part of Zedekiah's reign, before he renounced his allegiance to the king of Babylon: of those prophecies the following appears to be the most proper arrangement: chap. xxiv, xxix, xxx, xxxi, xxvii, xxviii.

We cannot be mistaken in placing this chapter at the very beginning of Zedekiah's reign, within the first year at least, since the vision is dated from after the carrying away of Jeconiah and the people with him into captivity, as from an event which happened but a little before.

Under the type of good and bad figs, God representeth to Jeremiah the different manner in which He should deal with the people that were carried away captive, and with those that were left behind; shewing His favour and kindness to the former in their restoration and re-establishment; but pursuing the latter with unrelenting judgments unto utter destruction. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. —two baskets of figs were set before the temple of the Lord,] The vision represented two such baskets of figs, as used to be offered up for firstfruits at the temple. See Deut. xxvi. 2. W. Lowth.

——the carpenters and smiths,] The former is a general name for any handicraftsman, whether working in wood or in metal: it is probable that the latter word means properly the "armourers." And it is reasonable to presume, that the king of Babylon would be solicitous to carry off all these, with intent not only to employ them in his own service, but to prevent the Jews, who were left behind, from furnishing themselves with arms in case of a revolt. Dr. Blayney.

6. —I will build them, and not pull them down;] This may be understood both of the prosperous estate, which God would give them in the land of their captivity, and likewise contains a promise of restoring them and their posterity to their own country, chap. xxix. 10. W. Lowth.

7 And I will give them [b] an heart to know me, that I am the LORD: and they shall be [c] my people, and I will be their God: for they shall return unto me with their whole heart.

8 ¶ And as the evil [d] figs, which cannot be eaten, they are so evil; surely thus saith the LORD, So will I give Zedekiah the king of Judah, and his princes, and the residue of Jerusalem, that remain in this land, and them that dwell in the land of Egypt:

9 And I will deliver them † to [e] be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth for their hurt, to be a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse, in all places whither I shall drive them.

7. And I will give them an heart to know me, &c.] Compare chap. xxix. 12, 13. To these first captives chiefly belong those blessings, which are promised to the Jews upon their return from captivity; such as were the knowledge and fear of God, and grace to live in obedience to His commandments: compare chap. xxx. 22; xxxi. 33; xxxii. 38, 39. These were accomplished in the times after the captivity, when the Jews adhered constantly to their religion, and were very careful not to fall into idolatry. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXV. This chapter seems to come next in succession to chap. xxii, xxiii. It is dated in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, and most probably belonged to the earliest part of that year. For the defeat of the Egyptians at Carchemish, and the subsequent taking of Jerusalem, are both placed in the same year. But from ver. 9, I think it may be concluded, that Nebuchadnezzar had but just entered upon his expedition, and had not yet carried into execution any of those designs, for which God there says He would "send and take" him.

The Prophet reproveth the Jews for their disregard of the Divine calls to repentance, ver. 1—7. He foretelleth their subjugation, together with that of the neighbouring nations, to the king of Babylon for seventy years, and the fall of the Babylonish empire at that period, ver. 8—14. The same is foreshewn under the symbol of the cup of God's wrath, with which Jeremiah is sent, perhaps in a vision, unto all the nations, which are enumerated at large, to make them drink of it to their utter subversion, ver. 15—29. And the like prophecy is the third time repeated in a strain of sublime and poetic imagery, ver. 30 to the end. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. — that was the first year of Nebuchadrezzar] That is, according to the Jewish mode of computing his reign from the time of his being associated with his father in the empire, before he set out on his Syrian expedition. But the Babylonians do not reckon his reign to have begun till two years after, upon his father's death. Dr. Blayney. Daniel, writing in Chaldee, follows the computation in use among the Chaldeans, Dan. ii. 1. W. Lowth.

3. From the thirteenth year of Josiah — unto this day, that is the three and twentieth year,] For Jeremiah prophesied nineteen years under Josiah, who reigned thirty-one years; and this was the beginning of Jehoiakim's fourth year. W. Lowth.

4. — all his servants the prophets,] There were several Prophets contemporary with Jeremiah; two of whom are mentioned in Scripture, the Prophet Zephaniah, and Urijah the son of Shemaiah, concerning whom see chap. xxvi. 20. W. Lowth.

9. — Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, my servant,] Kings and princes are the great instruments of Providence with respect to human affairs. Some of them God raises up to be executioners of His judgments upon sinful people; such was he of whom God saith, Hos. xiii. 11, "I gave thee a king in Mine anger." Such was Nebuchadnezzar here spoken of, whom God calls His "servant," because he "wrought for Him," as God speaks concerning him, Ezek. xxix. 20; that is, he executed God's judgments upon Tyre; God making use of his ambition and desire of conquest, and prospering his arms, in order to the punishment of the neighbouring countries for their sins: see a like instance in the king of Assyria, whom God calls "the rod of His anger," Isai. x. 5. W. Lowth.

Almighty God so orders the devices of men by His overruling providence, as to make them subservient to His everlasting counsels: for "all things serve Him," Ps. cxix. 91. Happy, thrice happy they, that do Him voluntary service; that can say with

[f] Isai. 51. 17. Ps. 75. 8. Job 21. 20.

15 ¶ For thus saith the LORD God of Israel unto me; Take the [f] wine cup of this fury at my hand, and cause all the nations, to whom I send thee, to drink it.

16 And they shall drink, and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them.

17 Then took I the cup at the LORD's hand, and made all the nations to drink, unto whom the LORD had sent me:

David, and in his sense, "Behold, O Lord, how that I am Thy servant," Ps. cxvi. 16; that have devoted themselves faithfully, and accordingly exert their endeavours to do Him true and laudable service, by obeying His revealed will. But certainly, whether they will or not, though they think of nothing less, they shall serve Him to the furthering and accomplishing of His secret will. As we find "My servant David" often, as His servant in one respect, so we sometimes meet with "My servant Nebuchadnezzar," as His servant in the other. Bp. Sanderson.

—— perpetual desolations.] It is a common observation, that the Hebrew word, rendered "perpetual," does not always signify eternity or perpetuity in a strict sense. Here the sense of the word is to be restrained to the period of seventy years, mentioned ver. 11. See the note on chap. xxxii. 40. W. Lowth.

10. — the sound of the milstones, and the light of the candle.] In the East the people grind their corn at break of day; and on going out in a morning, one hears every where the noise of the mill, accompanied with the voice and songs of those that grind. Sir J. Chardin. There is an effecting contrast in the text. Gloomy shall be the silence of the morning, melancholy the shadows of the evening: no cheerful noise to animate the one, no enlivening ray to brighten the darkness of the other. Desolation shall every where reign. Harmer.

—— the light of the candle.] Jeremiah here makes the taking away of the light of the candle, and a total desolation, the same thing. The houses of Egypt at this time are never without lights. Maillet assures us, they burn lamps, not only all the night long, but in all inhabited apartments in a house: and that the poor would rather retrench part of their food than neglect it. Harmer.

11. — shall serve the king of Babylon] That is, Nebuchadnezzar and his successors. The word "king" is elsewhere used collectively for a succession of kings in the same family or kingdom. See the note on Isai. xxiii. 15. W. Lowth.

—— seventy years.] This period of the servitude of the "nations" must be computed from the defeat of the Egyptians at Carchemish, in the same year that this prophecy was given, when Nebuchadnezzar reduced the neighbouring nations of Syria and Palestine, as well as Jerusalem, under his subjection. At the end of seventy years, (see the notes on 2 Kings xxiv. 1; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21; Ezra i. 1,) on the accession of Cyrus, an end was put to the Babylonish monarchy; Babylon itself became a subject and dependent province, and began to experience those Divine visitations, which terminated at length in what is so justly called in the next verse "perpetual desolations." Dr. Blayney.

12. — I will punish the king of Babylon, &c.] God often punishes the persons whom He makes instruments of His vengeance upon others, for those very things which they did by His appointment; because their intent was purely to carry on their own ambitious and cruel purposes, and not to fulfil God's will, or advance His glory. So that the evil they did was altogether their own, and the good that was produced out of it was to be ascribed to God. See a remarkable passage to this purpose relating to Sennacherib, Isai. x. 5—16. W. Lowth.

—— and will make it perpetual desolations.] See the notes on chap. l. 3, &c.

13. — all that is written in this book,] Those prophecies are meant which are to be found all together from chap. xlvi. to li. inclusively; and which the Greek version has introduced in this place. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

14. For many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of them also:] Or, "shall exact service of them," or "make use of their service." Dr. Blayney. Those proud and imperious Chaldees, which held My people in servitude for many years, will I give to be a prey to other great kings and nations, and they shall share their dominions among them. Bp. Hall.

15. — Take the wine cup of this fury at my hand,] Those circumstances which constitute the good and evil of human life are often represented in Scripture as the ingredients of a cup, which God, as Master of a feast, mixes up, and distributes to the several guests as He thinks fit. See Matt. xx. 22; xxvi. 39. Accordingly, by this image of "the cup of the wine of God's wrath," we are to understand those dreadful and afflictive judgments which an incensed God was about to inflict on the objects of His displeasure. And Jeremiah the Prophet, who announced them, is considered as acting the part of a cupbearer, carrying the cup round to those who were appointed to drink of it; the effects of which were to appear in the intoxication, that is, the terrour and astonishment, the confusion and desolation, which should prevail amongst them. See Bp. Lowth's note on Isai. li. 21; and compare Rev. xiv. 10; xvi. 19. Dr. Blayney.

—— cause all the nations, — to drink it.] This must be either a vision, or perhaps only a course of figurative expressions, signifying that Jeremiah was to foretell, that these nations should drink of the cup of God's anger, just as he is said, in chap. i. 10, to be set over nations, to root out, &c.; when the meaning was only to foretell that they should be rooted out. Abp. Secker. See the note on chap. xiii. 4.

16. — be moved, and be mad,] That astonishment, and those unsettled counsels and resolutions, which are here mentioned as the effects of God's judgments, are elsewhere compared to drunkenness: see chap. li. 57; Lament. iv. 21; Isai. xix. 14; Nahum iii. 11; Hab. ii. 16. W. Lowth.

17. Then took I the cup &c.] The Prophet either did this in vision, or else he actually did what is figuratively designed, that is, he publickly denounced the judgments of God severally against these nations. It is most likely that this narrative was either written by the Prophet himself, or dictated by him to Baruch, who wrote for him, after the destruction of Jerusalem, when a compilation was made of all his prophecies: this supposition will account for the words, "as it is this day," found at the close of the 18th verse. Dr. Blayney.

20. And all the mingled people,] Probably a mixture of several nations, who dwelt either upon the coasts of the Mediterranean, or upon those of the Red sea. W. Lowth. Or, the words may be joined with the preceding, and may denote all the foreigners resident in Egypt, who had by intermarriages formed connexions with the Egyptians. In Exod. xii. 38, we read of "a mixed multitude," distinct from the children of Israel, that went up with them out of Egypt. Dr. Blayney.

22. — the kings of the isles which are beyond the sea,] Or rather, "the region by the sea side," as in the margin: meaning the people upon the coast of the Mediterranean sea. The word "island" in the Hebrew signifies any region or country: see the note on Isai. xx. 6. W. Lowth. See also the note on Gen. x. 5.

23. Dedan, and Tema, and Buz,] Dedan was descended from Abraham by Keturah, Gen. xxv. 3. It was probably he that founded the city Dedan, which however in process of time seems to have been annexed to Edom. See chap. xlix. 8; Ezek. xxv. 13. Tema was one of the sons of Ishmael, Gen. xxv. 15; and a city or district called after him was situate near the mountains which separate Arabia from Chaldea. Buz was the brother of Huz, Gen. xxii. 21; and settled most probably in his neighbourhood. Elihu, the most discreet of Job's friends, was a Buzite, Job xxxii. 2. Dr. Blayney.

—— all that are in the utmost corners,] Probably the inhabitants of the peninsula of Arabia. Dr. Blayney. See the note on chap. ix. 26.

24. — the mingled people that dwell in the desert,] Meaning such as inhabited the great desert country lying between Mesopotamia and Palestine. These may have been called "mingled" either from their manner of inhabiting the desert promiscuously, and in common, without any fixed property or abode, but settling for a time where they found pasture, and then removing with their flocks to another place; or else, more probably, from their being made up of people of different descents. Dr. Blayney.

25. — Zimri,] A people of Arabia, descended from Zimran, Abraham's son by Keturah, Gen. xxv. 2. W. Lowth.

—— Elam, and — the Medes,] See the note on chap. xlix. 34. The Medes and Persians were commonly confederates, and partakers of the same good or ill fortune. W. Lowth.

26. — all the kings of the north, far and near,] By the kings of the north that were "near," the kings of Syria were probably meant; see chap. xlix. 23. Those that are "far off" may mean the Hyrcanians and Bactrians, who are reckoned by Xenophon among those, that were subjected or oppressed by the king of Babylon; and perhaps others besides of the neighbouring nations, that were compelled to submit to the Babylonish yoke. All these lay to the north of Judea, and at a great distance. Dr. Blayney.

—— all the kingdoms of the world, &c.] This must be understood with a limitation to that part of the continent which the Jews had any correspondence or acquaintance with; just as "all the world" stands for the whole Roman empire, Luke ii. 1. The ambition of a prince like Nebuchadnezzar, who aimed at universal monarchy, could not help occasioning great distress and confusion, both among those who felt, and among those who dreaded, the power of his arms. Dr. Blayney.

—— and the king of Sheshach shall drink after them.] Sheshach means Babylon, as appears from chap. li. 41. Dr. Blayney. It is thought that Babylon was so called from one of its idols, named Shach, which was worshipped there, and to which a festival was kept for five days together; and that the term is used by way of reproach. It is said that during this festival Cyrus took Babylon. See chap. li. 41. Burder.

28. And it shall be, if they refuse to take the cup &c.] If they either do not believe thy threatenings, or else disregard them, as thinking themselves sufficiently provided against hostile invasion, you shall let them know, that the judgments denounced against them are God's irreversible decree. W. Lowth.

29. For, lo, I begin to bring evil on the city &c.] Judgment often begins at the house of God, for the correction of God's people, and for a warning to others; but the heaviest strokes of it are

IN the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah came this word from the LORD, saying, 610. Ending 609. Beginning.

2 Thus saith the LORD; Stand in the court of the LORD's house, and speak unto all the cities of Judah, which come to worship in the LORD's house, all the words that I command thee to speak unto them; [a] diminish not a word:

30. — The Lord shall roar from on high, &c.] The Lord shall declare from heaven His great fury and indignation against the wicked: He shall roar like a fierce lion, and shout out aloud, and call up the Babylonians to their task of slaughter, as they, that tread the grapes, by their loud cries encourage each other to the work. Bp. Hall.

34. Howl, ye shepherds, &c.] Shepherds are here the same with princes or generals, chap. ii. 8; vi. 3. In pursuance of the same metaphor, by the "principal of the flock" are meant the great and rich men of each nation that is here prophesied against. Of them it is foretold, that they shall "wallow themselves in the ashes," as a token of mourning and lamenting over their misfortunes: see chap. vi. 26. W. Lowth.

—— and ye shall fall like a pleasant vessel.] That is, Ye who are esteemed above the common rank shall undergo the fate of a precious vessel, made of a crystal or gem, which being let fall is shattered to pieces; its original value being no security against such disasters. Dr. Blayney.

38. He hath forsaken his covert, as the lion:] That is, to desolate the land, as a lion forsakes his covert to go in quest of prey. Poole.

Chap. XXVI. This, as well as the preceding chapter, was delivered in the early part of the reign of Jehoiakim. Jeremiah is directed to foretell the destruction of the temple and city of Jerusalem, without a speedy repentance and reformation, ver. 1—6. On this account he is apprehended and accused before the council of a capital offence; he enters on his defence, and is acquitted; his advocates urging the precedent of Micah in the reign of Hezekiah, ver. 7—19. But from a contrary precedent it appears, that his life would have been in great danger, had he not met with a powerful protector. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 2. — Stand in the court of the Lord's house,] The great court was the place, where both men and women ordinarily worshipped when they brought no sacrifice: for when they offered a sacrifice, they were to bring it into the inner court, otherwise called the court of Israel, or of the priests. Dr. Lightfoot.

—— unto all the cities of Judah,] This was probably at the feast of tabernacles, when all the males were obliged to appear before the Lord. Abp. Usher. It is evident that "the cities" here are put for their inhabitants. Dr. Blayney.

6. — like Shiloh,] See the note on chap. vii. 12.

—— and will make this city a curse &c.] Men shall use this phrase as a form of execration, God make thee like Jerusalem; compare chap. xxiv. 9: on the contrary, to make one a blessing implies that his name should be mentioned as a signal instance of God's favour. *W. The Septuagint rightly understand the word of the false prophets, such as was Hananiah, mentioned chap. xxviii. Compare chap. xxix. 1; xxxvii. 19. So the word "prophet" is taken, Hos. ix. 8. W. Lowth.

—— in the house of the Lord.] That is, in the court before the house of the Lord, ver. 2; compare chap. vii. 10. The outer courts being holy ground, and dedicated to God's worship, are called by the name of the temple. So the treasury, where Christ preached, is called "the temple," John viii. 20; though it stood in the outer court of the temple. St. Paul is said to have entered "into the temple," that is, into the court before the temple, and the Jews to have laid hold on him there, Acts xxi. 26, 27. W. Lowth.

10. — the princes of Judah] These are the same who are called "the elders of the land," ver. 17. The king's counsellors, or chief officers of state, who were likewise members of the great Sanhedrim. It is uncertain when the great council, called the Sanhedrim, was instituted. Selden, and most other writers from the Jewish authors, date the rise of it from Moses's appointing the seventy elders, Numb. xi. 16. After several intermissions of the authority, which was sometimes laid aside by the calamities or corruptions of the times, or else superseded by that sovereign power, which was invested in the judges and kings, Jehoshaphat, when he set about a general reformation, restored this ancient tribunal: see 2 Chron. xix. 8. This being the supreme court of the nation, the persons that sat in it are called here the "princes of Judah;" compare chap. xxix. 2; xxxiv. 19; and "the elders of the land," ver. 17 of this chapter; and the "elders of the people," chap. xix. 1, and by the Evangelists; see Matt. xxvii. 1; Luke xxii. 66; and "the senate of the children of Israel," Acts v. 21. The same are probably meant by the "seventy men of the ancients of the house of Israel," mentioned Ezek. viii. 11. The word Sanhedrim is without doubt of Greek original, derived from a word, which in the Greek Testament often signifies this great council; and from thence is adopted into the Jewish language, by Rabbinical writers, as many other Greek words are; but the council may still have been of much more ancient date, and expressed in the Old Testament by "rulers, princes, or elders, or the senate of the people." W. Lowth.

—— sat down in the entry of the new gate &c.] They sat down in that new gate of the temple, which king Jotham had built, to appease the tumult, and to hear the cause of Jeremiah. Bp. Hall.

14. As for me, behold, I am in your hand: &c.] Compare chap. xxxviii. 5. It was the proper business of the Sanhedrim to pass sentence upon prophets; and, if they found them guilty of making false pretences to prophecy, to put them to death, the punishment which the law had provided in that case, Deut. xviii. 20. W. Lowth.

18. — Zion shall be plowed like a field, &c.] See the note on Mic. iii. 12.

20. And there was also a man that prophesied &c.] According to the opinion of many commentators, the words that follow may be ascribed to an opposite party, who, by a contrary precedent to the foregoing, urged the condemnation of Jeremiah. But it is more probable that the elders concluded their speeches, ver. 19; and that the writer of the narrative goes on to observe in his own person, that, notwithstanding the precedent of Micah, there had been a later precedent in the present reign, which might have operated very unfavourably to Jeremiah, but for the influence

CHAP. XXVII.

1 Under the type of bonds and yokes he prophesieth the subduing of the neighbour kings unto Nebuchadnezzar. 8 He exhorteth them to yield, and not to believe the false prophets. 12 The like he doeth to Zedekiah. 19 He foretelleth, the remnant of the vessels shall be carried to Babylon, and there continue until the day of visitation.

Before CHRIST about 598.

IN the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah came this word unto Jeremiah from the LORD, saying, about 598.

2 Thus saith the LORD to me; Make thee bonds and yokes, and put them upon thy neck,

3 And send them to the king of Edom, and to the king of Moab, and to the king of the Ammonites, and to the king of Tyrus, and to the king of Zidon, by the hand of the messengers which come to Jerusalem unto Zedekiah king of Judah;

4 And command them ‖ to say unto their masters, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Thus shall ye say unto your masters;

‖ Or, concerning their masters, saying.

5 I have made the earth, the man and the beast that are upon the ground, by my great power and by my outstretched arm, and authority of Ahikam, which were exerted to save him. Dr. Blayney.

---

23.—cast his dead body into the graves of the common people.] Or, "the sons of the people," as in the margin: by whom are meant the populace of the lowest order, who are buried in a publick place of burial, having no distinct sepulchre to themselves, as all persons of rank and character, and especially of so honourable an order as that of the Prophets, used to have. But the king's design was to brand his memory as far as he could by such an ignominious treatment of his remains. Dr. Blayney.

24. Nevertheless the hand of Ahikam &c.] Both he and his father Shaphan were chief ministers under Josiah, 2 Kings xxii. 12, 14. And the brothers of Ahikam, Gemariah, Elasah, and Jaazaniah, were considerable men in those days with Ahikam, and members of the great council, chap. xxix. 3; Ezek. viii. 11. So Ahikam made use of his interest with them to deliver Jeremiah from the danger that threatened him. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXVII. It is evident (see the note on ver. 1.) that the prophecies, contained both in this and the following chapter, belong to the fourth year of Zedekiah's reign. About this time ambassadours came to Zedekiah from the kings of Edom, Moab, and other neighbouring nations, to solicit him, as it should seem, to join with them in a confederacy against the king of Babylon. On this occasion Jeremiah is ordered to put bands and yokes about his neck, and to send them afterwards to the beforementioned kings, declaring the sovereignty of Nebuchadnezzar and his successors to be of Divine appointment, and promising peace and protection to those who submitted quietly, but menacing evil in case of resistance, ver. 1—11. A like admonition is delivered to Zedekiah, advising him not to expose himself and his people to certain ruin by listening to the suggestions of false prophets, and revolting from the service of the king of Babylon, ver. 12—15. The priests and all the people are also warned not to give credit to the false prophets, who taught them to expect a speedy restoration of the vessels, which had been carried away to Babylon together with Jeconiah. Instead of which it is foretold, that the remaining vessels in the house of God, and in the king's house at Jerusalem, should be carried after the other, and should not be brought back till the appointed time of Judah's captivity was at an end, ver. 16 to the end. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1.—Jehoiakim] There is a difficulty in the date of this prophecy, because it plainly relates to the times of Zedekiah: see ver. 3, 12, 16. The least forced way of solving the difficulty is to say, that Jehoiakim is crept into the text instead of Zedekiah, by the negligence of the scribes, who might have their eyes upon the beginning of the last chapter or section. This emendation is confirmed by comparing this verse with the 3d, 12th, and 20th of this chapter, and with the beginning of the next. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

2.—Make thee bonds and yokes, &c.] The Prophets foreshewed things by actions as well as by words. So Isaiah went "naked and barefoot," Isai. xx. 3. Ezekiel prophesied in like manner by signs, chap. iv. 1, &c.; xii. 3; xxiv. 17—19. W. Lowth. And even in the New Testament we have a similar instance in the case of Agabus, Acts xxi. 11. Dr. Waterland. See note on Gen. xxxii. 25.

St. Jerome is of opinion, that the second term signifies wooden forks, or collars, such as criminals were sometimes forced to wear. This fork was fastened on their neck, and their arms were bound to it. Slaves were often treated in this manner. Thus Jeremiah, laden with this sort of "yoke," represented in a very lively manner the servitude of the nations under Nebuchadnezzar. Calmet.

3. And send them to the king of Edom, &c.] Jeremiah probably made several yokes, and put one of them upon his own neck, when he delivered his errand: and his so delivering his prophecy was "sending the yokes" to the princes mentioned: for we cannot reasonably suppose, that the ambassadours took the yokes at his hands, and carried them to their respective masters. Deluded as they were by the blandishments of their diviners, (ver. 9,) it is not to be supposed that they would have either chosen, or dared, to carry to their masters the yokes presented to them by Jeremiah. God revealed His design to the Prophet in such figurative, metaphorical language; and the Prophet reported the same as he had received it: these affecting images making the message more awful and solemn in the delivery, and giving it the advantage of a deeper and more durable impression. Dr. Waterland.

——the messengers which come to Jerusalem unto Zedekiah] Ambassadours, who came from the kings before mentioned, either to congratulate Zedekiah on his accession to the throne, or to engage him in a confederacy against the king of Babylon. W. Lowth.

AND it came to pass the same year, in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the fourth year, and in the fifth month, that Hananiah the son of Azur the prophet, which was of Gibeon, spake unto me in the house of the LORD, in the presence of the priests and of all the people, saying,

2 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, I have broken the yoke of the king of Babylon.

† Heb. two years of days. 3 Within † two full years will I bring again into this place all the vessels of the LORD's house, that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took away from this place, and carried them to Babylon:

4 And I will bring again to this place Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, with all the † captives of Judah, that went into Babylon, saith the LORD: for I will break the yoke of the king of Babylon.

5 ¶ Then the prophet Jeremiah said unto the prophet Hananiah in the presence of the priests, and in the presence of all the people that stood in the house of the LORD,

6 Even the prophet Jeremiah said, Amen: the LORD do so: the LORD perform thy words which thou hast prophesied, to bring again the vessels of the Lord's house, and all that is carried away captive, from Babylon into this place.

7 Nevertheless hear thou now this word that I speak in thine ears, and in the ears of all the people;

8 The prophets that have been before me and before thee of old prophesied both against many countries, and against great kingdoms, of war, and of evil, and of pestilence. Before CHRIST about 596.

9 The prophet which prophesieth of peace, when the word of the prophet shall come to pass, then shall the prophet be known, that the LORD hath truly sent him.

10 ¶ Then Hananiah the prophet took the [a] yoke from off the prophet Jeremiah's neck, and brake it. [a] Chap. 27. 2.

11 And Hananiah spake in the presence of all the people, saying, Thus saith the LORD; Even so will I break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon from the neck of all nations within the space of two full years. And the prophet Jeremiah went his way.

12 ¶ Then the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah the prophet, after that Hananiah the prophet had broken the yoke from off the neck of the prophet Jeremiah, saying, 13 Go and tell Hananiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD; Thou hast broken the yokes of wood; but thou shalt make for them yokes of iron.

14 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; I have put a yoke of iron upon the neck of all these nations, that they may serve Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; and they shall serve him: and I have given him the beasts of the field also.

15 ¶ Then said the prophet Jeremiah unto Hananiah the prophet, Hear now, Hananiah; The LORD hath not sent thee; but thou makest this people to trust in a lie.

16 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Behold, I will cast thee from off the face of the earth: this year thou shalt die, because thou hast taught [b] † rebellion against the LORD. [b] Deut. 13. 5. ch. 29. 32. † Heb. revolt.

17 So Hananiah the prophet died the same year in the seventh month. about 595.

Chap. XXVIII. ver. 1. — the same year, in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah] This plainly refers to the time specified at the beginning of the last chapter, and confirms the conjecture there made, that Jehoiakim is put there by a mistake of the copies for Zedekiah. W. Lowth.

"The fourth year" may be called "the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah," not absolutely, but with reference to the middle and latter parts of it. Dr. Blayney.

2. — I have broken the yoke of the king of Babylon.] I will deliver and free My people from the captivity and bondage of the king of Babylon. Bp. Hall.

5. — the prophet Hananiah] In what sense Hananiah was a prophet, see the note on chap. xxvi. 7. Dr. Blayney.

6. Even the prophet Jeremiah said, Amen: &c.] Thereby expressing his hearty concern for the good of his nation, and wishing that God would repent Him of the evil, wherewith He had threatened them by Jeremiah's ministry. W. Lowth.

13. — yokes of iron.] This emblem of national slavery is not unexampled in Scripture. Moses threatens the Hebrews on the part of God, to give them up to their enemies, who shall put on them "a yoke of iron," Deut. xxviii. 48. Calmet.

16. — this year thou shalt die,] As Hananiah limited the accomplishment of his prophecy to two years, to gain credit with the people by such a punctual prediction; so Jeremiah confines the trial of his veracity to a much shorter time. The event exactly corresponding to the prophecy, evidently shewed the falsehood of Hananiah's pretences. W. Lowth.

—— because thou hast taught rebellion against the Lord.] Thou hast taught the people to disbelieve His word, and to act contrary to His decrees. W. Lowth. See note on Chap. xxix. 22.

CHAP. XXIX.

Before CHRIST about 599.

1 Jeremiah sendeth a letter to the captives in Babylon, to be quiet there, 8 and not to believe the dreams of their prophets, 10 and that they shall return with grace after seventy years. 15 He foretelleth the destruction of the rest for their disobedience. 20 He sheweth the fearful end of Ahab and Zedekiah, two lying prophets. 24 Shemaiah writeth a letter against Jeremiah. 30 Jeremiah readeth his doom.

about 599. NOW these are the words of the letter that Jeremiah the prophet sent from Jerusalem unto the residue of the elders which were carried away captives, and to the priests, and to the prophets, and to all the people whom Nebuchadnezzar had carried away captive from Jerusalem to Babylon;

Chap. XXIX. According to the proper arrangement, this chapter appears to follow the 24th; being the second of those which were delivered in the early part of Zedekiah's reign. See the note at the beginning of chap. xxiv.

Some embarrassment and incoherence are to be perceived in particular parts of this chapter, which are removed by transposing ver. 15, and placing it immediately before ver. 21, where it stands in the version of the Septuagint. By this emendation a due order and connexion is restored, both in the place from whence the verse is removed, and in that to which it is restored.

This chapter contains the substance of two letters written at different times, as is evident from comparing ver. 28 with ver. 4, 5; although the title at the beginning announces only one, and there is no mark of distinction to be found afterwards. The distinction however is certainly to be made at the end of ver. 20. For in the first letter the Prophet exhorts the captives to accommodate themselves to their present circumstances, under an assurance that their captivity would last to the end of seventy years; after which period, and not before, God would visit and restore them. And, to prevent their listening to any false suggestions that might flatter them with hopes of a speedy return, he informs them of what would happen to their brethren that were left behind at Jerusalem, for whom a harder fate was reserved, than for those that had been carried away. After this, finding, as it should seem, upon the return of the messengers, the little credit his first message had met with, he sends a second to the same persons, denouncing the Divine judgments against three of their false prophets, by whose influence chiefly the people had been prevented from hearkening to his good advice. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. — to the prophets,] Ezekiel and Daniel were then in captivity; Daniel in Babylon, and Ezekiel in Mesopotamia, on the river Chebar. Ezekiel did not begin prophesying till the fifth year of the captivity of Jeconiah; but Daniel was already acknowledged as a Prophet of the Lord. There were probably other Prophets also in that country, to whom Jeremiah addresses this letter; nor is it at all singular, that one Prophet should advise and instruct others. David received instructions from Nathan: and St. Peter informs us, that the Prophets applied themselves to the study of the writings of the more ancient Prophets. Daniel read and studied Jeremiah. The Chaldee under the name of "Prophets" understands the scribes, or doctors of the law: the Seventy translate the Hebrew by "false prophets." Calmet.

2. — and the queen,] By "the queen" is meant Jeconiah's mother: see 2 Kings xxiv. 12, 14, 15; where an account is given of this captivity: and compare chap. xxii. 26; xxvii. 10; xxviii. 4, of this prophecy. W. Lowth.

—— the eunuchs,] The officers belonging to the court. W. Lowth.

3. — (whom Zedekiah — sent unto Babylon to Nebuchadnezzar] To renew his promises of fidelity to him: see the note on chap. xxvii. 12. W. Lowth.

5. Build ye houses, and dwell in them;] Establish yourselves in Babylon, as in a place where ye shall abide a long time. Look upon it as your country. The Lord, meaning to point out to the Jews, that in a short time they should be carried away from their own land, told Jeremiah not to marry, nor to form any settlement in the land, chap. xvi. 2. Jonadab, the son of Rechab, commanded his posterity not to build houses, nor to cultivate fields, but to dwell all their life in tents, in order to denote a more complete estrangement from the things of the earth. On the contrary, to prove to the Jews of the captivity, that their banishment should be of long duration, they are told to build houses, to acquire possessions, to form marriages, in a word, to establish themselves at Babylon. Calmet.

7. — seek the peace of the city &c.] This shews us, that God would have us live in submission to the kings, under whose government we are placed, and pray for the prosperity of their dominions. Ostervald.

8. — neither hearken to your dreams which ye cause to be dreamed.] The passage should rather be rendered, "Neither hearken to your dreamers, or dealers in dreams, whom ye cause to dream:" the original word is used for persons that dream, chap. xxvii. 9, and should be taken in the same sense here. These dreamers might be said to be made, or encouraged, to dream by the easy credit given to their impostures, and the reputation and respect they thereby acquired. Dr. Blayney.

10. — after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon] This prophecy was first delivered in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, and 11 For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the LORD, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an † expected end.

15 ¶ Because ye have said, The LORD hath raised us up prophets in Babylon;

16 Know that thus saith the LORD of the king that sitteth upon the throne of David, and of all the people that dwelleth in this city, and of your brethren that are not gone forth with you into captivity;

17 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Behold, I will send upon them the [e] sword, the famine, and the pestilence, and will make them like [f] vile figs, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

20 ¶ Hear ye therefore the word of the LORD, all ye of the captivity, whom I have sent from Jerusalem to Babylon:

21 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, of Ahab the son of Kolaiah, and of Zedekiah the son of Maaseiah, which prophesy a lie unto you in my name; Behold, I will deliver them into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; and he shall slay them before your eyes;

22 And of them shall be taken up a curse by all the captivity of Judah which are in Babylon, saying, The LORD make thee like Zedekiah and like Ahab, whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire;

23 Because they have committed villany in Israel, and have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives, and have spoken lying words in my name, which I have not commanded them; even I know, and am a witness, saith the LORD.

24 ¶ Thus shalt thou also speak to Shemaiah the ‖ Nehelamite, saying, 598.

25 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, Because thou hast sent letters in thy name unto all the people that are at Jerusalem, and to Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, and to all the priests, saying, the same year it began to be put in execution: seventy years from which time will bring us down to the first year of Cyrus, when he made proclamation for the restoration of the Jews, and the rebuilding of the temple at Jerusalem. (See the note on chap. xxv. 11.) This computation of the seventy years' captivity appears the truest and most agreeable to Scripture. But if we fix the commencement of the seventy years at the time when Jerusalem was burnt and destroyed, their conclusion will fall about the time when Darius issued his decree for rebuilding the temple, after the work had been suspended. Or if we fix their commencement at the time when Nebuzar-adan carried away the last remainder of the people, and completed the desolation of the land, their conclusion will fall about the time when the temple was finished and dedicated, and the first passover was solemnized in it. "So that," as Dean Prideaux says, "taking it which way you will, and at what stage you please, the prophecy of Jeremiah will be fully and exactly accomplished concerning this matter." It may be said to have been accomplished at three different times, and in three different manners; and therefore, possibly, all might have been intended, though the first, without doubt, was the principal object of the prophecy. Bp. Newton.

—— I will visit you,] There were but few of these captives, in comparison, who returned in person to their own country: see Ezra iii. 12. So this promise was chiefly fulfilled in their posterity; and it is common in Scripture to speak of blessings bestowed upon the children, as if they had been actually made good to their progenitors. See chap. xxxii. 5; and Exod. vi. 4; Mic. vii. 20. W. Lowth.

11. For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, &c.] I know what I have decreed concerning you; even favour and deliverance in My appointed time, and not extirpation and destruction: so that ye shall at the last have that happy issue which ye desire and expect. Bp. Hall.

16. Know that thus saith the Lord &c.] The many and grievous calamities which were to fall upon those who were left in their own land, are here noticed by the Prophet as affording a fresh argument to those of the captivity for composing themselves to that quietness and peace which he recommended, considering the comparatively easier lot which Providence had assigned to them. Dr. Blayney.

23.—have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives,] The Jewish rabbies, as Grotius here observes, have a traditionary notion, that these were the two elders who attempted the chastity of Susannah: the story of which they think to be true in part, though not altogether such as is represented in one of the books of the Apocrypha. Dr. Blayney, W. Lowth.

—— I know, and am a witness,] That is, I am not an inattentive witness of such enormities. Dr. Blayney.

24.—the Nehelamite,] We find such a place as Helam mentioned in 2 Sam. x. 16, 17. Dr. Blayney.

28 For therefore he sent unto us in Babylon, saying, This captivity is long: build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them.

29 And Zephaniah the priest read this letter in the ears of Jeremiah the prophet.

30 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah, saying,

31 Send to all them of the captivity, saying, Thus saith the LORD concerning Shemaiah the Nehelamite; Because that Shemaiah hath prophesied unto you, and I sent him not, and he caused you to trust in a lie:

32 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Behold, I will punish Shemaiah the Nehelamite, and his seed: he shall not have a man to dwell among this people; neither shall he behold the good that I will do for my people, saith the LORD; [i] because he hath taught † rebellion against the LORD.

1 God sheweth Jeremiah the return of the Jews. 4 After their trouble they shall have deliverance. 10 He comforteth Jacob. 18 Their return shall be gracious. 20 Wrath shall fall on the wicked.

THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Thus speaketh the LORD God of Israel, saying, Write thee all the words that I have spoken unto thee in a book.

3 For, lo, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the LORD: and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it.

4 ¶ And these are the words that the LORD spake concerning Israel and concerning Judah.

5 For thus saith the LORD; We have heard a voice of trembling, ‖ of fear, and not of peace.

‖ Or, there is fear, and not peace.

second priest, when Jerusalem was taken, chap. lii. 24. Who then was Jehoiada? perhaps he was one that had been superseded in his office of second priest for being remiss in his duty; and therefore Zephaniah may have been reminded of him by way of intimation, that, as they had been both appointed for the same purposes, so Zephaniah might expect the same fate as his predecessor, if he copied the example of his negligence. The second priest officiated as substitute of the high priest, in case of absence or indisposition, and perhaps was always invested with subordinate authority. Dr. Blayney.

——for every man that is mad, and maketh himself a prophet,] For every one that in a frantick humour takes upon him to be a prophet, and delivers his own distracted fancies for visions from God. Bp. Hall. See notes on chap. xx. 1, 2.

28. For therefore he sent unto us &c.] Or, "because he sent unto us," &c. W. Lowth.

32. — he shall not have a man to dwell among this people; &c.] None of his posterity shall remain to see My people restored again to their own land. W. Lowth.

—— rebellion] The original word properly signifies a declining or turning aside from the straight path, the path of truth and right. Here, and in chap. xxviii. 16, it means the presumption of uttering as a revelation from God what a man knew not to be so. Dr. Blayney.

Chap. XXX. There is no particular date annexed to this prophecy, whereby to ascertain the precise time of its delivery. But it may not be unreasonably presumed to have followed immediately after the preceding one, in which the restoration of the people from the Babylonish captivity is in direct terms foretold. From hence the transition is natural and easy to the more glorious and general restoration, that was to take place in a more distant period, and was designed for the ultimate object of the national hopes and expectations.

Both events are frequently thus connected together in the prophetick writings, and perhaps with this design, that when that, which was nearest at hand, should be accomplished, it might afford the strongest and most satisfactory kind of evidence; that the latter, how remote soever its period, would in like manner be brought about by the interposition of Providence in its due season. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 6. Ask ye now, and see whether a man &c.] All men seem to carry that concern in their looks, and discover such an uneasiness in their behaviour, under the apprehension of approaching evils, as women do when the time of their travail draweth near. Compare chap. vi. 24; and Nahum ii. 10. W. Lowth.

8. — I will break his yoke from off thy neck,] Rather, "I will break his yoke from off his neck, and will burst his bonds:" for the yoke and the bonds of Jacob are spoken of; there being no other person spoken of in the sentence, nor is Jacob directly addressed till afterwards in ver. 10. Dr. Blayney.

9. — David their king,] That is, the Messiah, who is often called by the name of David in the Prophets, as the Person, in whom all the promises made to David were to be fulfilled. See Isaiah lv. 3, 4; Ezek. xxxiv. 23; xxxvii. 24; Hos. iii. 5. W. Lowth.

servant Jacob, saith the LORD; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid.

11 For I am with thee, saith the LORD, to save thee: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee: but I will correct thee [d] in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished.

19 And out of them shall proceed thanksgiving and the voice of them that make merry: and I will multiply them, and they shall not be few; I will also glorify them, and they shall not be small.

20 Their children also shall be as aforetime, and their congregation shall be established before me, and I will punish all that oppress them.

21 And their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governor shall proceed from the midst of them; and I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach

11. — though I make a full end of all nations, — yet will I not make a full end of thee:] We have here ocular proof of prophecy accomplished in an instance without a parallel. It was repeatedly foretold, both in the Old and New Testament, that, for the rejection and murder of their Messiah, the Jews should be dispersed into all countries; yet that they should not be swallowed up and lost among their conquerors, but should still subsist, to latest times, a distinct people. By Jeremiah God declared, "He would make an end of the nations," their oppressors, "but He would not make an end of them." It cannot be said this prediction was written since the event: and certainly an occurrence more singular, or improbable, could not have been predicted. In the course of human affairs, who hath heard such a thing? Yet, so it is. The mighty monarchies of Assyria, Persia, Greece, and Rome, are vanished like the shadows of the evening, or the phantoms of the night. Their places know them no more. Nothing remains of them but their names: whilst this little despised people, strangely secure, without a friend or protector, amidst the wreck of empires, oppressed, persecuted, harassed always, by edicts and executioners, by murders and massacres, hath outlived the very ruins of them all. "Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe." Behold then a sign and a wonder: the accomplishment of prophecy in a standing miracle. Contemplate the sight as it deserves; and be not faithless, but believing. Bp. Horne. See the note on Deut. xxx. 1.

—— and will not leave thee altogether unpunished.] Some render this clause, "and will not utterly destroy thee." This sense both suits very well with the present passage, and also agrees with the scope of those two texts in the Pentateuch, where we first find it, Exod. xxxiv. 7, and Numb. xiv. 18, much better than the common translation.

The sense, here given by our translators, agrees very well with the context of some other places, where the phrase is used: as particularly, chap. xxv. 29; xlix. 12; Nahum i. 3. W. Lowth.

12. — thy bruise is incurable,] Thy affliction, in regard of any human help, is utterly remediless. Bp. Hall.

14. — with the wound of an enemy,] With such severity, that it looks like cruelty, and as if I had declared Myself an utter enemy to thee. W. Lowth.

15. Why criest thou for thine affliction?] Why shouldest thou expostulate with Me, as if I had dealt unjustly with thee? If thy condition seems desperate, it is due to thine own iniquities, which have still been increased with new aggravations of guilt. W. Lowth.

16. Therefore] Rather, "yet surely," or "afterwards." See the note on chap. xvi. 14. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

17. — because they called thee an Outcast, &c.] Because they have insulted upon thy misery, and despised thee, as an outcast and forlorn people, saying, This is that goodly hill of Zion; once the pride, now the scorn of the world. Bp. Hall.

18. — the city shall be builded upon her own heap, &c.] Or "Hill," as in the margin, as that part of Jerusalem particularly was, which was called mount Zion. There was generally a castle or citadel in the middle of the ancient cities on a rising ground, for greater strength and security. See Josh. xi. 13. W. Lowth.

By "the city" Jerusalem is commonly understood, and by "the palace," either the temple or the king's house. Probably they are designed not for any particular city or palace, but for the cities and palaces of Jacob in general. Nouns in the singular number are often thus used. Dr. Blayney.

21. — their nobles shall be of themselves,] Or, "his prince shall be of his own race:" the meaning is plain, that they should not be governed by foreigners, but by those of their own nation and family. Dr. Blayney.

The Hebrew word is in the singular number, and literally signifies their "mighty one;" a title given to God Himself, Ps. xciii. 4; and to a mighty angel, Isai. x. 34; probably the WORD, or Son of God. The sense is, they shall no more be governed by strangers, but shall have a ruler of their own nation: such was Zorobabel, a figure of Christ. W. Lowth.

as a king, according to that prophecy concerning the Messiah, Ps. cx. 4. This phrase of "coming," or "drawing near to God," is particularly applied to the office of the Priests and Levites, Numb. xvi. 5. W. Lowth.

——for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me?] For who is there but the Messiah, that is so entirely devoted to My service? See Ps. xl. 8; John iv. 34; xiv. 31. W. Lowth.

24. — in the latter days] "The latter" or "last days," may signify in general the time to come: and so perhaps it is to be understood, Gen. xlix. 1; Deut. iv. 30; xxxi. 29: but it commonly signifies the times under the Gospel, as being the last dispensation, and such as should continue to the end of the world. W. Lowth.

Chap. XXXI. ver. 2. — in the wilderness;] Though God, on the passage of the Israelites from Egypt, cut off many of them by the sword for their iniquities; some by the Amalekites, Exod. xvii. 8; some by the hands of their brethren, Exod. xxxii. 28; yet the survivors found grace, and were conducted by Him into the land of rest. God here parallels His future gracious purposes with His former merciful providences. Poole.

3. The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, &c.] These words are spoken in the person of the Jewish nation. W. Lowth.

They acknowledged God's mercies in former times, that the Lord had indeed appeared of old unto her, but that now she seemed to be forgotten and despised. Wogan.

4. Again I will build thee, &c.] O Jerusalem, thou shalt be built again, and shalt have again minstrelsy and mirth within thy walls. O My Church, thou shalt be happily restored, and filled with true spiritual joy. Bp. Hall.

——thou shalt again be adorned with thy tabrets,] That it was usual for the women of Israel to go forth with tabrets and dancing in times of publick rejoicing and festivity, see Exod. xv. 20; Judg. xi. 34; 1 Sam. xviii. 6. These times were now to be renewed. Dr. Blayney.

5. — plant vines upon the mountains of Samaria:] The mountains of Samaria were productive of good wines, as we see in the history of Abimelech, Judg. ix. 27, and in the reproofs which the Prophets frequently address to the men of Ephraim, for being too much addicted to wine, Isai. xxviii. 1; Hos. x. 1, &c. Josephus and later travellers confirm the fact. Calmet.

——shall eat them as common things.] After they have planted them, they shall eat the fruits thereof; according to the promise contained in the parallel texts, Isai. lxv. 21; Amos ix. 14: whereas God had threatened them as a curse, that when they had planted their vines, another should eat of the fruit, Deut. xxviii. 30. The original verb, translated, "eat them as common things," alludes to that law, that forbade the fruit of any young trees to be eaten till the fifth year of their bearing, when the fruit was lawful or "common" for every one to eat: see the margin of the Bible upon Deut. xx. 6; xxviii. 30. W. Lowth.

7. — the chief of the nations:] This term appears to be synonymous with Jacob or Israel, who, being the peculiar people of God, was thereby exalted to a pre-eminence above other nations. The privileges of primogeniture are asserted to belong to him, ver. 9; which is equivalent to calling him "the chief or head of the nations;" the firstborn being commonly entitled to the rank of chief, or head, among many brethren, Rom. viii. 29. Dr. Blayney.

8. — the blind and the lame, &c.] God will conduct them with all imaginable tenderness, and furnish the most feeble and indigent with suitable accommodations. W. Lowth.

9. They shall come with weeping, &c.] Implying, that the Jews at the time of their general restoration shall have their joy tempered with tears of repentance for their former miscarriages. The same thing is more fully expressed, Zech. xii. 10, where God promises to "pour upon them the spirit of grace and of supplications." W. Lowth.

An emblem of that redemption which Christ will obtain for us by vanquishing the devil, called the "strong man" in Scripture. See Matt. xii. 29; Luke xi. 21, 22. W. Lowth.

12. Therefore they shall come and sing &c.] There shall they come and sing in the great congregation and most eminent assemblies; and shall meet cheerfully together, to enjoy the holy things of God, His word and sacraments; and their soul shall be refreshed as a new watered garden in a drought; and they shall have no more cause of dejection and hopeless sorrow. Bp. Hall. Spiritual blessings are elsewhere described under the emblems of fruitfulness and plenty; and the grace of God is often compared to waters that refresh and enrich a dry ground. See Isai. iv. 2; lviii. 11; xliv. 3. W. Lowth.

——for wheat, and for wine, &c.] The land of Canaan is every where described, as "a land flowing with milk and honey, a land of wheat, vines, and milk." The Prophets therefore, to give an idea of their new state, represent it as another Canaan, such as Canaan was painted to the Jews, at their coming out of Egypt. Bp. Chandler.

15. —A voice was heard in Ramah, &c.] Ramah was a city of Benjamin, near which Rachel, the mother of Joseph and Benjamin, was buried: who is here, in a beautiful figure of poetry, represented as come forth out of her grave, and lamenting bitterly for the loss of her children, none of whom presented themselves to her view, being all either slain or gone into exile. The Evangelist applies these words to Herod's massacre of the infants at Bethlehem, and in its environs, Matt. ii. 17, 18. Dr. Blayney.

—— because they were not.] An expression denoting those who were dead, Gen. xlii. 13; Lam. v. 7. This was literally the case, according to St. Matthew's application of the text; but only metaphorically so in the sense first intended: being spoken of those, who were removed into a foreign country, and for ever deprived of the conversation of their relations, as if they were naturally dead. W. Lowth.

16. —for thy work shall be rewarded,] That is, thou shalt not bring forth children in vain, nor shalt thou be deprived of that satisfaction in seeing the welfare of thy children, which is the parent's reward for her care and attention in bringing them into the world, and providing for their support and education. "They shall come again from the land of the enemy." Dr. Blayney.

The words of the Prophet, or rather those of the Almighty, in this consolatory address to Rachel, were in the fullest import made good to her. Within seventy years it came to pass, that the posterity of Benjamin returned, with Judah, into the land of promise, and inhabited Jerusalem, Bethlehem, and other bordering cities, promiscuously with the royal tribe. "Her work was rewarded:" her patient expectation, in faith and hope, of the promises made her, failed not of its fruit in the appointed season: her "children came again from the land of the enemy to their own border," as the Lord had foretold by His Prophet; they "returned, and came to Zion with songs; joy was upon their heads," and in their hearts; "and sorrow and sighing flew away." Bp. Horne.

18. I have surely heard Ephraim &c.] I have heard those of the ten tribes bemoaning themselves, after their captivity, thus: Thou hast afflicted me, O Lord, and I am humbled; I was as a wild young bullock, unaccustomed to the yoke: but now Thou hast caused me to stoop unto it. Bp. Hall.

——turn thou me, and I shall be turned;] Do Thou turn my heart by Thy preventing grace, and then I shall be effectually reformed: compare Lam. v. 21. Sometimes the Scripture ascribes the whole work of man's conversion to God, because His grace is the first and principal cause of it. But yet to make it effectual, man's concurrence is necessary, as appears from those words (chap. li. 9.) of this prophecy, where God saith, "We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed;" that is, God did what was requisite on His part for her conversion, but she refused to comply with His call. To the same purpose He speaks to Jerusalem, Ezek. xxiv. 13, "I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged." W. Lowth.

19. —I smote upon my thigh:] "Smiting upon the thigh" was an indication of extreme astonishment and sorrow. See Ezek. xxi. 12. So also it is represented by many heathen authors. Calmet.

——because I did bear the reproach of my youth.] The burden of my former sins lay heavy upon my mind, and I became sensible, that all the calamities and reproaches which I have undergone were the due deserts of my offences. The Prophet, representing the whole nation as a single person, speaks of their former sins, as if they were the extravagancies of their younger years. W. Lowth.

20. Is Ephraim my dear son? &c.] Rather the sense is, "Is not Ephraim My dear son? Is he not a pleasant child?" That is, Is he not one that I have set My affections upon, as a parent does pleasant child? for since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still: therefore my bowels † are troubled for him; I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the LORD.

upon a child in whom he delights? God proceeds to say, Ever since I have so severely reproved and chastised him, I have still retained for him a fatherly kindness; I am moved with compassion towards him, and will in due time pardon and receive him into favour. W. Lowth.

21 Set thee up waymarks, &c.] These words are a call to Israel to prepare for their return. The "waymarks" and "high heaps," are stone pillars and tall poles set up in the roads at certain distances for the traveller's direction, and extremely necessary for those who have to pass wild and spacious deserts. Dr. Blayney.

22. How long wilt thou go about, &c.] According to the first Evangelical promise concerning "the Seed of the woman," followed this prediction of the Prophet, "The Lord hath created a new thing in the earth, A woman shall compass a man." That new creation of a man is therefore "new," and therefore "a creation," because wrought in a woman only, without a man, compassing a man. This interpretation is ancient, literal, and clear. The words import a miraculous conception: and the ancient Jews acknowledged this sense, and applied it determinately to the Messiah. This prophecy is illustrated by that of Isaiah, chap. vii. 14. Bp. Pearson.

24. — husbandmen, and they that go forth with flocks.] These words are descriptive of the circumstances, in which the ancestors of the Jews were placed upon their first introduction into the land of Canaan; when every citizen was literally a "husbandman," and a shepherd, or "feeder of flocks," in consequence of the allotment of land, which he was forbidden to alienate. Dr. Blayney. They denote the state of the people after their return, that they should live innocently and peaceably. So chap. xxxiii. 12. Poole.

27. Behold, the days come, &c.] Under the captivity the land lay "desolate, without man and without beast," chap. xxxiii. 12: but now it shall be inhabited and replenished with both. W. Lowth.

29. In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten &c.] God hath often declared, that "He will visit the sins of the fathers upon the children:" and particularly threatened to execute judgment upon the present generations, for the idolatries and other sins of their forefathers: see chap. xv. 4. This gave occasion to the proverb mentioned in this verse, which they that were in captivity applied to their own case; as if the miseries they endured were chiefly owing to their fathers' sins: see Lam. v. 7; Ezek. xviii. 2. But when this judgment should be removed, then there would be no farther occasion to use this proverb, as Ezekiel speaks in the before-mentioned place. W. Lowth.

30. But every one shall die for his own iniquity:] These national judgments ceasing, every one should suffer only for his own faults. This prophecy will be remarkably verified, when God shall cease to visit upon the Jewish nation that imprecation, which they laid upon themselves for the death of Christ; "His blood be on us, and on our children," Matt. xxvii. 25. W. Lowth.

"Every one shall die for his own iniquity:" see also Ezek. xviii. 20. Yet Jeremiah elsewhere complains, "Our fathers have sinned, and are not; and we have borne their iniquities," Lam. v. 7. To reconcile such places of Scripture, which seem to be at variance with each other, let it be observed, that, where the Scripture ascribes one man's punishment to another man's sin, it points us to God's wisdom and providence; who for good and just ends sometimes makes choice of these occasions, rather than others, to inflict upon men those punishments, which their own sins have otherwise abundantly deserved. On the contrary, where the Scripture attributes all punishments to the personal sins of the sufferer, it points us to God's justice: which looks still to the desert, and does not upon any occasion whatsoever inflict punishments, but where there are personal sins to deserve them: so that every man, who is punished in any manner or upon any occasion, may join in David's confession, "Against Thee have I sinned, and done evil in Thy sight: that Thou mightest be justified in Thy saying, and clear when Thou art judged," Ps. li. 4. Bp. Sanderson.

31. — I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel,] Behold, the days of the Messiah are coming, wherein I will make a new covenant with My Church. Bp. Hall.

To what time or person the promises, made here by Jeremiah, and by Ezekiel, chap. xxxiv. 23, 26; xxxvi. 26, related, might be uncertain before Malachi prophesied; though they have internal marks which point to the Messiah. But Malachi, by his prophecy concerning "the Messenger of the covenant," chap. iii. 1, put it out of all doubt. This was to say in other words, that Messiah should be the declarer, the publisher, the mediator of that better covenant, as Moses was of the old covenant; and that a law should be given by Him. Bp. Chandler.

old covenant, as opposed to the new, signifies that system of laws and ordinances which were the condition of the covenant made with the Jews on mount Sinai. In this sense the word "law" is usually taken in the New Testament, when it is opposed to the "Gospel." See Acts xv. 5; Rom. iii. 19; Gal. iii. 17. W. Lowth.

——although I was an husband unto them,] See the note on chap. ii. 2.

33. — I will put my law in their inward parts, &c.] Though all people have some natural sense of their duty left them, yet generally it is so little, that it does not excite them to the practice of their duty. Hence it is, that God promises, in the new covenant, to quicken and actuate it, saying, "I will put My law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts:" that is, He will write His law in our hearts, as He did at first, by giving us so quick and strong a sense of our duty to Him, as shall excite and stir us up to the sincere performance of it. This He does, by expounding to us our duty in the Old and New Testament, and by His Holy Spirit co-operating with the means of grace, which for that purpose He hath settled in His Church. Bp. Beveridge.

——and will be their God, &c.] Together with the promise of giving us such a measure of His grace and Holy Spirit, to influence and direct our hearts, that we shall be inclined of our own accord to do whatever He commands; God further promises, that then "He will be our God," to bless, preserve, and keep us; and we "shall be His people," His peculiar people, zealous of good works, of all such works as He hath set us to do: which that we may, He will give us a right knowledge of Himself and His holy will, so that we "shall all know Him, from the least to the greatest," and all that He requires of us. And then He promises in the last place, that we being thus qualified by Him for it, He will forgive us all our sins, that He will look upon us no longer as guilty, but as just and righteous persons, and therefore fit to live with Him in glory: "for whom He justifieth, them He also glorifieth," Rom. viii. 30. Bp. Beveridge.

34. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, &c.] This passage is to be understood of that greater degree of light which the Gospel of Christ would bring into the world; not only a fuller discovery of Divine truth than the Gentiles were able by natural reason to acquire; but a clearer knowledge of God and heavenly things, than the ancient people of God had ever attained to under the dispensation of the law. Wogan.

35. — and the ordinances of the moon &c.] Who hath ordained a due, constant, and regular motion of the moon and stars for a light by night. Bp. Hall.

36. If those ordinances depart from before me, &c.] If that course which I have set in nature for the motions of the heavens may be altered, then may it be possible for My Church to fail upon earth. Bp. Hall.

God preserved a remnant of "the seed of Israel," that were led captive, and restored them to their own country and government. He preserved another remnant at the beginning of the Gospel, called "the saved," Luke xiii. 23; Acts ii. 47; who, by embracing the faith of Christ, escaped those terrible judgments that were inflicted on the main body of the nation. And Providence still continues them in a distinct body from all other people in the world, in order to their conversion in God's due time. W. Lowth.

38. — the days come, — that the city shall be built] The days shall come that this city of Jerusalem, which yet stands in her full glory, shall, after the raising and destruction of it, be fully built up again, in all the whole compass of it, from the one end to the other; and, which is thereby typified, My evangelical Church shall be built upon the ruins of the Jewish, in a complete form, and be wholly consecrated to the Lord. Bp. Hall.

This prophecy might in some sense be fulfilled in the rebuilding of the city after the captivity: but the mystical sense of the words probably relates to a more perfect state of the Church, which is elsewhere called "the city of God," and the "new Jerusalem;" and whose dimensions are figuratively described, Ezek. xlviii. 30, &c.; Rev. xxi. 10, &c. W. Lowth.

——from the tower of Hananeel &c.] See the plan of Jerusalem.

Chap. XXXII. The date of the following transaction and prophecy was in the tenth year of Zedekiah's reign, whilst the Chaldeans invested the city, and Jeremiah was confined in the court of the prison. Dr. Blayney.

Before CHRIST about 590.

God confirmeth the captivity for their sins, 36 and promiseth a gracious return.

THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD in the tenth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, which was the eighteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar.

2 For then the king of Babylon's army besieged Jerusalem: and Jeremiah the prophet was shut up in the court of the prison, which was in the king of Judah's house.

3 For Zedekiah king of Judah had shut him up, saying, Wherefore dost thou prophesy, and say, Thus saith the LORD, [a] Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall take it;

[a] Chap. 34. 2.

4 And Zedekiah king of Judah shall not escape out of the hand of the Chaldeans, but shall surely [b] be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon, and shall speak with him mouth to mouth, and his eyes shall behold his eyes;

[b] Chap. 34. 3.

5 And he shall lead Zedekiah to Babylon, and there shall he be until I visit him, saith the LORD: though ye fight with the Chaldeans, ye shall not prosper.

6 ¶ And Jeremiah said, The word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

7 Behold, Hanameel the son of Shallum thine uncle shall come unto thee, saying, Buy thee my field that is in Anathoth: for the [c] right of redemption is thine to buy it.

[c] Lev. 25. 24. Ruth 4. 4.

8 So Hanameel mine uncle's son came to me in the court of the prison according to the word of the LORD, and said unto me, Buy my field, I pray thee, that is in Anathoth, which is in the country of Benjamin: for the right of inheritance is thine, and the redemption is thine; buy it for thyself. Then I knew that this was the word of the LORD.

Before CHRIST about 590.

9 And I bought the field of Hanameel my uncle's son, that was in Anathoth, and weighed him the money, even ‖ seventeen shekels of silver.

‖ Or, seven shekels and ten pieces of silver.

10 And I † subscribed the evidence, and sealed it, and took witnesses, and weighed him the money in the balances.

† Heb. wrote in the book.

11 So I took the evidence of the purchase, both that which was sealed according to the law and custom, and that which was open:

12 And I gave the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, the son of Maaseiah, in the sight of Hanameel mine uncle's son, and in the presence of the witnesses that subscribed the book of the purchase, before all the Jews that sat in the court of the prison.

13 ¶ And I charged Baruch before them, saying,

14 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Take these evidences, this evidence of the purchase, both which is sealed, and this evidence which is open; and put them in an earthen vessel, that they may continue many days.

15 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Houses and fields and vineyards shall be possessed again in this land.

16 ¶ Now when I had delivered the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, I prayed unto the LORD, saying,

17 Ah Lord GOD! behold, thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and stretched out arm, and there is nothing ‖ too hard for thee:

‖ Or, hid from thee.

Ver. 3. For Zedekiah — had shut him up, saying, Wherefore dost thou prophesy, &c.] This refers to the prophecy recorded, chap. xxxiv. 2, &c.: the particulars there mentioned being in order of time before the occurrences related in this chapter. W. Lowth.

5. — there shall he be until I visit him,] There shall he be until the time that I put an end to his captivity by death. Bp. Hall. Or, till I visit him in his posterity, whom I will restore to their own country. So God tells Jacob, "I will go down with thee into Egypt, and I will also surely bring thee up again," Gen. xlvi. 4; which promise was made good to his posterity. W. Lowth.

7. Behold, Hanameel — shall come unto thee, saying, &c.] See Exod. iv. 14, and the last note there.

9. — seventeen shekels of silver.] Not much above forty shillings in our money: a small price for a field or piece of ground. But the quantity of land is uncertain: and the circumstances of the time must have greatly lessened its value; the field being then in the enemy's possession, and the purchaser knowing that neither he nor his heirs should enter on it till after seventy years. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

11. — both that which was sealed — and that which was open:] The open or unsealed writing was probably either a copy of the sealed deed, or else a certificate of the witnesses, in whose presence the deed of purchase was signed and sealed. W. Lowth.

Sir J. Chardin thinks this ancient story is illustrated by the modern management in the conveyance of Eastern property: "After a contract is made, the deed is kept by the party himself, not the notary: and a copy of it is made, signed by the notary alone, which is shewn upon proper occasions, whereas the other is never exhibited." According to this account, the two writings mentioned in the text were to the same effect: the one being sealed up with solemnity, not to be used on common occasions; the other being open, to be perused at pleasure, upon all occasions. The sealed one answered to a record with us; the other a writing for common use. Harmer.

12. And I gave the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch] Baruch was a scribe by profession; and it may be supposed, that the attendance of such an one, skilled in the forms of the law, was necessary on those occasions, both to draw up the writings, and to officiate in the capacity of a notary publick with us. And to his custody, as being a publick officer, the custody of the title-deeds was intrusted. Dr. Blayney.

14. — put them in an earthen vessel, &c.] Lay up these evidences sure in an earthen vessel, where they may be kept from rotting, for a long time; as those, whereof I shall have most certain use hereafter: for this land shall be in due time repossessed. Bp. Hall.

24. Behold the mounts,] The ramparts raised against the walls, for the siege of Jerusalem: for placing "engines of shot," (as in the margin,) in order to assault and take the city. Compare chap. xxxiii. 4. W. Lowth. The "mount," as used by the Greeks, is thus described by Archbishop Potter: "It was raised so high, as to equal, if not exceed, the top of the besieged walls. The sides were walled in with bricks or stones, or secured with strong rafters to hinder it from falling; the fore part only, being by degrees to be advanced near the walls, remained bare. The pile itself consisted of all sorts of materials, as earth, timber, boughs, stones, &c.: into the middle were cast only wickers and twigs of trees, to fasten, and, as it were, cement, the other parts. Moveable towers of wood were usually placed upon the mount. They were formed of several stories, which were able to carry, not soldiers only, but all sorts of portable engines." Hence we may perceive in what sense "the mounts came unto," or approached, "the city," as in the text: and how a "mount" or "bank" might even "stand in the ditch," or "trench," 2 Sam. xx. 15: as likewise of what use "trees" were in constructing them, Jer. vi. 6; and how they might be said to "throw down the houses," chap. xxxiii. 4. Parkhurst.

35. — to cause their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire unto Molech;] The words "through the fire" are not in the Hebrew; but in other places which speak of the same thing, the words are expressed at full length; see Deut. xviii. 10; 2 Kings xxiii. 10. Elsewhere the same thing is expressed by "burning their sons and their daughters in the fire, and offering them for burnt offerings:" see chap. vii. 31; xix. 5; Deut. xii. 31. The idolatrous Jews are often upbraided with the practice of this inhuman rite; see Ps. cvi. 37; Isai. lvii. 5. And the phrase of "making children pass through" the fire is certainly taken in this sense, Ezek. xvi. 20, 21; and xxiii. 37; where it is explained by "slaying them," "sacrificing them," and "giving them to be devoured."

MOREOVER the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah the second time, while he was yet [a] shut up in the court of the prison, saying,

[a] Chap. 32. 2, 3.

2 Thus saith the LORD [b] the maker thereof, the LORD that formed it, to establish it; the LORD is his name;

[b] Isai. 37. 26.

Some criticks are of opinion, that the exposition is taken in a milder sense, in other texts, particularly 2 Kings xvi. 3; and that it only denotes holding the children over the fire, or making them pass through the flame, by way of lustration or dedication to some idol. To confirm this interpretation they observe, that the Hebrew verb used in the text signifies to dedicate or consecrate; see Exod. xiii. 12. W. Lowth.

The fact in all probability was, that the more tenderhearted parents were content simply to dedicate their children, waving them perhaps over the fire that was burning before the idol, without doing them any corporal hurt; whilst the gloomy superstition of others prompted them to go greater lengths, and to perpetrate the most inhuman barbarities under the notion of religious worship. Both however were guilty of actions highly offensive to God, and provoking His resentment. Dr. Blayney.

36. And now therefore thus saith the Lord,] In this and the following verses God gives an answer to the doubt proposed by the Prophet in ver. 25. Or the words may be thus translated, "But now, notwithstanding (all this), thus saith the Lord." See the note on chap. xvi. 14. W. Lowth.

37. — and I will cause them to dwell safely:] St. Jerome observes, that this promise, taken in its full extent, was not made good to those that returned from captivity, because they were frequently infested with wars, as well by the kings of Syria and Egypt, as by the rest of their neighbours, as appears from the history of the Maccabees; and were finally subdued and destroyed by the Romans. W. Lowth.

39. And I will give them one heart, and one way,] I will give them unity of mind and judgment, as to the things of God: they shall not be, some for superstitious and idolatrous worship, and some for My true worship. Poole.

40. And I will make an everlasting covenant with them,] The Jewish covenant, with respect to the ceremonial ordinances contained in it, is sometimes called "an everlasting covenant;" see Gen. xvii. 13; Lev. xxiv. 8; Isai. xxiv. 5; because those ordinances were to last till the age of the Messiah, called the "age," or "the world to come," Heb. ii. 5; vi. 5. But when this expression is applied to the Gospel covenant, there is a peculiar emphasis in it, implying that it should never be abolished, or give way to any other dispensation. See chap. l. 5; Isai. lv. 3; compared with Ps. lxxxix. 34, 35. W. Lowth.

41. Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good,] I will take pleasure in doing them good according to My promise, Deut. xxx. 9; whereas before, "the Lord rejoiced over them to destroy them," Deut. xxviii. 63; which God is never said to do, but when men have filled up the measure of their iniquities. See the notes upon Gen. vi. 6; Deut. i. 34. W. Lowth.

44. Men shall buy fields for money, &c.] There shall be an ordinary course of bargains and purchases, and all those forms of legal transactions which are usual on such occasions. Bp. Hall.

—— in the land of Benjamin, &c.] For these divisions of the kingdom of Judah, see chap. xvii. 26, and the note there.

Chap. XXXIII. This chapter contains a prophecy, which, though applicable in some parts to the restoration of the Jews from Babylon, cannot however be so understood upon the whole.

God reveals His gracious purpose of healing the wounds of Jerusalem, restoring the captivity of Judah, forgiving their sins, and distinguishing them with such blessings, as to strike the astonished nations with fear and trembling, ver. 1—9. He foretells that the land, whose desolation they deplored, should again flourish with multitudes, both of men and cattle, ver. 10—13. He confirms His former promise of establishing a kingdom of righteousness in a branch of the house of David, and rendering it perpetual, together with the priesthood of the sons of Levi, ver. 14—18. He declares His covenant in this respect with David and the Levites to be as sure as the covenant of day and night, ver. 19—22. And, to remove the reproach of having cast off those families, whom He had once distinguished by His choice, He renews His protestations of infallibly restoring the seed of Jacob, and of appointing the seed of David to rule over them for ever, ver. 23 to the end. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 2. — the maker thereof,] Rather, "the doer of it," that is, of "the word," or of the thing which God says. Dr. Blayney.

Before CHRIST about 590.

3 Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and ‖ mighty things, which thou knowest not.

‖ Or, hidden.

4 For thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, concerning the houses of this city, and concerning the houses of the kings of Judah, which are thrown down by the mounts, and by the sword;

5 They come to fight with the Chaldeans, but it is to fill them with the dead bodies of men, whom I have slain in mine anger and in my fury, and for all whose wickedness I have hid my face from this city.

6 Behold, I will bring it health and cure, and I will cure them, and will reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth.

7 And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them, as at the first.

8 And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will [c] pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against me.

[c] Chap. 31. 34. Mic. 7. 18.

9 ¶ And it shall be to me a name of joy, a praise and an honour before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them: and they shall fear and tremble for all the goodness and for all the prosperity that I procure unto it.

10 Thus saith the LORD; Again there shall be heard in this place, which ye say shall be desolate without man and without beast, even in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, that are desolate, without man, and without inhabitant, and without beast,

For I will cause to return the captivity of the land, as at the first, saith the LORD.

13 In the cities of the mountains, in the cities of the vale, and in the cities of the south, and in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, shall the flocks pass again under the hands of him that telleth them, saith the LORD.

14 Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel and to the house of Judah.

15 ¶ In those days, and at that time, will I cause the [e] Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land.

3. — which thou knowest not.] Whether this means the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, or the times of the Messiah, both had been already foretold by Jeremiah as plainly as they are expressed here. Perhaps therefore God speaks not to the Prophet, but to the people, who were backward to know what they might have known; and as some presumed on false predictions in their favour, so some despaired of the true, chap. xxxii. 36. Abp. Secker. Or, probably, it means "things which thou neither didst nor couldst know," but by revelation. Dr. Blayney.

4. — by the mounts, and by the sword;] By the battering engines, placed upon the mounts: see note on chap. xxxii. 24; and by the violence of war. W. Lowth.

8. And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity,] I will not impute their sins any longer to them, but remit the punishments I have inflicted upon them for their iniquities. The whole verse implies that general promise of pardon of sins, which is elsewhere spoken of as the peculiar blessing of the Gospel: compare chap. xxxi. 34; Ezek. xxxvi. 25. W. Lowth.

9. And it shall be to me a name of joy, &c.] God's especial providence over the Jews, in restoring their city and temple, shall be taken notice of by the heathen world, and make them give glory to that God, whom they worship: see Ezra i. 2; vi. 12. To the same sense God is said to "make Jerusalem a praise in the earth," Isai. lxii. 7; that is, the subject of men's praise and admiration, the glory of which redounds to God, who is her Protector. This promise is more signally fulfilled in the Christian Church, which the heathens resorted to, as the seat and temple of truth: see Isai. ii. 3; Zech. viii. 21, 23. W. Lowth.

11. — the voice of them that shall say, Praise the Lord &c.] We read, that those who returned from captivity used this very hymn, Ezra iii. 11. W. Lowth.

—— the sacrifice of praise] Such as was offered upon any great deliverance. See Levit. vii. 12; Psal. cvii. 22; cxvi. 17. The word here used signifies praise and thanksgiving in general; and is used for those choirs or companies, who make a solemn thanksgiving-procession upon the dedication of the new wall of Jerusalem, Nehem. xii. 31, 38, 40. This is called by St. Paul "the sacrifice of praise, that is, the fruit of our lips," Hebr. xiii. 15, to distinguish it from the oblations commanded by the law, which consisted of the fruits of the ground, or of the flock and herd. W. Lowth.

13. — under the hands of him that telleth them,] That is, of their shepherds, who number their cattle by striking with their rod every one as it comes out of the fold. See Levit. xxvii. 32. W. Lowth.

14. — I will perform that good thing which I have promised] The coming of the Messiah was that good thing which God had promised, which is therefore called in a peculiar manner, "The promise made unto the fathers," Acts xiii. 32, as being the greatest of all the promises, and that in which all the rest were comprehended. Bp. Beveridge.

16. — and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, &c.] The simplest interpretation of the original words is, "He that shall call her," that is, to be His peculiar people, "is the Lord our Righteousness." Bp. Pearson.

17. — David shall never want a man &c.] So long as Israel remained a kingdom, those of the line of David ruled over it: when that failed, Christ came in the flesh, who ruleth, and shall rule, over the Israel of God for ever. Poole. In a spiritual sense, the kingdom of Christ, the Son of David, has been for some time established over those whom the Apostle calls "the Israel of God," Gal. vi. 16; and the "children of Abraham," Gal. iii. 7; meaning thereby all true believers, whether of the Jews or of the Gentiles. And in the Church of Christ there hath been a constant and uninterrupted succession of persons appointed to perform the publick offices of religion in the room of, although not taken out of, the family of the priests the Levites. And the perpetuity of this kingdom and this priesthood is, in the opinion of many learned expositors, looked upon as a full and authentick completion of the intention of this prophecy. Dr. Blayney. These promises can only respect the eternal priesthood of Jesus, exercised by Himself and His ministers in the Christian Church. Calmet.

18. — to offer burnt offerings, &c.] It is not necessary to suppose, that the same sacrifices shall continue to be offered in the Christian Church, which are prescribed by the Mosaick law; but, as that law is abrogated, we may fairly understand those sacrifices figuratively to denote the offices of a more spiritual worship substituted in their stead. Dr. Blayney. See the notes on Isai. xix. 19; lxvi. 23.

24. — The two families which the Lord hath chosen,] Some suppose the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah to be intended; others the royal and sacerdotal families of David and Levi. Dr. Blayney.

25. — my covenant — the ordinances] The "covenant" is that above mentioned "of the day and of the night," (ver. 20,) which continually succeed each other without interruption: "the ordinances of heaven and earth" are the stated order of things in both, such as the system of numberless stars in the heavens, and the immeasurable sand of the sea, (ver. 22,) all which God claims to be of His ordering and appointment. Dr. Blayney.

Chap. XXXIV. This chapter contains two distinct prophecies. The first of which is dated at the time when Nebuchadnezzar was carrying on the siege of Jerusalem, and of the cities of Lachish and Azekah, most probably towards the latter end of the ninth year of Zedekiah, the siege having been begun in the tenth month of that year. The second prophecy was delivered some time afterwards, when the Chaldeans had broken up the siege, and were marched off to meet the Egyptian army, which made a shew of coming to the relief of Jerusalem. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 1. — all the cities thereof,] See ver. 7; the lesser cities of Judea, which were subject to Jerusalem, as their metropolis; called elsewhere "the daughters of Judah," by way of distinction from the mother city. Compare chap. xlix. 2; li. 43. W. Lowth.

2. — Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will give this city &c.] This prophecy was fulfilled in all its parts. "I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire:" so says the Prophet; the history relates, "They," that is, the forces of the king of Babylon, "burnt the house of God, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem, and burnt all the palaces thereof with fire," 2 Chron. xxxvi. 19. "Thou shalt not escape out of his hand, but shalt surely be taken, and delivered into his hand:" so says the Prophet; the history relates, "The men of war fled by night, and the king went the way toward the plain, and the army of the Chaldeans pursued after the king, and overtook him in the plains of Jericho; and all his army were scattered from him: so they took the king, and brought him up to the king

[†] Heb. his mouth shall speak to thy mouth.

4 Yet hear the word of the LORD, O Zedekiah king of Judah; Thus saith the LORD of thee, Thou shalt not die by the sword:

5 But thou shalt die in peace: and with the burnings of thy fathers, The former kings which were before thee, so shall they burn odours for thee; and they will lament thee, saying, Ah lord! for I have pronounced the word, saith the LORD.

6 Then Jeremiah the prophet spake all these words unto Zedekiah king of Judah in Jerusalem,

7 When the king of Babylon's army fought against Jerusalem, and against all the cities of Judah that were left, against Lachish, and against Azekah: for these defenced cities remained of the cities of Judah.

about 591. 8 ¶ This is the word that came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, after that the king Zedekiah had made a covenant with all the people which were at Jerusalem, to proclaim [c] liberty unto them;

Before CHRIST about 591.

[c] Exod. 21. 2.

9 That every man should let his manservant, and every man his maidservant, being an Hebrew or an Hebrewess, go free; that none should serve himself of them, to wit, of a Jew his brother.

10 Now when all the princes, and all the people, which had entered into the covenant, heard that every one should let his manservant, and every one his maidservant, go free, that none should serve themselves of them any more, then they obeyed, and let them go.

about 590. 11 But afterward they turned, and caused the servants and the handmaids, whom they had let go free, to return, and brought them into subjection for servants and for handmaids.

12 ¶ Therefore the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

13 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel; I made a covenant with your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen, saying, of Babylon, to Riblah," 2 Kings xxv. 4—6. The Prophet goes on: "Thine eyes shall behold the eyes of the king of Babylon, and he shall speak with thee mouth to mouth." No pleasant circumstance this to Zedekiah, who had provoked the king of Babylon, by revolting from him. The history says, "The king of Babylon gave judgment upon Zedekiah," or, as it is more literally rendered from the Hebrew, "spake judgment with him at Riblah." The Prophet concludes this part with, "and thou shalt go to Babylon;" the history says, "The king of Babylon bound him in chains, and carried him to Babylon, and put him in prison till the day of his death," Jer. lii. 11. "Thou shalt not die by the sword." He did not die by the sword, he did not fall in battle. "But thou shalt die in peace." He did die in peace; he expired neither on the rack nor on the scaffold; was neither strangled, nor poisoned; no unusual fate of captive kings! he died peaceably in his bed, though that bed was in a prison. "And with the burnings of thy fathers shall they burn odours for thee." It cannot be proved from history, that this part of the prophecy was accomplished; though the probability is, that it was so; the probability is grounded on these two reasons. Daniel, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, to say nothing of other Jews, were men of great authority in the court of the king of Babylon, before and after the commencement of the imprisonment of Zedekiah; and Daniel continued in power till the subversion of the kingdom of Babylon by Cyrus. Now it seems very probable, that Daniel and the other Jews would have both inclination to request, and influence enough with the king of Babylon to obtain, permission to bury their deceased prince Zedekiah after the manner of his fathers. But if there had been no Jews at Babylon of consequence enough to make such a request, still it is probable that the king of Babylon would have ordered the Jews to bury and lament their departed prince after the manner of their country. Monarchs, like other men, are conscious of the instability of human condition; and when the pomp of war has ceased, when the insolence of conquest is abated, and the fury of resentment is subsided, they seldom fail to revere royalty even in its ruins, and grant without reluctance proper obsequies to the remains of captive kings. Bp. Watson.

5. — so shall they burn odours for thee;] It was customary among the Jews, at the funeral of their kings, to prepare "a bed of spices," 2 Chron. xvi. 14, of which they made a perfume by burning them, and therein to deposit the body of the deceased prince. Compare 2 Chron. xxi. 19. W. Lowth.

8. — to proclaim liberty unto them;] By the law of Moses, (Exod. xxi. 2; Deut. xv. 12,) the Israelites were not allowed to detain their brethren of the Hebrew race in perpetual bondage, but were required to let them go free after having served six years. This law had, it seems, fallen into disuse; but king Zedekiah, upon the approach of the Chaldean army, whether from religious motives, or a political view to employ the men, who were set free, in the service of the war, engaged the people to act conformably to the law; and they released their brethren accordingly. But no sooner were their fears abated by the retreat of the Chaldeans, than, in defiance of every principle of religion, honour, and humanity, they imposed the yoke of servitude anew upon those unhappy persons, ver. 11. Dr. Blayney.

14. At the end of seven years] The seventh year was the year of release, Deut. xv. 9; consequently servants were to continue in service but six years, and at the beginning of the seventh were to be let go free; see ver. 12. For this reason some criticks render the phrase here, "within the term of seven years." And the words mean no more, as appears by a like form of speech, Deut. xiv. 28, where it is said, "At the end of three years thou shalt bring forth all the tithe of thine increase the same year:" which is to be explained by what is said chap. xxvi. 12, where every "third year" is called "the year of tithing." So Christ is said to "rise again after three days," Mark viii. 31; which is elsewhere explained by His rising the "third day." W. Lowth.

CHAP. XXXV.

1 By the obedience of the Rechabites, 12 Jeremiah condemneth the disobedience of the Jews. 18 God blesseth the Rechabites for their obedience.

THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD in the days of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying, about 607.

2 Go unto the house of the Rechabites, and speak unto them, and bring them into the house of the LORD, into one of the chambers, and give them wine to drink.

3 Then I took Jaazaniah the son of Jeremiah, the son of Habaziniah, and his brethren, and all his sons, and the whole house of the Rechabites;

---

17. — I proclaim a liberty for you,—to the sword, &c.] I give full liberty to the sword, and to the pestilence, and to the famine, to seize upon you. Bp. Hall.

18. — when they cut the calf in twain,] See the note on Gen. xv. 10.

As Zedekiah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, on finding themselves besieged, set at liberty their Hebrew servants, and pretended they would observe the law of God; but afterwards, imagining they had nothing to fear, changed their minds, and made slaves again of their brethren: thus sinners pretend to humble themselves, and seem disposed to repentance, while they are threatened and the danger is near; but as soon as their fears are over, they break their promises, and return to their sins. Jeremiah's reproaches and threatenings of the Jews for their impious and unjust proceedings shew, that a repentance and a reformation, which is but of short duration, instead of pacifying God, only provokes Him the more; and that those, who violate His covenant and their own promises, shall not escape the punishments which their hypocrisy and infidelity deserve. Ostervald.

Chap. XXXV. All the intermediate prophecies from chap. xxvi. belong clearly to the reign of Zedekiah; and consequently are posterior to this chapter and the next, which are dated in the reign of Jehoiakim, together with chap. xlv, which is closely connected with the latter of these two chapters. The Rechabites appear to have retired within the walls of Jerusalem, upon the hostile approach of Nebuchadnezzar and his army, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 2. Go unto the house of the Rechabites,—and give them wine to drink.] Here God trieth the Rechabites, as He also tried Abraham, Gen. xxii. 1. There appear to be two reasons why He made this trial of their obedience: the one was, for their own greater advantage and improvement; the other was, that their fidelity and firm adherence to the injunction of their ancestor might be rendered more conspicuous, and might excite the Jews to emulate their virtue. God tempts us in His justice, in order to prove the sincerity of our obedience; and in His goodness, in order to promote our own profit and the benefit of others. Wogan.

—— the house of the Rechabites,] The Rechabites, as may be collected from ver. 7, were not of the children of Israel, but strangers of another race, who dwelt amongst them. From 1 Chron. ii. 55, they appear to have been Kenites, a people originally settled in that part of Arabia Petrea, which was called the land of Midian; and most probably the descendants of Jethro, who is called a Kenite, and said to have severed himself from the rest of his countrymen, and to have dwelt amongst the people of Israel. Compare Numb. x. 29—32, with Judg. i. 16; iv. 11. At what time Rechab lived, who gave his name to the family, is not certain, nor whether he was the immediate father, or more remote ancestor, of Jonadab; for the word "son" often denotes nothing more than a lineal descendant. But it is most likely, that the Jonadab here spoken of was the same person, of whom mention is made 2 Kings x. 15; (see the note there.) The institutions he left with his posterity bespeak a principal concern for the purity of their morals, which he might rightly suppose would be less liable to be corrupted, whilst they adhered to the simplicity of their ancient usages, than if they adopted the refinements of modern luxury. He therefore enjoined them, not only to abstain from the use of wine, but to live as the patriarchs did of old, and as many of their countrymen, the Scenite Arabs, continue to do at this day, without any fixed habitations or possessions, far from the society of cities, in the open country, feeding their flocks, and maintaining themselves by the produce of them. Dr. Blayney.

Before CHRIST about 607.

4 And I brought them into the house of the LORD, into the chamber of the sons of Hanan, the son of Igdaliah, a man of God, which was by the chamber of the princes, which was above the chamber of Maaseiah the son of Shallum, the keeper of the † door:

† Heb. threshold, or, vessel.

5 And I set before the sons of the house of the Rechabites pots full of wine, and cups, and I said unto them, Drink ye wine.

6 But they said, We will drink no wine: for Jonadab the son of Rechab our father commanded us, saying, Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye, nor your sons for ever:

7 Neither shall ye build house, nor sow seed, nor plant vineyard, nor have any: but all your days ye shall dwell in tents; that ye may live many days in the land where ye be strangers.

8 Thus have we obeyed the voice of Jonadab the son of Rechab our father in all that he hath charged us, to drink no wine all our days, we, our wives, our sons, nor our daughters;

9 Nor to build houses for us to dwell in: neither have we vineyard, nor field, nor seed:

10 But we have dwelt in tents, and have obeyed, and done according to all that Jonadab our father commanded us.

11 But it came to pass, when Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon came up into the land, that we said, Come, and let us go to Jerusalem for fear of the army of the Chaldeans, and for fear of the army of the Syrians: so we dwell at Jerusalem.

12 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah, saying,

13 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Go and tell the men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, Will ye not receive instruction to hearken to my words? saith the LORD.

Before CHRIST about 607.

14 The words of Jonadab the son of Rechab, that he commanded his sons not to drink wine, are performed; for unto this day they drink none, but obey their father's commandment: notwithstanding I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking; but ye hearkened not unto me.

15 I have sent also unto you all my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them, saying, [a] Return ye now every man from his evil way, and amend your doings, and go not after other gods to serve them, and ye shall dwell in the land which I have given to you and to your fathers: but ye have not inclined your ear, nor hearkened unto me.

16 Because the sons of Jonadab the son of Rechab have performed the commandment of their father, which he commanded them; but this people hath not hearkened unto me:

17 Therefore thus saith the LORD God of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring upon Judah and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem all the evil that I have pronounced against them: because I have spoken unto them, but they have not heard; and I have called unto them, but they have not answered.

18 ¶ And Jeremiah said unto the house of the Rechabites, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Because ye have obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father, and kept all his precepts, and done according unto all that he hath commanded you:

19 Therefore thus saith the LORD of

4. —into the house of the Lord, into the chamber of — Hanan,] There were several chambers adjoining to the temple for the use of the priests and Levites during the time of their ministration: and as repositories for laying up the holy vestments and vessels, and whatever stores were necessary for the daily sacrifices, and the other parts of the temple service. Compare chap. xxxvi. 10; 1 Kings vi. 5; 1 Chron. ix. 27—30. W. Lowth.

—— a man of God,] This name appears to be always used to denote a Prophet, one who had been employed on a Divine commission. Dr. Blayney.

—— which was by the chamber of the princes,] Where the Sanhedrim, or great council, used to assemble: see chap. xxvi. 10. The Sanhedrim always sat in some great room adjoining the temple. Dr. Lightfoot.

11. —so we dwell at Jerusalem.] Upon the Chaldean invasion we retired to Jerusalem, where, during the siege of the place, we are forced to continue. In such a case they did not think themselves obliged to a strict observance of the injunctions of Jonadab; because all human laws admit of an equitable construction, and may be superseded in cases of necessity, or when the observance of them is attended with such great inconveniences, as the lawgiver himself, if he could have foreseen, would probably have made ground of exception. W. Lowth.

15. I have sent also unto you all my servants the prophets, &c.] God here explains why He had commissioned the Prophet to bring the Rechabites into the temple, and commanded him to set wine before them, and invite them to drink it; namely, that by their refusing to comply with the invitation, in obedience to their father Jonadab, He might convince the Jews of their disobedience to His commands, though those commands were more obligatory than the commands of Jonadab. For, 1st, Jonadab was but an earthly parent, and so had no absolute universal sovereignty over his children; but God was "the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel." 2dly, Jonadab's commands were not for the performance of any moral duty, but the doing of a thing, which they might do or leave undone; God required of them what was but their moral duty, and for which there was the highest reason. 3dly, Jonadab's commands had no promise annexed; God's precept had a promise annexed, yet they had not yielded Him that obedience which the sons of Jonadab had yielded him. He was the Father, but where was His honour? Poole.

AND it came to pass in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, that this word came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

[a] Josiah, even unto this day.

3 It may be that the house of Judah will hear all the evil which I purpose to do unto them; that they may return every man from his evil way; that I may forgive their iniquity and their sin.

4 Then Jeremiah called Baruch the son of Neriah: and Baruch wrote from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the LORD, which he had spoken unto him, upon a roll of a book.

Before CHRIST about 607.

5 And Jeremiah commanded Baruch, saying, I am shut up; I cannot go into the house of the LORD:

6 Therefore go thou, and read in the roll, which thou hast written from my mouth, the words of the LORD in the ears of the people in the LORD's house upon the fasting day: and also thou shalt read them in the ears of all Judah that come out of their cities.

7 It may be † they will present their supplication before the LORD, and will return every one from his evil way: for great is the anger and the fury that the LORD hath pronounced against this people.

8 And Baruch the son of Neriah did according to all that Jeremiah the prophet commanded him, reading in the book the words of the LORD in the LORD's house.

9 And it came to pass in the fifth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, in the ninth month, that they proclaimed a fast before the LORD to all the people in Jerusalem, and to all the people that came from the cities of Judah unto Jerusalem.

10 Then read Baruch in the book the words of Jeremiah in the house of the LORD, in the chamber of Gemariah the son of

19. — Jonadab the son of Rechab shall not want a man to stand before me for ever.] When the main body of the Jewish nation are dispersed in their several captivities, some of the family of the Rechabites shall remain to attend upon My service, and enjoy the privileges of worshipping in My temple at Jerusalem. For to stand in the presence of a prince implies an attendance in some degree upon his person and service, 1 Kings x. 8: and therefore to "stand before God" must denote at least the privilege of treading His courts, and worshipping Him among the train of His chosen servants and followers. Some branches of this family returned from the captivity, as appears from 1 Chron. ii. 55.

The expression "for ever" is not always to be taken in a strict sense; but often means only a long continuance, and is used comparatively with respect to a shorter duration. See the notes on chap. xxv. 9; xxxii. 40. W. Lowth.

Of so great price in the sight of God is the virtue of filial duty and obedience, that it seldom fails of its reward even in this world. The law, which enjoined it, had a promise of long life annexed thereto, Exod. xx. 12; and it is distinguished by the Apostle as "the first commandment with promise," Eph. vi. 2. And by this history of the Rechabites we may learn, that the surest way to entail a blessing on our children, and to perpetuate our names and families in a numerous and virtuous issue, is to reverence and obey our own parents. Wogan.

Chap. XXXVI. ver. 2. — a roll of a book,] Compare Isai. viii. 1; Ezek. ii. 9; Zech. v. 1. The ancient manner of writing was upon long scrolls of parchment, which were afterwards rolled upon sticks. W. Lowth.

—— against Israel, and against Judah,] Jeremiah prophesied against Israel as well as against Judah: see chap. ii. 4; iii. 12, 14, &c.; ix. 26; xxiii. 13; xxxii. 30, 32. The kingdom of Israel indeed had been destroyed by Shalmaneser before the time of Jeremiah: but yet the Prophet was ordered to reprove their sins, both to manifest the justice of God in punishing them so severely, and withal to warn the rest of the Jews by their example. Besides, there were some remains of the ten tribes, who joined themselves to the tribe of Judah. W. Lowth.

3. It may be that the house of Judah will hear &c.] See the like expression, ver. 7; chap. xxvi. 3; Ezek. xii. 3; Amos v. 15; Zeph. ii. 3. In which places God is represented as speaking after the manner of men, and using such methods, as in human probability may be most likely to prevail: compare chap. viii. 6. These and such like expressions do likewise import, that God's foreknowledge of future events doth not put any force upon men's will, nor take away the liberty of human actions, as Origen hath acutely observed. W. Lowth.

5. — I am shut up; I cannot go into the house of the Lord:] I must keep close, upon the command of the Lord, and not stir forth. See chap. xxxvii. 4. Bp. Hall. It is not said, that he was shut up in prison, but barely that he was "shut up," or confined; or, taken in connexion with the following context, under some such confinement or restraint, as precluded him from going to the house of the Lord. This might have been in a variety of ways, without being shut up in prison, a species of persecution which does not appear to have befallen him about this time. Dr. Blayney.

6. — in the ears of the people] The Prophets usually published their declarations in the hearing of the people; see chap. vii. 2; xi. 6; xvii. 20: and they were afterwards delivered in writing for common use. W. Lowth.

—— upon the fasting day:] Rather, "upon a fast day;" (see ver. 9;) a day which had been appointed to be observed as such by all the people, on account, it is supposed, of the city having been taken by Nebuchadnezzar the same day in the preceding year. Dr. Blayney.

10. — in the chamber &c.] Most probably from the window or balcony of it, that looked into the higher court, where the people were gathered together in crowds below. Dr. Blayney.

Before CHRIST about 606.

Shaphan the scribe, in the higher court, at the ‖ [b] entry of the new gate of the LORD's house, in the ears of all the people.

‖ Or, door.

[b] Chap. 26. 10.

11 ¶ When Michaiah the son of Gemariah, the son of Shaphan, had heard out of the book all the words of the LORD,

12 Then he went down into the king's house, into the scribe's chamber: and, lo, all the princes sat there, even Elishama the scribe, and Delaiah the son of Shemaiah, and Elnathan the son of Achbor, and Gemariah the son of Shaphan, and Zedekiah the son of Hananiah, and all the princes.

13 Then Michaiah declared unto them all the words that he had heard, when Baruch read the book in the ears of the people.

14 Therefore all the princes sent Jehudi the son of Nethaniah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Cushi, unto Baruch, saying, Take in thine hand the roll wherein thou hast read in the ears of the people, and come. So Baruch the son of Neriah took the roll in his hand, and came unto them.

15 And they said unto him, Sit down now, and read it in our ears. So Baruch read it in their ears.

16 Now it came to pass, when they had heard all the words, they were afraid both one and other, and said unto Baruch, We will surely tell the king of all these words.

17 And they asked Baruch, saying, Tell us now, How didst thou write all these words at his mouth?

18 Then Baruch answered them, He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth, and I wrote them with ink in the book.

Before CHRIST about 606.

19 Then said the princes unto Baruch, Go, hide thee, thou and Jeremiah; and let no man know where ye be.

20 ¶ And they went in to the king into the court, but they laid up the roll in the chamber of Elishama the scribe, and told all the words in the ears of the king.

21 So the king sent Jehudi to fetch the roll: and he took it out of Elishama the scribe's chamber. And Jehudi read it in the ears of the king, and in the ears of all the princes which stood beside the king.

22 Now the king sat in the winterhouse in the ninth month: and there was a fire on the hearth burning before him.

23 And it came to pass, that when Jehudi had read three or four leaves, he cut it with the penknife, and cast it into the fire that was on the hearth, until all the roll was consumed in the fire that was on the hearth.

24 Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments, neither the king, nor any of his servants that heard all these words.

25 Nevertheless Elnathan and Delaiah and Gemariah had made intercession to the king that he would not burn the roll: but he would not hear them.

26 But the king commanded Jerahmeel the son ‖ of Hammelech, and Seraiah the son of Azriel, and Shelemiah the son of Abdeel, to take Baruch the scribe and Jeremiah the prophet: but the LORD hid them.

‖ Or, of the king.

—— in the higher court,] That part of the court of the people, which was in front of the inner court, was most probably that which is here called "the higher court." Dr. Blayney.

12. —all the princes sat there,] The chief officers of state, who were probably members also of the great Sanhedrim. See chap. xxvi. 10; xxxviii. 4. W. Lowth.

19. Then said the princes unto Baruch, Go, hide thee, thou and Jeremiah;] They thought it their duty to acquaint the king with the matter, ver. 16; yet were unwilling that Jeremiah and Baruch should feel the effects of his displeasure. W. Lowth.

20. And they went in to the king into the court,] They were before in the king's house, ver. 12; that is, in the exterior precincts of the palace, where were apartments and offices fitted up for the principal officers of state, and for the attendants of the court. But from what is here said it appears, that there was an interior range of building for the king's personal residence, disposed, as is the fashion of the great houses of the East at this day, round an open court or quadrangle, and containing apartments appropriated for summer and winter use. Dr. Blayney.

22. —in the winterhouse] There is a distinction made in the Prophets between winter and summer houses, here, and in Amos iii. 15. Probably this may be illustrated by the accounts given by Dr. Shaw of the country seats and gardens about Algiers, whither the inhabitants of better fashion retire during the heat of the summer. Harmer. Or, what the Prophets here say may be understood of the different apartments in the same house. Dr. Russell. See the preceding note.

—— in the ninth month:] Answering to the end of November, and the beginning of December. See the notes on Exod. xii. 2; xiii. 4.

—— there was a fire on the hearth burning before him.] In many parts of the East it is usual to have great brasiers of lighted coals for fires, the manner in which persons sit not allowing them to be near a chimney. This was probably the sort of fire burning before Jehoiakim. Accordingly, in the Latin Vulgate, the word which we render "hearth," is translated by one signifying a little altar. Sir J. Chardin, Dr. Blayney.

23. —three or four leaves,] Their books were made in form of a roll, see ver. 2; and were not divided into leaves or pages as ours are. By "leaves" we are probably to understand the columns, or several partitions, into which the breadth of the parchment was divided. W. Lowth. Or, the different sections of those prophecies, which being delivered at different times, and having a relation to different subjects, have each a proper beginning and ending of its own. Dr. Blayney.

—— the penknife,] The implements for writing were probably lying on the table before the king, ready for the scribe's or secretary's use, in case of there being occasion for writing orders or despatches. Dr. Blayney.

26. —the son of Hammelech,] Or, "of the king," as in the margin: it is the same expression as in 1 Kings xxii. 26. Perhaps he was not son of the reigning king, but one of the blood royal. Dr. Blayney.

—— but the Lord hid them.] By the direction of Providence they were concealed in such a place where they were not discovered. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 605.

27 ¶ Then the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah, after that the king had burned the roll, and the words which Baruch wrote at the mouth of Jeremiah, saying,

28 Take thee again another roll, and write in it all the former words that were in the first roll, which Jehoiakim the king of Judah hath burned.

29 And thou shalt say to Jehoiakim king of Judah, Thus saith the LORD; Thou hast burned this roll, saying, Why hast thou written therein, saying, The king of Babylon shall certainly come and destroy this land, and shall cause to cease from thence man and beast?

30 Therefore thus saith the LORD of Jehoiakim king of Judah; He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David: and his dead body shall be [e] cast out in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost.

31 And I will † punish him and his seed and his servants for their iniquity; and I will bring upon them, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and upon the men of Judah, all the evil that I have pronounced against them; but they hearkened not.

32 ¶ Then took Jeremiah another roll, and gave it to Baruch the scribe, the son of Neriah; who wrote therein from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the book which Jehoiakim king of Judah had burned in the fire: and there were added besides unto them many † like words.

1 The Egyptians having raised the siege of the Chaldeans, king Zedekiah sendeth to Jeremiah to pray for the people. 6 Jeremiah prophesieth the Chaldeans' certain return and victory. 11 He is taken for a fugitive, beaten, and put in prison. 16 He assureth Zedekiah of the captivity. 18 Intreating for his liberty, he obtaineth some favour.

AND king [a] Zedekiah the son of Josiah reigned instead of Coniah the son of Jehoiakim, whom Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon made king in the land of Judah.

Before CHRIST about 599.

2 But neither he, nor his servants, nor the people of the land, did hearken unto the words of the LORD, which he spake † by the prophet Jeremiah.

† Heb. by the hand of the prophet.

3 And Zedekiah the king sent Jehucal the son of Shelemiah and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest to the prophet Jeremiah, saying, Pray now unto the LORD our God for us.

590.

4 Now Jeremiah came in and went out among the people: for they had not put him into prison.

5 Then Pharaoh's army was come forth out of Egypt: and when the Chaldeans that besieged Jerusalem heard tidings of them, they departed from Jerusalem.

6 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto the prophet Jeremiah, saying,

7 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel; Thus shall ye say to the king of Judah, that sent you unto me to enquire of me; Behold, Pharaoh's army, which is come forth to help you, shall return to Egypt into their own land.

8 And the Chaldeans shall come again, and fight against this city, and take it, and burn it with fire.

9 Thus saith the LORD; Deceive not † yourselves, saying, The Chaldeans shall surely depart from us: for they shall not depart.

† Heb. souls.

10 For though ye had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans that fight against you, and there remained but † wounded men among them, yet should they rise up every man in his tent, and burn this city with fire.

† Heb. thrust through.

11 ¶ And it came to pass, that when the army of the Chaldeans was † broken up from Jerusalem for fear of Pharaoh's army,

30. — in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost.] In Syria, and in other parts of the East, it appears from the accounts of various authors, that the nights are as cold and frosty as the days are sultry. Harmer. See the note on Gen. xxxi. 40.

32. — and there were added besides unto them many like words.] And this was all that Jehoiakim got by burning the prophecy of Jeremiah. When Jeremiah and Baruch wrote the second roll, they were directed by God to add to it several things, which were not in the former; aggravations, no doubt, of Jehoiakim's punishment for his impious burning of the first roll. And very just it was, that his doom should be aggravated. For, if every abuse of temporal blessings shall be imputed, as certainly it shall, to wicked men, to augment their reckoning at the last day; much less shall spiritual wantonness and intemperance be overlooked, and escape such imputation. Reading.

Chap. XXXVII. ver. 1. — Zedekiah — whom Nebuchadrezzar — made king] He made him a tributary king, by imposing on him an oath of homage to the king of Babylon. See 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13; Ezek. xvii. 13. W. Lowth.

3. — Jehucal the son of Shelemiah] This man came in the place of Pashur, who, together with Zephaniah, brought the former message from Zedekiah. See the introductory note to chap. xxi. Dr. Blayney.

12. — to separate himself thence in the midst of the people.] He went forth from Jerusalem with the rest of his countrymen, to go into his native place, in the tribe of Benjamin, to live there apart for a time. Bp. Hall.

13. — in the gate of Benjamin,] The gate leading out of Jerusalem towards the country of Benjamin. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST 590. jamin, a captain of the ward was there, whose name was Irijah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Hananiah; and he took Jeremiah the prophet, saying, Thou fallest away to the Chaldeans.

† Heb. falsehood, or, a lie. 14 Then said Jeremiah, It is † false; I fall not away to the Chaldeans. But he hearkened not to him: so Irijah took Jeremiah, and brought him to the princes.

15 Wherefore the princes were wroth with Jeremiah, and smote him, and put him in prison in the house of Jonathan the scribe: for they had made that the prison.

‖ Or, cells. 16 ¶ When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon, and into the ‖ cabins, and Jeremiah had remained there many days;

589. 17 Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took him out: and the king asked him secretly in his house, and said, Is there any word from the LORD? And Jeremiah said, There is: for, said he, thou shalt be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon.

18 Moreover Jeremiah said unto king Zedekiah, What have I offended against thee, or against thy servants, or against this people, that ye have put me in prison?

19 Where are now your prophets which prophesied unto you, saying, The king of Babylon shall not come against you, nor against this land?

† Heb. let my supplication fall. 20 Therefore hear now, I pray thee, O my lord the king: † let my supplication, I pray thee, be accepted before thee; that thou cause me not to return to the house of Jonathan the scribe, lest I die there. Before CHRIST 589.

21 Then Zedekiah the king commanded that they should commit Jeremiah into the court of the prison, and that they should give him daily a piece of bread out of the bakers' street, until all the bread in the city were spent. Thus Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

1 Jeremiah, by a false suggestion, is put into the dungeon of Malchiah. 7 Ebed-melech, by suit, getteth him some enlargement. 14 Upon secret conference he counselleth the king by yielding to save his life. 24 By the king's instructions he concealeth the conference from the princes.

THEN Shephatiah the son of Mattan, and Gedaliah the son of Pashur, and Jucal the son of Shelemiah, and Pashur the son of Malchiah, heard the words that Jeremiah had spoken unto all the people, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD, [a] He that remaineth in this city shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth forth to the Chaldeans shall live; for he shall have his life for a prey, and shall live. [a] Chap. 21. 9.

3 Thus saith the LORD, This city shall surely be given into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which shall take it.

—— Hananiah;] Probably that Hananiah, whose death Jeremiah foretold, chap. xxviii. 17. If so, this descendant of his thought to revenge his grandfather's quarrel. W. Lowth.

15. — for they had made that the prison.] There is nothing extraordinary in making the dwellinghouse of a great man a prison, according to either the ancient or modern manners of the East. See Gen. xxxix. 20. Even in the royal palace itself we find there was a prison, chap. xxxii. 2. Sir John Chardin says, "The Eastern prisons are not public buildings erected for that purpose, but a part of the house in which their criminal judges dwell. As the governour and provost of a town, or the captain of the watch, imprison such as are accused in their own houses, they set apart a canton of it for that purpose, when they are put into these offices, and choose for the jailor the most proper person they can find of their domesticks." Jonathan's house probably became a prison in consequence of his being made a royal scribe, or, as we should term him, secretary of state. Dr. Blayney, Harmer.

16. — into the dungeon, and into the cabins,] Or "cells," as in the margin. The dungeon appears to have been an underground prison with separate cells or apartments for the prisoners. Calmet.

17. — thou shalt be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon.] It is a proof of the firmness and integrity of the Prophet, that he should thus predict the captivity and afflictions of his sovereign; especially at a moment when he had incurred the perilous suspicion of favouring the cause of the enemy. Richards.

20. — lest I die there.] A discretionary power is given to the keeper to treat his prisoners just as he pleases. If he receives large fees, he will treat the accused well: but if he has a greater regard for those who have imprisoned a man, he will treat the prisoner with the greatest inhumanity. This account of Eastern imprisonment gives great force to the supplication of Jeremiah, that he might not be remanded to the house of Jonathan the scribe, lest he should die there. Sir J. Chardin, Harmer.

21. — into the court of the prison,] Not belonging to the house of Jonathan the scribe, where the dungeon was; but the court of the prison in the king's house, mentioned chap. xxxii. 2. Dr. Blayney.

—— the bakers' street,] In ancient times an oven in the East was designed to serve only a single family. "The bakers' street" was perhaps a temporary regulation to supply the wants of the soldiers assembled for the defence of Jerusalem; as at Algiers, according to Dr. Shaw, besides money, the soldiers receive each a number of loaves every day. If so, it was natural for the king to order Jeremiah a piece or cake of bread from thence every day after the same manner. Harmer.

It is here to be noticed, that God protected Jeremiah, and softened the heart of Zedekiah towards him, so that he not only saved him from the dungeon, but fed him likewise, while the siege lasted and the famine prevailed in Jerusalem. Thus Providence sets bounds to the malice of the wicked, delivers the righteous, and causes good men to meet with comfort and assistance in the worst of times. Ostervald.

Chap. XXXVIII. This chapter, with which the four last verses of chap. xxxix. are obviously connected, contains the last transaction, in which Jeremiah was prophetically concerned before the taking of Jerusalem. Dr. Blayney.

of the men of war that remain in this city, and the hands of all the people, in speaking such words unto them: for this man seeketh not the † welfare of this people, but the hurt.

† Heb. peace.

5 Then Zedekiah the king said, Behold, he is in your hand: for the king is not he that can do any thing against you.

6 Then took they Jeremiah, and cast him into the dungeon of Malchiah the son ‖ of Hammelech, that was in the court of the prison: and they let down Jeremiah with cords. And in the dungeon there was no water, but mire: so Jeremiah sunk in the mire.

‖ Or, of the king.

7 ¶ Now when Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, one of the eunuchs which was in the king's house, heard that they had put Jeremiah in the dungeon; the king then sitting in the gate of Benjamin;

8 Ebed-melech went forth out of the king's house, and spake to the king, saying,

9 My lord the king, these men have done evil in all that they have done to Jeremiah the prophet, whom they have cast into the dungeon; and † he is like to die for hunger in the place where he is: for there is no more bread in the city.

† Heb. he will die.

10 Then the king commanded Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Take from hence thirty men † with thee, and take up Jeremiah the prophet out of the dungeon, before he die.

† Heb. in thine hand.

11 So Ebed-melech took the men with him, and went into the house of the king under the treasury, and took thence old cast clouts and old rotten rags, and let them down by cords into the dungeon to Jeremiah.

Before CHRIST 589.

12 And Ebed-melech the Ethiopian said unto Jeremiah, Put now these old cast clouts and rotten rags under thine armholes under the cords. And Jeremiah did so.

13 So they drew up Jeremiah with cords, and took him up out of the dungeon: and Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

14 ¶ Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took Jeremiah the prophet unto him into the ‖ third entry that is in the house of the LORD: and the king said unto Jeremiah, I will ask thee a thing; hide nothing from me.

‖ Or, principal.

15 Then Jeremiah said unto Zedekiah, If I declare it unto thee, wilt thou not surely put me to death? and if I give thee counsel, wilt thou not hearken unto me?

16 So Zedekiah the king sware secretly unto Jeremiah, saying, As the LORD liveth, that made us this soul, I will not put thee to death, neither will I give thee into the hand of these men that seek thy life.

17 Then said Jeremiah unto Zedekiah, Thus saith the LORD, the God of hosts, the God of Israel; If thou wilt assuredly go forth unto the king of Babylon's princes, then thy soul shall live, and this city shall not be burned with fire; and thou shalt live, and thine house:

18 But if thou wilt not go forth to the king of Babylon's princes, then shall this city be given into the hand of the Chal-

Ver. 5.—for the king is not he that can do any thing against you.] The king evidently speaks this in disgust with the princes for endeavouring to frustrate his clemency. He had once rescued Jeremiah out of their hands, and taken him under his royal protection. But his prerogative, he tells them, was likely to avail but little, when opposed by their obstinate and repeated importunities. The power was in reality theirs, and not his. Dr. Blayney.

7.—Ebed-melech the Ethiopian,] Josephus mentions, that Solomon, amongst other merchandise, brought slaves from Ethiopia; which was afterwards the practice of the Greeks and Romans. Such a slave probably Ebed-melech was; called here an eunuch, or officer of the king's house. Compare chap. xxix. 2; xxxiv. 19. In the Hebrew he is called the Cushite. W. Lowth. See the note on Numb. xii. 1.

It is particularly noted that he was an Ethiopian or Cushite, to let us know that this Prophet of the Lord found more kindness from a stranger who was a native heathen, than from his own countrymen. Poole.

——the king then sitting in the gate of Benjamin;] That is, in the publick place of judicature. Bp. Hall. See the notes on Gen. xxiii. 10; Job v. 4.

9.—these men have done evil in all that they have done to Jeremiah] An honourable testimony to the probity of the Prophet's character. Bp. Watson.

——for there is no more bread in the city.] The stores are almost all spent. Poole.

14.—into the third entry] Most probably the farthest part of the passage, leading from the king's house to the altar in the temple, and terminating with the "brasen scaffold," mentioned 2 Chron. vi. 13. To this, as the most retired place, king Zedekiah may have brought the Prophet, to confer with him with the greatest privacy. Dr. Blayney.

15.—If I declare it unto thee, wilt thou not surely put me to death?] The Prophet had so much experience of the unsteadiness of the king's temper, of his backwardness in following good counsel, and want of courage to stand by those that durst advise him well, that he might with good reason resolve not to venture his life to serve a man, that was in a manner incapable of being directed. And although God had shewed him what would be the effect of his advice, if it were followed, (ver. 17,) yet it doth not appear that He had commanded him to make this known to Zedekiah. W. Lowth.

——wilt thou not hearken unto me?] Rather, "thou wilt not hearken to me." The Prophet might well conclude so from his former behaviour, chap. xxxvii. 2. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

17.—then thy soul shall live, &c.] See the notes on chap. iv. 28; xvii. 25.

The advice of Jeremiah clearly proves, that the destruction of Zedekiah was not so determined, but that he might have prevented it. The Divine threatenings and predictions, and God's knowledge of futurity, do not deprive men of their liberty, since the evils, with which they are threatened, are brought on them by their own fault. Ostervald.

deans, and they shall burn it with fire, and thou shalt not escape out of their hand.

19 And Zedekiah the king said unto Jeremiah, I am afraid of the Jews that are fallen to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hand, and they mock me.

20 But Jeremiah said, They shall not deliver thee. Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the LORD, which I speak unto thee: so it shall be well unto thee, and thy soul shall live.

21 But if thou refuse to go forth, this is the word that the LORD hath shewed me:

22 And, behold, all the women that are left in the king of Judah's house shall be brought forth to the king of Babylon's princes, and those women shall say, † Thy friends have set thee on, and have prevailed against thee: thy feet are sunk in the mire, and they are turned away back.

† Heb. Men of thy peace.

23 So they shall bring out all thy wives and thy children to the Chaldeans: and thou shalt not escape out of their hand, but shalt be taken by the hand of the king of Babylon: and † thou shalt cause this city to be burned with fire.

24 ¶ Then said Zedekiah unto Jeremiah, Let no man know of these words, and thou shalt not die.

25 But if the princes hear that I have talked with thee, and they come unto thee, and say unto thee, Declare unto us now what thou hast said unto the king, hide it not from us, and we will not put thee to death; also what the king said unto thee:

26 Then thou shalt say unto them, I presented my supplication before the king, that he would not cause me to return to Jonathan's house, to die there.

Before CHRIST 589.

27 Then came all the princes unto Jeremiah, and asked him: and he told them according to all these words that the king had commanded. So † they left off speaking with him; for the matter was not perceived.

† Heb. they were silent from him.

28 So Jeremiah abode in the court of the prison until the day that Jerusalem was taken: and he was there when Jerusalem was taken.

CHAP. XXXIX.

1 Jerusalem is taken. 4 Zedekiah is made blind, and sent to Babylon. 8 The city ruinated, 9 the people captivated. 11 Nebuchadrezzar's charge for the good usage of Jeremiah. 15 God's promise to Ebed-melech.

IN the [a] ninth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the tenth month, came Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon and all his army against Jerusalem, and they besieged it.

590. [a] 2 Kings 25. 1. ch. 52. 4.

2 And in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, in the fourth month, the ninth day of the month, the city was broken up.

4 ¶ And it came to pass, that when Zedekiah the king of Judah saw them, and all the men of war, then they fled, and went forth out of the city by night, by the way of the king's garden, by the gate betwixt the two walls: and he went out the way of the plain.

22. And, behold, all the women &c.] Thou, that art afraid of the insultings of men that are thy subjects, shalt fall under the insultings and taunts of the women. Poole.

28.—until the day that Jerusalem was taken:] The behaviour of Zedekiah in this transaction is memorable. That prince had a regard for Jeremiah, and even wished to follow his advice: he was moved with what the Prophet had told him, and almost determined to do as he advised: but his fear of the rulers of the people prevented him. Thus do sinners act. When God speaks to them, they are sometimes affected; there are still some remains of good in them, which press them to their duty; but they are hindered from following the dictates of their conscience by a false shame, by their fear of men, and by other the like motives, so that they let slip the favourable opportunity, and, after a long struggling and resistance, they take the worst side and perish. This was the cause of Zedekiah's ruin. The Scripture remarks, that he humbled not himself, when Jeremiah spake unto him in the name of God; and, notwithstanding the solicitations of the Prophet, and the conviction of his own conscience, resolved not to yield to the Chaldeans. The warnings contained in this chapter are the last that God gave him; and, as he neglected to improve them, it was afterwards too late to do so, and he drew upon himself and upon his subjects the utmost miseries, as we find related in the following chapter. Ostervald.

Chap. XXXIX. ver. 2. — the city was broken up.] Such breaches were made in the walls, that the army of the Chaldeans entered. W. Lowth.

3.—in the middle gate,] See the note on Isai. xxii. 1. "The middle gate," or, "the gate of the centre," seems to have been a gate of communication in the middle of the valley between the two parts of the city, sometimes called "the higher" and "the lower city." The Chaldeans entered the city on the north side by a breach in the walls, and immediately rushing forward, and posting themselves in this gate, in the very heart or entrance of the city, they thereby became masters at will of the whole. Zedekiah with his troops, perceiving this, fled out at the opposite gate on the south side. Dr. Blayney.

—— Nergal-sharezer, &c.] As Nergal-sharezer occurs twice, the next word seems to be an addition to the name by way of distinguishing the person. Probably "Samgar," "Rab-saris," and "Rab-mag," were all titles of office; as we find "Rab-tebachim," which we render "captain of the guard," ver. 11; or it might be, "commander in chief of the forces," was the title of Nebuzar-adan. Dr. Blayney.

4.—by the gate betwixt the two walls:] We find mention made of two walls, one exterior to the other, 2 Chron. xxxii. 5. Probably between these two walls might have been a private postern, through which the king and his followers might escape from the besiegers, who surrounded the city, and undoubtedly kept a strict watch at the principal gates. Dr. Blayney.

Before CHRIST 588.

5 But the Chaldeans' army pursued after them, and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho: and when they had taken him, they brought him up to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon to Riblah in the land of Hamath, where he †gave judgment upon him.

† Heb. spake with him judgments.

6 Then the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah in Riblah before his eyes: also the king of Babylon slew all the nobles of Judah.

7 Moreover he put out Zedekiah's eyes, and bound him †with chains, to carry him to Babylon.

† Heb. with two brasen chains, or, fetters.

8 ¶ And the Chaldeans burned the king's house, and the houses of the people, with fire, and brake down the walls of Jerusalem.

‖ Or, chief marshal. † Heb. chief of the executioners, or, slaughtermen: And so ver. 10, 11, &c.

9 Then Nebuzar-adan the ‖†captain of the guard carried away captive into Babylon the remnant of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to him, with the rest of the people that remained.

10 But Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard left of the poor of the people, which had nothing, in the land of Judah, and gave them vineyards and fields †at the same time.

† Heb. in that day.

11 ¶ Now Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon gave charge concerning Jeremiah †to Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard, saying, † Heb. by the hand of.

12 Take him, and †look well to him, and do him no harm; but do unto him even as he shall say unto thee.

† Heb. set thine eyes upon him.

13 So Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard sent, and Nebushasban, Rab-saris, and Nergal-sharezer, Rab-mag, and all the king of Babylon's princes;

Before CHRIST 588.

14 Even they sent, and took Jeremiah out of the court of the prison, and committed him unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, that he should carry him home: so he dwelt among the people.

15 ¶ Now the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah, while he was shut up in the court of the prison, saying,

16 Go and speak to Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring my words upon this city for evil, and not for good; and they shall be accomplished in that day before thee.

17 But I will deliver thee in that day, saith the LORD: and thou shalt not be given into the hand of the men of whom thou art afraid.

18 For I will surely deliver thee, and thou shalt not fall by the sword, but thy life shall be for a prey unto thee: because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the LORD.

5. —in the plains of Jericho:] Compare Josh. v. 10. This is called "the way of the plain" or "wilderness," Josh. viii. 15; and "the plain of the wilderness," 2 Sam. xv. 28; xvii. 16; and elsewhere "the wilderness of Judea;" see Matt. iii. 1. W. Lowth.

—— Riblah] See the note on chap. xlix. 23. Most interpreters suppose this city to be the same which was called Antioch in aftertimes, when it was rebuilt by Seleucus. W. Lowth.

—— where he gave judgment upon him.] Or, "proceeded judicially against him." The Hebrew phrase is literally, "discoursed judgments with him;" and implies all the several steps of a judicial process; as the arraignment, trial, conviction, and condemnation. Zedekiah had sworn allegiance to the king of Babylon, and was therefore liable to be tried and condemned as a rebel and traitor. See 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13; Ezek. xvii. 16, 18. Dr. Blayney.

7. —he put out Zedekiah's eyes, &c.] See the notes on 2 Kings xxv. 7; Jer. xxxiv. 2; and Ezek. xii. 14; also on 1 Sam. xi. 2.

Among capital punishments in Abyssinia may be reckoned the plucking out of the eyes: this is generally inflicted upon rebels: it does not often prove fatal, though performed in the coarsest manner with an iron forceps, or pincers. Xenophon tells us, this was one of the punishments used by Cyrus: and Ammianus Marcellinus mentions, that Sapor king of Persia banished Arsaces, whom he had taken prisoner, to a certain castle, after having pulled out his eyes. Bruce.

9. —the remnant of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away,] Compare 2 Kings xxv. 11. He carried away the fugitives or deserters, that went over to the Chaldeans during the siege, as well as those whom he found in the city when it was taken. W. Lowth.

11. Now Nebuchadrezzar—gave charge &c.] He was informed that the Prophet had exhorted both king and people to submit to his authority; see chap. xxviii. 11; xxxviii. 17, 18: had his advice been listened to, it would have prevented the expense and labour of so long a siege, and the bloodshed which attended it. W. Lowth.

14. —committed him unto Gedaliah] After he had first been carried out of Jerusalem with the rest of the captives, as far as Ramah. See chap. xl. 1—5. W. Lowth.

It is to be observed, that Jeremiah was saved at the taking of Jerusalem; and that Ebed-melech, who had saved the life of Jeremiah, was also himself spared, as God had promised, because he had put his trust in Him. These two are instances of the protection, which God vouchsafes to good men in times of calamity. What happened to Ebed-melech shews in particular, that those, who protect the innocent, and undertake the defence of the oppressed servants of God, receive the reward of their zeal and piety. Osterwald.

Ebed-melech is here again called the Ethiopian, ver. 16, to the reproach of the Jews, that a stranger should shew more kindness to a Prophet of the Lord, than any of that nation to whom he was specially sent. Poole.

2 And the captain of the guard took Jeremiah, and said unto him, The LORD thy God hath pronounced this evil upon this place.

3 Now the LORD hath brought it, and done according as he hath said: because ye have sinned against the LORD, and have not obeyed his voice, therefore this thing is come upon you.

4 And now, behold, I loose thee this day from the chains which were upon thine hand. If it seem good unto thee to come with me into Babylon, come; and † I will look well unto thee: but if it seem ill unto thee to come with me into Babylon, forbear: behold, all the land is before thee: whither it seemeth good and convenient for thee to go, thither go.

† Heb. I will set mine eye upon thee.

5 Now while he was not yet gone back, he said, Go back also to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, whom the king of Babylon hath made governor over the cities of Judah, and dwell with him among the people: or go wheresoever it seemeth convenient unto thee to go. So the captain of the guard gave him victuals and a reward, and let him go.

6 Then went Jeremiah unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam to Mizpah; and dwelt with him among the people that were left in the land.

7 ¶ Now when all the captains of the forces which were in the fields, even they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam governor in the land, and had committed unto him men, and women, and children, and of the poor of the land, of them that were not carried away captive to Babylon;

8 Then they came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan and Jonathan the sons of Kareah, and Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth, and the sons of Ephai the Netophathite, and Jezaniah the son of a Maachathite, they and their men.

Before CHRIST 588.

9 And Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan sware unto them and to their men, saying, Fear not † to serve the Chaldeans: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon, and it shall be well with you.

† Heb. to stand before: And so ver. 10.

10 As for me, behold, I will dwell at Mizpah, to serve the Chaldeans, which will come unto us: but ye, gather ye wine, and summer fruits, and oil, and put them in your vessels, and dwell in your cities that ye have taken.

11 Likewise when all the Jews that were in Moab, and among the Ammonites, and in Edom, and that were in all the countries, heard that the king of Babylon had left a remnant of Judah, and that he had set over them Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan;

12 Even all the Jews returned out of all places whither they were driven, and came to the land of Judah, to Gedaliah, unto Mizpah, and gathered wine and summer fruits very much.

13 ¶ Moreover Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were in the fields, came to Gedaliah to Mizpah,

14 And said unto him, Dost thou certainly know that Baalis the king of the Ammonites hath sent Ishmael the son of Nethaniah † to slay thee? But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam believed them not.

† Heb. to strike thee in soul?

15 Then Johanan the son of Kareah spake to Gedaliah in Mizpah secretly, saying, Let me go, I pray thee, and I will slay Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and no man shall know it: wherefore should he slay thee, that all the Jews which are gathered unto thee should be scattered, and the remnant in Judah perish?

16 But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam said unto Johanan the son of Kareah, Thou shalt not do this thing: for thou speakest falsely of Ishmael.

CHAP. XLI.

1 Ishmael, treacherously killing Gedaliah and others, purposeth with the residue to flee unto the Ammonites. 11 Johanan recovereth the captives, and mindeth to flee into Egypt.

NOW it came to pass in the seventh month, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah the son of Elishama, of the seed royal, and the princes of the king, even ten men with him, came unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam to Mizpah; and there they did eat bread together in Mizpah.

2 Then arose Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and the ten men that were with him, and smote Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan with the sword, and slew him, whom the king of Babylon had made governor over the land.

3 Ishmael also slew all the Jews that were with him, even with Gedaliah, at Mizpah, and the Chaldeans that were found there, and the men of war.

4 And it came to pass the second day after he had slain Gedaliah, and no man knew it,

5 That there came certain from Shechem, from Shiloh, and from Samaria, even fourscore men, having their beards shaven, and their clothes rent, and having cut themselves, with offerings and incense in their hand, to bring them to the house of the LORD.

Before CHRIST 588.

6 And Ishmael the son of Nethaniah went forth from Mizpah to meet them, †weeping all along as he went: and it came to pass, as he met them, he said unto them, Come to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam.

† Heb. in going and weeping.

7 And it was so, when they came into the midst of the city, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah slew them, and cast them into the midst of the pit, he, and the men that were with him.

8 But ten men were found among them that said unto Ishmael, Slay us not: for we have treasures in the field, of wheat, and of barley, and of oil, and of honey. So he forbare, and slew them not among their brethren.

9 Now the pit wherein Ishmael had cast all the dead bodies of the men, whom he had slain ||† because of Gedaliah, was it which Asa the king had made for fear of Baasha king of Israel: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah filled it with them that were slain.

† Heb. by the hand, or, by the side of Gedaliah.

10 Then Ishmael carried away captive all the residue of the people that were in Mizpah, even the king's daughters, and all the people that remained in Mizpah, whom Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had

Chap. XLI. ver. 1. — the seventh month,] Answering partly to our September, and partly to October. The murder of Gedaliah gave occasion to the fast of the seventh month, which the Jews observed after their return from captivity. See Zech. vii. 5; viii. 19. W. Lowth.

3. Ishmael also slew all the Jews that were with him,] That is, all those that joined in opposing Ishmael, and assisting Gedaliah: for several of the commanders, as well as the greatest part of the people, were still left alive, as appears from the sequel of the story, ver. 10, 11. W. Lowth.

5. — having their beards shaven, &c.] These were tokens of great mourning, by which these persons expressed their grief for the destruction of the city and temple. Such expressions of sorrow were forbidden to be used at funeral obsequies; see Levit. xix. 27, 28; but might be lawfully used upon other mournful occasions. W. Lowth. See the note on 2 Sam. x. 4.

—— to bring them to the house of the Lord.] Though the temple was destroyed, it may be presumed that the people continued to offer up sacrifices and offerings on the spot where it stood, as long as they continued in the land; for we find this began to be their practice soon after their return, before the temple was rebuilt. See Ezra iii. 2, 3, &c. Dr. Blayney.

6. — weeping all along as he went:] Counterfeiting a mutual sorrow with them, and expressing it very passionately all the way. Bp. Hall.

8. — Slay us not: for we have treasures in the field,] Intimating, that they would make him master of what they possessed, if he would spare their lives. W. Lowth.

—— of wheat, &c.] In Barbary, when the grain is winnowed, they lodge it in subterraneous repositories: two or three hundred of which are sometimes together, the smallest holding four hundred bushels. Dr. Shaw. These are very common in other parts of the East: as, near Aleppo; Dr. Russell: in Turkey; Sir J. Chardin: in the Holy Land; Le Bruyn and Rauwolf: and in many places the people bury in them, not their corn only, but their wine; Sir J. Chardin: and other effects that are not portable. Hist. of the Piratical States of Barbary. The "treasures in the field" which Jeremiah speaks of, were doubtless laid up in the same kind of repositories. Harmer.

—— of oil,] The modern Greeks keep their oil in large earthen jars, sunk in the ground, in the areas before their houses. Dr. Chandler. The ancient Jews appear to have had the same custom of burying their oil in the earth: this being a time of danger, it is to be supposed that they chose the most unlikely places, where such concealment would be least suspected. Harmer.

9. Now the pit — was it which Asa the king had made] The word, rendered "pit," signifies a bason, cistern, or reservoir; a large pit for receiving rain water, which Asa, who built and fortified Mizpeh at the time he was at war with Baasha king of Israel, (1 Kings xv. 22,) caused to be made in the midst of the city, in order that the people might not be in want of so necessary an article in the case of a siege. Reservoirs of this kind were much in use in Palestine, as St. Jerome tells us in his commentary upon Amos iv. 7, 8. Each private family seems to have had one of these pits or reservoirs for its own use. "Drink ye every one the waters of his own cistern," his pit or reservoir, says Rabshakeh to the people of Jerusalem, Isai. xxxvi. 16. Dr. Blayney.

Before CHRIST 588. committed to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah carried them away captive, and departed to go over to the Ammonites.

11 ¶ But when Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, heard of all the evil that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had done,

12 Then they took all the men, and went to fight with Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and found him by the great waters that are in Gibeon.

13 Now it came to pass, that when all the people which were with Ishmael saw Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, then they were glad.

14 So all the people that Ishmael had carried away captive from Mizpah cast about and returned, and went unto Johanan the son of Kareah.

15 But Ishmael the son of Nethaniah escaped from Johanan with eight men, and went to the Ammonites.

16 Then took Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, all the remnant of the people whom he had recovered from Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, from Mizpah, after that he had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, even mighty men of war, and the women, and the children, and the eunuchs, whom he had brought again from Gibeon:

17 And they departed, and dwelt in the habitation of Chimham, which is by Bethlehem, to go to enter into Egypt,

18 Because of the Chaldeans: for they were afraid of them, because Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, whom the king of Babylon made governor in the land.

CHAP. XLII.

1 Johanan desireth Jeremiah to enquire of God, promising obedience to his will. 7 Jeremiah assureth him of safety in Judea, 13 and destruction in Egypt. 19 He reproveth their hypocrisy, in requiring of the Lord that which they meant not.

THEN all the captains of the forces, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and Jezaniah the son of Hoshaiah, and all the people from the least even unto the greatest, came near, Before CHRIST 588.

2 And said unto Jeremiah the prophet, || Let, we beseech thee, our supplication be accepted before thee, and pray for us unto the LORD thy God, even for all this remnant; (for we are left but a few of many, as thine eyes do behold us:) || Or, Let our supplication fall before thee.

3 That the LORD thy God may shew us the way wherein we may walk, and the thing that we may do.

4 Then Jeremiah the prophet said unto them, I have heard you; behold, I will pray unto the LORD your God according to your words; and it shall come to pass, that whatsoever thing the LORD shall answer you, I will declare it unto you; I will keep nothing back from you.

5 Then they said to Jeremiah, The LORD be a true and faithful witness between us, if we do not even according to all things for the which the LORD thy God shall send thee to us.

6 Whether it be good, or whether it be evil, we will obey the voice of the LORD our God, to whom we send thee; that it may be well with us, when we obey the voice of the LORD our God.

7 ¶ And it came to pass after ten days, that the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah.

8 Then called he Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces which were with him, and all the people from the least even to the greatest,

9 And said unto them, Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, unto whom ye sent me to present your supplication before him;

10 If ye will still abide in this land, then will I build you, and not pull you down, and I will plant you, and not pluck you up: for I repent me of the evil that I have done unto you.

12.—the great waters that are in Gibeon.] Called "the pool" or lake of Gibeon, 2 Sam. ii. 13. Dr. Blayney.

17.—the habitation of Chimham,] A parcel of ground which David had settled upon Chimham, the son of Barzillai, 2 Sam. xix. 38, 40. W. Lowth.

18. Because of the Chaldeans:] They were afraid lest the Chaldeans should impute this insurrection to the whole body of the Jews, that were left in the land, as if they were desirous of restoring the government to the royal family, to which Ishmael belonged, ver. 1. W. Lowth.

Chap. XLII. ver. 3. That the Lord thy God may shew us the way] It is the constant method of hypocrites to pretend a profound submission to the will of God, till it crosses their inclinations or interest. W. Lowth.

6. Whether it be good, or whether it be evil,] Whether it be pleasing to us, or whether it be grievous and displeasing, we will be sure to do it. Bp. Hall.

10.—for I repent me of the evil that I have done unto you.] God is said in Scripture to repent, when He alters the outward methods of His providence. (See the note on Gen. vi. 6.) So the expression here implies a declaration from God, that the punishments the Jews have already undergone have made satisfaction to His justice, as far as concerns this world, and that He will not continue the same severity toward them, unless they give Him a new provocation. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 588.

11 Be not afraid of the king of Babylon, of whom ye are afraid; be not afraid of him, saith the LORD: for I am with you to save you, and to deliver you from his hand.

12 And I will shew mercies unto you, that he may have mercy upon you, and cause you to return to your own land.

13 ¶ But if ye say, We will not dwell in this land, neither obey the voice of the LORD your God,

14 Saying, No; but we will go into the land of Egypt, where we shall see no war, nor hear the sound of the trumpet, nor have hunger of bread; and there will we dwell:

15 And now therefore hear the word of the LORD, ye remnant of Judah; Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; If ye wholly set your faces to enter into Egypt, and go to sojourn there;

16 Then it shall come to pass, that the sword, which ye feared, shall overtake you there in the land of Egypt, and the famine, whereof ye were afraid, † shall follow close after you there in Egypt; and there ye shall die.

† Heb. shall cleave after you.

† Heb. So shall all the men be.

17 † So shall it be with all the men that set their faces to go into Egypt to sojourn there; they shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence: and none of them shall remain or escape from the evil that I will bring upon them.

18 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; As mine anger and my fury hath been poured forth upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem; so shall my fury be poured forth upon you, when ye shall enter into Egypt: and ye shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach; and ye shall see this place no more.

Before CHRIST about 588.

19 ¶ The LORD hath said concerning you, O ye remnant of Judah; Go ye not into Egypt: know certainly that I have † admonished you this day.

† Heb. testified against you.

20 For ‖ ye dissembled in your hearts, when ye sent me unto the LORD your God, saying, Pray for us unto the LORD our God; and according unto all that the LORD our God shall say, so declare unto us, and we will do it.

‖ Or, ye have used deceit against your souls.

21 And now I have this day declared it to you; but ye have not obeyed the voice of the LORD your God, nor any thing for the which he hath sent me unto you.

22 Now therefore know certainly that ye shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, in the place whither ye desire to go and to sojourn.

CHAP. XLIII.

1 Johanan, discrediting Jeremiah's prophecy, carrieth Jeremiah and others into Egypt. 8 Jeremiah prophesieth by a type the conquest of Egypt by the Babylonians.

AND it came to pass, that when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking unto all the people all the words of the LORD their God, for which the LORD their God had sent him to them, even all these words,

2 Then spake Azariah the son of Hoshaiah, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the proud men, saying unto Jeremiah, Thou speakest falsely: the LORD our God hath not sent thee to say, Go not into Egypt to sojourn there:

3 But Baruch the son of Neriah setteth thee on against us, for to deliver us into the hand of the Chaldeans, that they might

---

12. — that he may — cause you to return to your own land.] I will incline the heart of the king of Babylon to take pity on you: see Ps. cvi. 46; and so settle you in your own country, from whence you were driven during the late war and distractions: see chap. xl. 11. W. Lowth.

15. — If ye wholly set your faces to enter into Egypt,] If you are fully resolved to go thither: compare Luke ix. 51. W. Lowth.

16. — the sword, — shall overtake you there] See chap. xliv. 14, 18.

19. The Lord hath said concerning you, O ye remnant of Judah; Go ye not into Egypt:] God commanded the Jews by Moses not to have any commerce with Egypt; see Deut. xvii. 16; that they might not practise the idolatrous customs of that country: see Levit. xviii. 3: with whose idolatries they had been defiled during their sojourning there: see Josh. xxiv. 14; Ezek. xx. 8. Afterwards He often reproved them by His Prophets, for making alliances with Egypt: see Isai. xxx. 2, &c.; Ezek. xvii. 15. There were particular reasons at this time for so severe a prohibition, as the words here and in the context import; namely, because the Jews either learned several of their idolatrous practices from the Egyptians, or at least were confirmed in those evil customs by their example. See chap. xliv. 8, 15; Ezek. xxix. 16. Besides, it was the rival kingdom that contended for empire with the Babylonians. See chap. xxxvii. 5; xlvi. 2. So the Jews going into Egypt for protection was in effect refusing to submit themselves to the king of Babylon, to whom God had decreed the government of Judea, and all the neighbouring countries, chap. xxvii. 6. W. Lowth.

Chap. XLIII. ver. 2. — Azariah the son of Hoshaiah,] Called Jezaniah, chap. xlii. 1. We may observe many like instances in the books of Kings and Chronicles, of the same person being called by different names. W. Lowth.

—— the Lord our God hath not sent thee &c.] The constant method of hypocrites and infidels, who pretend they are not satisfied of the truth of Divine revelation, when the true cause of their unbelief is, that God's commands contradict their own lusts and appetites. W. Lowth.

3. But Baruch the son of Neriah setteth thee on &c.] They would not directly accuse Jeremiah of partiality toward, or confederacy with, the Chaldeans, as his enemies had done formerly, chap. xxxvii. 13; but they lay the blame upon Baruch, whom

Before CHRIST about 588. put us to death, and carry us away captives into Babylon.

4 So Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, and all the people, obeyed not the voice of the LORD, to dwell in the land of Judah.

5 But Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, took all the remnant of Judah, that were returned from all nations, whither they had been driven, to dwell in the land of Judah;

6 Even men, and women, and children, and the king's daughters, and every person that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had left with Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and Jeremiah the prophet, and Baruch the son of Neriah.

7 So they came into the land of Egypt: for they obeyed not the voice of the LORD: thus came they even to Tahpanhes.

8 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah in Tahpanhes, saying,

588. Ending. 9 Take great stones in thine hand, and hide them in the clay in the brickkiln, which is at the entry of Pharaoh's house in Tahpanhes, in the sight of the men of Judah;

10 And say unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will send and take Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, my servant, and will set his throne upon these stones that I have hid; and he shall spread his royal pavilion over them. Before CHRIST about 588.

11 And when he cometh, he shall smite the land of Egypt, and deliver [a] such as are for death to death; and such as are for captivity to captivity; and such as are for the sword to the sword. [a] Chap. 15. 2. Zech. 11. 9.

12 And I will kindle a fire in the houses of the gods of Egypt; and he shall burn them, and carry them away captives: and he shall array himself with the land of Egypt, as a shepherd putteth on his garment; and he shall go forth from thence in peace.

13 He shall break also the † images of ‖ Beth-shemesh, that is in the land of Egypt; and the houses of the gods of the Egyptians shall he burn with fire. † Heb. statues, or, standing images. ‖ Or, the house of the sun.

CHAP. XLIV.

1 Jeremiah expresseth the desolation of Judah for their idolatry. 11 He prophesieth their destruction, who commit idolatry in Egypt. 15 The obstinacy of the Jews. 20 Jeremiah threateneth them for the same, 29 and for a sign prophesieth the destruction of Egypt.

THE word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the Jews which dwell in the land of Egypt, which dwell at Migdol, and at Tahpanhes, and at Noph, and in the country of Pathros, saying, 587.

they knew to be an intimate companion of Jeremiah's, and to have been kindly used by the Chaldeans upon Jeremiah's account. W. Lowth.

7. — Tahpanhes.] That is, Daphnæ Pelusiacæ. See note on chap. ii. 16. Dr. Blayney. It was one of the principal cities of Egypt, and a place of residence for their kings: see below, ver. 9. The word is contracted to Hanes, Isai. xxx. 4; and joined to Zoan, a principal city of the kingdom. W. Lowth.

9. — in the brickkiln, which is at the entry of Pharaoh's house] The bricks, in those hot and dry countries, are in general only dried in the sun, not burnt. There must therefore be many places for making bricks, where there are no kilns; and such a place probably the word, here translated "brickkiln," signifies. The smoke of the brickkiln would not have agreed well with the Egyptian cleanliness, or the magnificence of a royal palace. Harmer.

Or, the word probably means an area paved with brick or tile, a bricked area. Parkhurst.

—— in the sight of the men of Judah;] Rather indefinitely, "of some men of Judah." Dr. Blayney.

12. And I will kindle a fire] The same phrase occurs in several other passages of this Prophet, chap. xvii. 27; xxi. 14; xlix. 27; l. 32: in all which God speaks of Himself as the Agent or prime Mover; as He does here, no doubt with design to inculcate this necessary and important lesson, that in all that is performed here below, both the plan is His, and the power of carrying it into execution, whatever other instruments He may choose to employ as the subordinate ministers of His providence. The other verbs which follow, are to be referred to Nebuchadnezzar, as acting under the Divine commission and authority. Dr. Blayney.

—— in the houses of the gods of Egypt;] When God punisheth an heathen nation, as idolatry is one of the principal sins, for which He visits, so He in a remarkable manner executes His vengeance upon their idols; who can neither save themselves, nor their worshippers: see chap. xlvi. 25; xlviii. 7; l. 2; li. 44; Exod. xii. 12; Isai. xix. 1; xxi. 9; xlvi. 1. W. Lowth.

—— he shall array himself with the land of Egypt,] This expression seems to denote, that he would appropriate to himself, and carry off the riches of the land of Egypt; or, as we say, load himself with the spoils of it, and go off as quietly as a shepherd wraps his garment about him, and goes about his business. See Ezek. xxix. 19. Dr. Blayney.

13. — Beth-shemesh, that is in the land of Egypt;] The same as On, or Heliopolis, Gen. xli. 45. Heliopolis was the Greek translation of "Beth-shemesh," the house, or city of the sun: called by Jeremiah "Beth-shemesh in the land of Egypt," to distinguish it from another Beth-shemesh in the land of Canaan. This city was probably near the royal city Zoan, and only fifteen stadia, or something less than two miles from the sea, according to Herodotus. Dr. Hales.

Chap. XLIV. ver. 1. — Migdol, &c.] Migdol is mentioned, Exod. xiv. 2, as situate near the Red sea. But I do not take this to be the place intended. "Migdol" properly signifies a tower; and may in all probability have been given as a name to different cities in Egypt, where there was a distinguished object of that kind. The city of Magdolus is mentioned by Herodotus, Hecatæus, and others, and placed by Antoninus at the entrance of Egypt from Palestine, about twelve miles from Pelusium. This was too far distant from the Red sea to be in the route of the Israelites; but its distance from Judea favours the supposition of its being the "Migdol" here spoken of. For then, as Bochart observes, we shall find the four places mentioned exactly in the order of their respective distances from that country; first Migdol, or Magdolus; secondly, Tahpanhes, Daphnæ; thirdly, Noph, or Memphis; and lastly, the district of Pathros, or Thebais. Dr. Blayney.

Before CHRIST 587.

2 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Ye have seen all the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, and upon all the cities of Judah; and, behold, this day they are a desolation, and no man dwelleth therein,

3 Because of their wickedness which they have committed to provoke me to anger, in that they went to burn incense, and to serve other gods, whom they knew not, neither they, ye, nor your fathers.

4 Howbeit I sent unto you all my servants the prophets, rising early and sending them, saying, Oh, do not this abominable thing that I hate.

5 But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear to turn from their wickedness, to burn no incense unto other gods.

6 Wherefore my fury and mine anger was poured forth, and was kindled in the cities of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem; and they are wasted and desolate, as at this day.

7 Therefore now thus saith the LORD, the God of hosts, the God of Israel; Wherefore commit ye this great evil against your souls, to cut off from you man and woman, child and suckling, † out of Judah, to leave you none to remain;

† Heb. out of the midst of Judah.

8 In that ye provoke me unto wrath with the works of your hands, burning incense unto other gods in the land of Egypt, whither ye be gone to dwell, that ye might cut yourselves off, and that ye might be a curse and a reproach among all the nations of the earth?

† Heb. wickednesses, or, punishments, &c.

[a] Amos 9. 4.

12 And I will take the remnant of Judah, that have set their faces to go into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, and they shall all be consumed, and fall in the land of Egypt; they shall even be consumed by the sword and by the famine: they shall die, from the least even unto the greatest, by the sword and by the famine: and they shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach.

13 For I will punish them that dwell in the land of Egypt, as I have punished Jerusalem, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence:

14 So that none of the remnant of Judah, which are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall escape or remain, that they should return into the land of Judah, to the which they † have a desire to return to dwell there: for none shall return but such as shall escape.

† Heb. lift up their soul.

15 ¶ Then all the men which knew that their wives had burned incense unto other gods, and all the women that stood by, a great multitude, even all the people that dwelt in the land of Egypt, in Pathros, answered Jeremiah, saying,

16 As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the LORD, we will not hearken unto thee.

17 But we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth, to burn incense unto the ‖ [b] queen of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings unto her, as we have done, we, and our fathers, our kings, and our princes, in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem: for then had we plenty of † victuals, and were well, and saw no evil.

2. — and no man dwelleth therein,] It is not to be supposed, that the country was abandoned to such a degree, that there was not a single inhabitant left in it. But there were so few, that they might be reckoned as none. Calmet.

14. So that none of the remnant of Judah, &c.] It is evident from ver. 28, that some Jews were to escape the general destruction in Egypt, and to return into their own country, although but a few; and the same thing is implied in the latter sentence of this verse. But the former part of this verse excludes out of the number of those who escaped every individual of those that were called properly "the remnant of Judah," those that had set their faces to enter Egypt, to sojourn there, in opposition to the express command of God, upon a presumption that they knew better than God how to consult their own restoration. The few then who were destined to escape, and to return back to the land of Judah, were to be such as had come into the land of Egypt in a less offensive manner, and chanced to be there when the storm burst upon them. Dr. Blayney.

15. — in the land of Egypt, in Pathros,] The Upper Egypt, or Thebaid, seems to be called Pathros in Scripture, as distinguished from the Lower, properly called Caphtor, or Egypt. Dr. Hales.

17. — to pour out drink offerings unto her,] It is the custom in Mingrelia and Georgia, and some other Eastern countries, for people, before they begin a feast, to go out abroad, and, with eyes turned to heaven, to pour out a cup of wine on the ground. Sir J. Chardin. This may be considered as a picture of what the idolatrous Israelites did, when they poured out drink offerings to the queen of heaven. Harmer.

——for then had we plenty of victuals, &c.] They compare their former condition before the invasion of Judea, and the siege

Before CHRIST 587.

18 But since we left off to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings unto her, we have wanted all things, and have been consumed by the sword and by the famine.

20 ¶ Then Jeremiah said unto all the people, to the men, and to the women, and to all the people which had given him that answer, saying,

21 The incense that ye burned in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, ye, and your fathers, your kings, and your princes, and the people of the land, did not the LORD remember them, and came it not into his mind?

22 So that the LORD could no longer bear, because of the evil of your doings, and because of the abominations which ye have committed; therefore is your land a desolation, and an astonishment, and a curse, without an inhabitant, as at this day.

23 Because ye have burned incense, and because ye have sinned against the LORD, and have not obeyed the voice of the LORD, nor walked in his law, nor in his statutes, nor in his testimonies; therefore this evil is happened unto you, as at this day.

24 Moreover Jeremiah said unto all the people, and to all the women, Hear the word of the LORD, all Judah that are in the land of Egypt:

25 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying; Ye and your wives have both spoken with your mouths, and fulfilled with your hand, saying, We will surely perform our vows that we have vowed, to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings unto her: ye will surely accomplish your vows, and surely perform your vows.

Before CHRIST 587.

26 Therefore hear ye the word of the LORD, all Judah that dwell in the land of Egypt; Behold, I have sworn by my great name, saith the LORD, that my name shall no more be named in the mouth of any man of Judah in all the land of Egypt, saying, The Lord GOD liveth.

27 Behold, I will watch over them for evil, and not for good: and all the men of Judah that are in the land of Egypt shall be consumed by the sword and by the famine, until there be an end of them.

28 Yet a small number that escape the sword shall return out of the land of Egypt into the land of Judah, and all the remnant of Judah, that are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall know whose words shall stand, † mine, or their's.

† Heb. from me, or from them.

29 ¶ And this shall be a sign unto you, saith the LORD, that I will punish you in this place, that ye may know that my words shall surely stand against you for evil: 589.

30 Thus saith the LORD; Behold, I will give Pharaoh-hophra king of Egypt into the hand of his enemies, and into the hand of them that seek his life; as I gave Zedekiah king of Judah into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, his enemy, and that sought his life.

of Jerusalem, with their present state: and argue from the fallacious topick of worldly prosperity, that then they must needs have been in the right. W. Lowth.

19. And when we burned incense &c.] These are the words of the women, who were the most zealous promoters of this idolatry: see ver. 15. W. Lowth.

—— without our men?] By the law of Moses, the men had an independent power of binding themselves by any religious vow or obligation; but the vows of the women were not binding, without the knowledge and consent of their fathers and husbands; but, if the father or husband knew of the vow, and did not signify his dissent at the time, his consent was presumed, and the vow stood firm and irrevocable, Numb. xxx. 1—16. This appeal therefore to the concurrence of their men must be considered as coming from the female part of the assembly only, who thereby appear to declare, that, since they were thus authorized by those, who alone had a legal right to control them, they should not submit to any other restraint upon their inclination. Dr. Blayney.

22. So that the Lord could no longer bear, &c.] God's patience is elsewhere said to be wearied out by men's continued provocations: see Isai. vii. 13; xliii. 24; Mal. ii. 17. W. Lowth.

26. — my name shall no more be named &c.] These Jews seem to have joined the worship of the true God with that of idols, as the Samaritans did before them, 2 Kings xvii. 33. Thereupon God declares, He will not receive any such polluted worship at their hands; (compare Ezek. xx. 39;) nor suffer His name any longer to be profaned by such hypocrites, but will consume them by a sudden and general destruction; or will deliver them up to impenitence and utter apostasy. W. Lowth.

30. — I will give Pharaoh-hophra — into the hand of his enemies, &c.] Pharaoh was a common name to all the kings of Egypt. As the predecessor of this king was called Pharaoh-nechoh, by way of distinction, 2 Kings xxiii. 29; so this king was called Pharaoh-hophra, or Apries, as Herodotus calls him. W. Lowth. Ezekiel represents him as an arrogant impious prince, as "the great dragon" or crocodile, "that lieth in the midst of his rivers, which hath said, My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself," Ezek. xxix. 3: and agreeably to this, Herodotus informs us that Apries proudly and wickedly boasted of "having established his kingdom so surely, that it was not in the power of any god to dispossess him of it." However, Jeremiah here foretold, that he should be taken and slain by his enemies: and accordingly he was taken and strangled by Amasis, who was by Nebuchadnezzar constituted king in his room. Bp. Newton.

THE word that Jeremiah the prophet spake unto Baruch the son of Neriah, when he had written these words in a book at the mouth of Jeremiah, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, unto thee, O Baruch;

3 Thou didst say, Woe is me now! for the LORD hath added grief to my sorrow; I fainted in my sighing, and I find no rest.

4 ¶ Thus shalt thou say unto him, The LORD saith thus; Behold, that which I have built will I break down, and that which I have planted I will pluck up, even this whole land.

5 And seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not: for, behold, I will bring evil upon all flesh, saith the LORD: but thy life will I give unto thee [a] for a prey in all places whither thou goest.

THE word of the LORD which came to Jeremiah the prophet against the Gentiles; collection of all those dreadful threatenings, which God had denounced by his mouth. This seems to have alarmed his fears to such a degree, that God thought proper to reassure him by letting him know, that, though amidst the general calamities of his country, he ought not to look for any great prosperity for himself, yet in consideration of his services his own life should be preserved to him by an especial providence in all places, whither it might be his lot to go. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 3. —the Lord hath added grief to my sorrow;] The sorrow, which I felt for the threatenings denounced against my country and religion, is increased by my own troubles, being sought after by the king's command in order to be put to death. See chap. xxxvi. 26. W. Lowth.

4. —that which I have built will I break down, &c.] The land and people, which have so long flourished under the peculiar care of My providence, I resolve now to give up to utter destruction: compare Chap. xxxi. 28. W. Lowth.

Chap. XLVI. ver. 1. The word of the Lord &c.] This verse is a general title to the collection of prophecies, contained in this and the five following chapters. The nations spoken of are the same as those of which an enumeration is made, chap. xxv. 19—26. These prophecies were not delivered all at the same time. To some the date is annexed: in others it is left uncertain. Dr. Blayney.

The difference of style between the following prophecies and the preceding is remarkable. Abp. Secker.

2. Against Egypt,] In this chapter are two distinct prophecies concerning Egypt. The first appears to have been delivered at the time that the Egyptian army lay along the banks of the Euphrates, waiting to oppose the entrance of Nebuchadnezzar into Syria, in the fourth year of the reign of Jehoiakim king of Judah. The two armies came to an engagement near the city of Carchemish, the same which Pharaoh-necho was going against when he was opposed by king Josiah, 2 Chron. xxxv. 20; (see the note there.) The event of the battle proved very unfortunate to the Egyptians, who were routed with a prodigious slaughter; as is here foretold by the Prophet in a very animated style, and with great poetick energy and liveliness of colouring. In the third and fourth verses, the mighty preparations of the Egyptians for war are described; which occasions the Prophet, who foresees the defeat, to express his astonishment at an event so contrary to what might have been expected; but he accounts for it by ascribing it to the disposition of the Almighty, who had spread terrour all around, and had decreed that neither swiftness nor strength should avail the owners, so as to save them from the impending overthrow, ver. 5, 6. In the verses that follow next, the king of Egypt is represented as beginning his march with all the ostentation and insolence of presumed success. He is compared to a mighty river, the Nile or the Euphrates, when it swells above its banks, and threatens to overwhelm the country with ruin and desolation, ver. 7, 8. He is heard calling aloud to the nations of which his army is composed, giving them the signal for action, and rousing them to deeds of desperate valour, ver. 9. But all in vain; the time is come for God to avenge Himself of His ancient foes; they are doomed to slaughter, to fall a bloody sacrifice on the plains of the north, ver. 10. The whole concludes with an apostrophe to the daughter of Egypt, whose wound is pronounced incurable, and her disgrace universally known; forasmuch as the number of her warriours have served only to augment the general disorder, and more effectually to destroy each other. Dr. Blayney.

4. —the brigandines.] Their coats of mail. Dr. Johnson.

5. —for fear was round about, saith the Lord.] These words ought rather to be connected with the following, which being spoken imperatively, can only be understood as coming from the mouth of God. "Fear" seems to be put for danger. So that the words taken altogether imply, that from the danger which surrounded them on all sides, it was the Divine decree, that neither the swift should escape by flight, nor the strong be able to extricate himself by any exertions of valour. Dr. Blayney.

Before CHRIST about 607.

19 O thou daughter dwelling in Egypt, † furnish thyself to go into captivity: for Noph shall be waste and desolate without an inhabitant.

† Heb. make thee instruments of captivity.

20 Egypt is like a very fair heifer, but destruction cometh; it cometh out of the north.

---

8. — I will destroy the city] Not any particular city, perhaps, but rather indefinitely the cities of the land, which the king of Egypt, under the figure of a river, was to overflow. Dr. Blayney.

9. — the Ethiopians and the Libyans, — the Lydians,] The original words are Cush, Phut, and Lud: and the three nations were allies of Egypt, as they are also represented, Ezek. xxx. 5. By the first are probably to be understood in this place chiefly the Arabians, who bordered on Egypt near the Red sea, and who are closely connected with the Egyptians, Isai. xx. 3—5. As these lay to the east, so by Phut the Libyans were most probably intended, who lay west of Egypt. Bochart supposes the Ludim (or Lydians) to be Ethiopians: and that the Ethiopians were famous for the use of the bow, we may learn from Herodotus, who says that they had bows four cubits long. Dr. Blayney.

10. For this is the day of the Lord God of hosts,] "The day of the Lord" often signifies the day of His vengeance: see Isai. xiii. 6; Joel i. 15; ii. 1; Amos v. 18; Zeph. i. 14, 15: whence it signifies in the New Testament the day of judgment, of which all other days of vengeance are the earnests and forerunners. W. Lowth.

——for the Lord — hath a sacrifice] The slaughter of men is called a sacrifice, because it makes some kind of satisfaction and atonement to God's justice, Isai. xxxiv. 6; Ezek. xxxix. 17; Zeph. i. 7. W. Lowth.

11. — in vain shalt thou use many medicines;] The destruction of the state is represented as an incurable sickness, with a sarcastick allusion to the medical skill, for which the Egyptians were distinguished. W. Lowth, Bp. Warburton.

13. The word that the Lord spake &c.] There appears no ground for ascertaining the time when this second prophecy was delivered; but the desolation foretold in it is undoubtedly the same which Ezekiel has predicted, chap. xxix—xxxii. And this came to pass in the twenty-seventh year of Jehoiakim's captivity, (that is, the sixteenth after the destruction of Jerusalem,) as may be collected from Ezek. xxix. 17; where Nebuchadnezzar's army is spoken of, as having at that time suffered a great deal in the siege of Tyre; on which account the spoils of Egypt are promised them for their wages and indemnification; and the promise was made good accordingly that same year. Dr. Blayney.

For this early transaction we have the testimonies of Megasthenes and Berosus, two heathen historians, who lived about 300 years before Christ; one of whom affirms expressly, that Nebuchadnezzar conquered the greatest part of Africa; and the other affirms it in effect, by saying, that when Nebuchadnezzar heard of the death of his father, having settled his affairs in Egypt, and committed the captains, whom he took in Egypt, to the care of some of his friends to bring them after him, he hasted directly to Babylon. Josephus, we may presume, had good authorities, and was supported by earlier historians, when he asserted, that Nebuchadnezzar, having subdued Cœle-Syria, waged war against the Ammonites and Moabites, and having conquered them, he invaded Egypt, and slew the king who then reigned, and appointed another. Bp. Newton.

14. — Migdol, &c.] See the note on chap. xliv. 1.

16. — and they said, Arise, &c.] The words of the allies of the Egyptians: see ver. 9, 21. W. Lowth.

18. — Surely as Tabor is among the mountains, &c.] Some think the expression compares Nebuchadnezzar, a lofty and aspiring conqueror, to Tabor and Carmel, two of the highest mountains of Judea. Others understand it thus, He will as surely come as that part of Judea which is joined to Tabor is enclosed with mountains; and as Carmel is encompassed by the sea: see 1 Kings xviii. 42, 43. W. Lowth.

19. O thou daughter dwelling in Egypt,] Compare chap. xlviii. 18. Countries and cities are usually compared to women, such representations being very common, particularly on medals. W. Lowth.

20. Egypt is like a very fair heifer,] In the foregoing verse the Prophet compared Egypt to a delicate young woman; here he resembles her to a beautiful and well favoured heifer: compare chap. l. 11. In which comparison, as Grotius not improbably conjectures, there is an allusion to their god Apis, who was a bull remarkable for his beauty, and the fine spots or marks he had about him. W. Lowth.

The Prophet delights in that kind of imagery which marks out a people by its singularities. The worship of Isis and Osiris, under the figure of a cow and a bull, was the most celebrated in all the Egyptian ritual. Bp. Warburton.

Before CHRIST about 607.

21 Also her hired men are in the midst of her like †fatted bullocks; for they also are turned back, and are fled away together: they did not stand, because the day of their calamity was come upon them, and the time of their visitation.

† Heb. bullocks of the stall.

22 The voice thereof shall go like a serpent; for they shall march with an army, and come against her with axes, as hewers of wood.

23 They shall cut down her forest, saith the LORD, though it cannot be searched; because they are more than the grashoppers, and are innumerable.

24 The daughter of Egypt shall be confounded; she shall be delivered into the hand of the people of the north.

25 The LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saith; Behold, I will punish the ‖ †multitude of No, and Pharaoh, and Egypt, with their gods, and their kings; even Pharaoh, and all them that trust in him:

† Heb. Amon.

26 And I will deliver them into the hand of those that seek their lives, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of his servants: and afterward it shall be inhabited, as in the days of old, saith the LORD.

Before CHRIST about 607.

28 Fear thou not, O Jacob my servant, saith the LORD: for I am with thee; for I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee: but I will not make [b] a full end of thee, but correct thee in measure; yet will I ‖ not leave thee wholly unpunished.

The destruction of the Philistines.

THE word of the LORD that came to Jeremiah the prophet against the Philistines, before that Pharaoh smote †Gaza.

about 600.
† Heb. Azzah.

2 Thus saith the LORD; Behold, [a] waters rise up out of the north, and shall be an overflowing flood, and shall overflow the land, and †all that is therein; the city, and them that dwell therein: then the men shall cry, and all the inhabitants of the land shall howl.

22. The voice thereof shall go like a serpent;] They shall not shout like conquerors, but make a feeble noise like the hissing of a serpent when it is pursued: and shall speak in a very submissive and humble tone. W. Lowth.

——for they shall march with an army,] They, that is, the Chaldeans, to whom the Lord gave the command to go against Egypt, and cut down her forest. By "her forest" may be understood, either her people, or her cities; both of which were very numerous: the latter amounting to no less than one thousand and twenty in those times, as Grotius reckons. Dr. Blayney.

23. — though it cannot be searched;] Though the trees or cities be so many that they are past numbering. Bp. Hall.

—— because they are more than the grashoppers,] Armies are often compared to grashoppers, and such insects, both for their multitudes, and because they make a great consumption. See Judg. vi. 5; vii. 12; Joel ii. 4, 5. W. Lowth.

25. — the multitude of No,] The words may be literally and correctly rendered, "Amon of No." See the margin. Amon was the name by which the Egyptians called Jupiter; who had a famous temple at Thebes, and was worshipped there in a distinguished manner: on which account the city was called Diospolis. If "No" therefore be Thebes, or Diospolis, then "Amon of No" signifies the deity of the place, the Theban Jupiter, as Herodotus styles him. As, on the other hand, in Nahum iii. 8, we should read "No of Amon:" which corresponds with the Greek name Diospolis. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

When an idolatrous nation is doomed to destruction, God is said to execute vengeance upon the idols of the country; see chap. xliii. 12, 13. Accordingly Amon of No, the principal deity, and Pharaoh, the principal man among the Egyptians, are marked out in the first place as the primary objects of Divine visitation; then follow in the gross Egypt and all her gods, and all her kings; which latter term is explained to include both Pharaoh and those subordinate rulers who were dependent upon him for the rank and authority they held. Dr. Blayney.

26. — afterward it shall be inhabited, as in the days of old,] At the end of forty years Egypt was to begin to recover itself, as Ezekiel foretells, chap. xxix. 13. Dr. Blayney.

28. Fear thou not, O Jacob: — for I will make a full end of all the nations: — but I will not make a full end of thee,] See the note from Bp. Horne on chap. xxx. 11.

Chap. XLVII. ver. 1. — against the Philistines,] Among the other nations doomed to suffer by the hostilities of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, the Philistines are enumerated, chap. xxv. 20: and the calamities foretold in this present chapter most probably befell them during the long siege of Tyre, when Nebuchadnezzar ravaged their country, in order, as it is said ver. 4, to cut off from Tyre and Zidon all chance of assistance from that quarter. But as no history, sacred or profane, has, to my knowledge, mentioned the taking of Gaza by the king of Egypt, there is no means of ascertaining the precise date of the delivery of this prophecy. Dr. Blayney.

2. — Behold, waters rise up out of the north,] Behold, the Chaldeans arise out of the north like mighty waters; and with their swelling flood shall overflow the land of the Philistines. Bp. Hall.

3. — the fathers shall not look back to their children &c.] They shall shew no concern for the safety of their children: but they shall be so dismayed and dispirited, as to be scarce able to save themselves. W. Lowth.

4. — to cut off from Tyrus and Zidon &c.] The siege of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, which lasted thirteen years, was an action famous in the history of that age. See Ezek. xxvii, xxviii. Zidon partook of the same fate as Tyre, both in prosperity and in adversity: see Isai. xxiii. 2, 4. And her destruction is joined with that of Tyre by Ezekiel, chap. xxviii. W. Lowth.

AGAINST Moab thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Woe unto Nebo! for it is spoiled: Kiriathaim is confounded and taken: ‖ Misgab is confounded and dismayed.

Before CHRIST about 600.

‖ Or, the high place.

2 There shall be no more praise of Moab: in Heshbon they have devised evil against it; come, and let us cut it off from being a nation. Also thou shalt ‖ be cut down, O Madmen; the sword shall † pursue thee.

‖ Or, be brought to silence.

† Heb. go after thee.

3 A voice of crying shall be from Horonaim, spoiling and great destruction.

4 Moab is destroyed; her little ones have caused a cry to be heard.

5 For in the going up of Luhith † [a] continual weeping shall go up; for in the going down of Horonaim the enemies have heard a cry of destruction.

7 ¶ For because thou hast trusted in thy works and in thy treasures, thou shalt also be taken: and Chemosh shall go forth into captivity with his [c] priests and his princes together.

[c] Chap. 49. 3.

—— the remnant of the country of Caphtor.] The Caphtorim, as well as the Philistim, are said to have been descended from Mizraim, the father of the Egyptians; see Gen. x. 14. They expelled the Avim from that part of Philistia which is contiguous to Gaza, and fixed themselves there, Deut. ii. 23: on which account the country was afterwards called "the country of Caphtor." "The remnant of the country of Caphtor" is therefore to be understood of the few that remained out of a great number that formerly dwelt in that part of Philistia. Dr. Blayney.

5. Baldness is come upon Gaza;] The Prophet alludes to the custom which prevailed among men in those times, of shaving their heads and cutting their flesh under great calamities. See chap. xli. 5; xlviii. 37. W. Lowth. See the notes on Lev. xix. 28; Deut. xiv. 1.

—— with the remnant of their valley:] Gaza and Ashkelon are situated about twelve miles distant from each other, near the sea, in a valley of great beauty and fertility. Dr. Blayney.

6. O thou sword of the Lord, &c.] Personification, conducted with dignity and propriety, may be justly esteemed one of the greatest efforts of the creative powers of a warm and lively imagination. Of this figure many illustrious examples may be produced from the Jewish writers, among whom every part and object of nature is animated, and endowed with sense, with passion, and with language. To say that the lightning obeyed the commands of God, would of itself be sufficiently sublime: but in the book of Job this idea is expressed with far greater energy and life; "Canst thou send lightnings, that they may go, and say unto thee, Here we are?" Job xxxviii. 35. How animated, how emphatical is this unexpected answer, "Here we are!" When Jehovah is represented as descending to punish the earth in His just anger, it is added, "Before Him went the pestilence," Hab. iii. 5. When the Babylonian tyrant is destroyed, "the fir trees rejoice at his fall, and the cedars of Lebanon, saying, Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us," Isai. xiv. 8. And at the captivity of Jerusalem, the very ramparts and the walls lament, "they languish together," Lam. ii. 8. So also it is impossible to read the address of the Prophet, in the text without emotion at the perusal: "O thou sword of the Lord, how long will it be ere thou be quiet? put up thyself into thy scabbard, rest, and be still." Who can without amazement and delight behold joy, and anguish, and revenge, thus ascribed to the trees of the forest, to walls, and warlike instruments? Dr. Jos. Warton. Concerning the "sword of the Lord," figuratively denoting His vengeance, compare Deut. xxxii. 41; Isai. xxxiv. 5; and see also Ezek. xxv. 16.

Chap. XLVIII. ver. 1. Against Moab] The following prophecies concerning the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, and other neighbouring nations, are supposed to have been fulfilled about the same time with that concerning the Philistines in the preceding chapter; namely, during the siege of Tyre.

Many passages and expressions will be found in this chapter, which Jeremiah hath borrowed from a prophecy of Isaiah, chap. xv, and xvi, concerning a like calamity which befell Moab, in all probability when Shalmaneser king of Assyria seized upon their cities and fortresses, and ravaged their country, on his march through it to invade the kingdom of Israel. By comparing the parallel places much light may be mutually thrown upon them. Dr. Blayney.

—— Nebo! — Kiriathaim] Two cities of Moab: see Isai. xv. 2; Numb. xxxii. 37; xxxiii. 47. The latter of these was given by Moses to the Reubenites, as appears by Josh. xiii. 10; but the Moabites afterwards recovered the possession of it, as they did Dibon, Sibma, and other places: compare those texts in Numbers and Joshua, with Isaiah xv. 2; xvi. 8, 9; and the twenty-first and the following verses of this chapter. W. Lowth.

—— Misgab] No such city of Moab is any where mentioned. It should probably be rendered "the high place," as in the margin, or "the high fortress:" either Kiriathaim before mentioned, or some other fortress of Moab. Dr. Blayney.

2. —in Heshbon they have devised evil against it; &c] The like ruin shall befall the rest of the Moabitish cities, Heshbon and Madmena: the Chaldeans have resolved and threatened to cut off Moab as a nation. Bp. Hall.

5. For in the going up of Luhith &c.] In the mountains and valleys shall be nothing but howling and desolation; while the Moabites climb up the hill to the high-seated city of Luhith, and while they pass down to the plain of Horonaim. Bp. Hall. At Luhith the hill country of Moab appears to have begun; and here the people are represented as mounting the hill successively in their flight before the enemy, weeping as they follow one another. At Horonaim they descended again into the plain. Dr. Blayney.

6. — be like the heath in the wilderness.] Or, like "a blasted," or "naked tree," as in the margin: that is, a tree stripped of its foliage. A proper emblem of one robbed of all his fortune, and just able to escape with life by fleeing into the desert. Dr. Blayney.

7. — Chemosh shall go forth into captivity] The idol of the Moabites, Numb. xxi. 29. See the note on chap. xliii. 12. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 600.

8 And the spoiler shall come upon every city, and no city shall escape: the valley also shall perish, and the plain shall be destroyed, as the LORD hath spoken.

15 Moab is spoiled, and gone up out of her cities, and †his chosen young men are gone down to the slaughter, saith the king, whose name is the LORD of hosts.

16 The calamity of Moab is near to come, and his affliction hasteth fast.

17 All ye that are about him, bemoan him; and all ye that know his name, say, How is the strong staff broken, and the beautiful rod!

Before CHRIST about 600.

10. Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully,] God executes His judgments upon sinners by the ministry of men, and those oftentimes as great sinners as those that suffer. He had declared by Jeremiah His purpose of making the Chaldeans His instruments in punishing the Jews, and the neighbouring countries: see chap. xxv. 9. Their success answered the prediction, and Nebuchadnezzar seems to have looked upon Jeremiah as a Prophet, and had a particular regard to his character: see chap. xxxix. 11. Being thus assured that he had a commission from God, he might confidently proceed in his conquests, and it would have been a fault to have shewn mercy to those whom he had good reason to believe that God had marked out for destruction. Such an unreasonable act of forbearance is highly blamed in Saul, 1 Sam. xv. 11; and in Ahab, 1 Kings xx. 42. God's judgments are often denounced in the form of imprecation: see Deut. xxvii. 15; Judg. v. 23; Gal. i. 8; 1 Cor. xvi. 22; 2 Tim. iv. 14. W. Lowth.

11. — he hath settled on his lees,] All wines, it is said, ought to be kept for some time upon the lees, in order to preserve their strength and flavour; on which account "the lees" are expressed by a word that signifies the preservers. Wine is apt to be damaged by being drawn off too soon into other vessels. By this allegory therefore Moab is represented as having enjoyed singular advantages from constantly remaining in his own country, ever since he became a people. See Bp. Lowth's note on Isai. xxv. 6. Dr. Blayney.

12. — wanderers, that shall cause him to wander,] The Chaldean soldiers, who came out of a foreign country: these shall make a prey of him. W. Lowth.

13. And Moab shall be ashamed of Chemosh, &c.] They shall be disappointed in their expectations of succours from their tutelary idol; see Judges xi. 24; 1 Kings xi. 7: as the ten tribes have been in the trust they reposed in the calf they worshipped at Beth-el: see Hos. viii. 5; x. 6. W. Lowth.

17. — How is the strong staff broken,] Compare Isai. xiv. 5. A staff, or rod, is an emblem of authority, and thence comes to signify a kingdom, or government, especially such an one as oppresses its subjects or neighbours: see Isai. ix. 4; x. 5. W. Lowth.

18. Thou daughter that dost inhabit Dibon, &c.] And thou, O Dibon, the fair city of Moab, come down from thy glory, and take up with the lot of thy neighbours; thirst, distress, destruction. Bp. Hall. See the note on chap. xlvi. 19.

19. — Aroer,] A town in the borders of Moab, Deut. ii. 36.

20. — Arnon,] A country, which took its name from the river Arnon, which was on the borders of Moab, Numb. xxi. 28. W. Lowth.

24. — Bozrah,] Called Bezer, Deut. iv. 43; Josh. xxi. 36. A different place from Bozrah, which belonged to Edom, chap. xlix. 13. W. Lowth.

25. The horn of Moab — his arm] See note at 1 Sam. ii. 1.

27. For was not Israel a derision unto thee? &c.] Was not Israel without cause a scorn unto thee? In what had he offended thee? However guilty he were in his carriage towards Me, yet to thee he was inoffensive: notwithstanding thou didst insult in his fall, and joy in his miscarriage. Bp. Hall.

45 They that fled stood under the shadow of Heshbon because of the force: but [l] a fire shall come forth out of Heshbon, and a flame from the midst of Sihon, and shall devour the corner of Moab, and the crown of the head of the † tumultuous ones.

28. — the dove that maketh her nest in the sides of the hole's mouth.] That doves build their nests in the clefts or natural hollows of a rock, see Cant. ii. 14. Dr. Shaw in his travels mentions a city on the African coast, called Hamam-et, from the number of wild pigeons that are bred in the clefts of the adjacent mountains. Dr. Blayney.

30. I know his wrath, — but it shall not be so; his lies shall not so effect it.] I know his haughty boastings; but it shall not be so with him as he imagineth: his great words and presumptuous undertakings shall not carry it. Bp. Hall.

31. — Kir-heres.] Or, Kir-hareseth, Isai. xvi. 7, appears to have been once the capital, or at least the strongest, of the cities of Moab, 2 Kings iii. 25. Dr. Blayney.

32. O vine of Sibmah, I will weep for thee with the weeping of Jazer:] The expressions denote the destruction of the fruitful vineyards of Sibmah. W. Lowth. See the note on Isai. xvi. 9.

—— thy plants are gone over the sea, &c.] See the note on Isai. xvi. 8.

33. — their shouting shall be no shouting.] Not the cheerful shouting of the grapetreaders, but the dreadful shouting of military spoilers. Parkhurst.

34. From the cry of Heshbon &c.] See the notes on Isai. xv. 5.

36. — mine heart shall sound — like pipes,] I groan inwardly for trouble and anguish. The musick of pipes was used at funerals. W. Lowth.

37. For every head shall be bald, &c.] See the note on chap. xli. 5.

—— upon all the hands shall be cuttings,] See the notes on chap. xvi. 6. We often read of persons cutting themselves when in great anguish: but we are not commonly told, what part they wounded. The modern Arabs gash their arms, which are often bare: it appears from this passage the ancients wounded themselves in the same part. Harmer.

38. — upon all the housetops] Compare Isai. xv. 3.

40. — he shall fly as an eagle,] That is, the Babylonian conqueror; with evident allusion to Deut. xxviii. 49. Compare chap. xlix. 22. Dr. Blayney.

In the flying of an eagle there are two circumstances especially remarkable: 1st, The rapidity with which it rushes on its prey, noticed in Hab. i. 8; 2 Sam. i. 23; Lam. iv. 19; and other places of Scripture. 2dly, Its peculiar manner of fully expanding its wings, which supplied an epithet for the eagle to the Greek poets, and which is also particularly noticed in chap. xlix. 22. Parkhurst.

43. Fear, and the pit, and the snare, &c.] See Isai. xxiv. 17, 18; and the notes there.

45. They that fled stood under the shadow of Heshbon &c.] They that fled thought they should find good shelter in the strong forts of Heshbon; but they shall be deceived: for so far shall Heshbon be from being able to defend itself, that the destruction, which shall begin there, shall reach to all the utmost parts of the dominions of Moab, and shall light upon the heads of those insolent undertakers that were the cause of these wars and tumults. Bp. Hall.

"The midst of Sihon" means the city of Sihon, or Heshbon: see Numb. xxi. 28. The Prophet fitly applies to the present case the words of an ancient poem, made on Sihon's conquests over Moab, and recited by Moses as above. W. Lowth.

47. Yet will I bring again the captivity of Moab &c.] The Moabites were afterwards restored to their country, as appears from Josephus. W. Lowth.

Chap. XLIX. ver. 1. Concerning the Ammonites,] This downfal of the Ammonites is foretold by other Prophets. See the margin. It is uncertain when this prophecy was delivered: for the probable time of its completion, see the note on chap. xlviii. 1. Dr. Blayney.

—— why then doth their king inherit Gad,] It is probable from hence, that when the king of Assyria carried away captives the Gadites and their brethren, who dwelt beyond Jordan, 2 Kings xv. 29; 1 Chron. v. 26; the Ammonites, either by the consent or connivance of the Assyrian conqueror, took possession of their vacant country, to which they had no pretensions of right, so long as any of the ancient owners or their posterity were in being. The word, rendered "their king," might be rendered, according to most of the ancient versions, more properly "Melcom," (see the margin,) as the proper name of the chief deity of the Ammonites, who is so called, 1 Kings xi. 5. See below, ver. 3, and the note there. As Jehovah is said to have given His people Israel the lands they possessed, so the idolatrous nations considered their acquisitions as obtained by the favour of their respective idols. See Judg. xi. 24. Dr. Blayney.

2. — her daughters shall be burned with fire:] That is, the smaller cities, which are reckoned as so many daughters to their mother city. Compare Ps. xlviii. 11; xcvii. 8. W. Lowth.

—— then shall Israel be heir &c.] This is understood to have been fulfilled when Judas Maccabeus defeated the Ammonites, and took their towns, 1 Mac. v. 6, &c. Zephaniah speaks in like manner, chap. ii. 9. Dr. Blayney.

3. Howl, O Heshbon, for Ai is spoiled:] When Ai, (not the place mentioned Josh. viii, but a city of the Ammonites,) is destroyed, then is it time for Heshbon, the chief city of the Moabites, to lament her danger. W. Lowth.

—— run to and fro by the hedges;] Like persons distracted, seeking a place of concealment. Poole.

——for their king shall go into captivity,] Rather, "Melcom shall go &c." Compare chap. xlviii. 7; and see the note on chap. xliii. 12. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

7. Concerning Edom,] The destruction of Edom, or Idumea, is likewise foretold by Ezekiel, chap. xxv. 12—14; xxxv. 2, &c.; Joel iii. 19; Amos i. 11, 12; and by Obadiah. Dr. Blayney.

—— Is wisdom no more in Teman?] The Eastern part of the world, by which is chiefly meant Arabia and the adjacent countries, was famous for the study of wisdom; see 1 Kings iv. 30. The Edomites appear to have put in their claim to this distinction. W. Lowth.

8. — dwell deep,] When the Arabs have drawn upon themselves such a general resentment of the more fixed inhabitants of those countries, that they think themselves unable to stand against them, they withdraw into the depths of the great wilderness, where none can follow them with any hopes of success. It is probable, that the "dwelling deep," which Jeremiah recommends to the Arab tribes here and at ver. 30, means this plunging far into the deserts, rather than going into caves and dens, as has been sometimes supposed. For although people, who live a settled kind of life, have practised this method of security, the Arabs, who lead a wandering life in tents, look upon caves as traps, rather than as places of defence. Harmer.

The language of modern travellers, in describing this custom of the Arabs, corresponds with the language of Scripture. Niebuhr, speaking of their conduct under certain circumstances of dissatisfaction, says, "all the tribe retires to the bottom of the desert, whither the Turks dare not follow:" and Savary says concerning the wandering or Bedouin Arabs, "Always on their guard against tyranny, on the least discontent they pack up their tents, lade their camels with them, ravage the flat country, and plunge into the burning sands, whither none can pursue them, and where they alone dare dwell." Parkhurst.

—— Dedan;] The Dedanites were Arabians, of the posterity of Dedan the grandson of Abraham, Gen. xxv. 3. They seem in later times to have been subdued by the Idumeans, and incorporated with them. W. Lowth.

Nay, the housebreakers commonly leave something behind them. But the desolation which is coming upon thee shall be so entire, that scarcely a remnant shall be preserved: compare Obad. ver. 5. W. Lowth.

11. Leave thy fatherless children, &c.] It is doubted whether these words are a threatening or a promise. If a promise, the sense is, that though this great destruction should come upon the body of the Edomites, yet God would take care of some of their fatherless children, whose parents being carried into captivity, they had none to provide for them. If they be taken as a threatening, they imply ruin to them as well as to the rest. Poole.

12. — Behold, they whose judgment was not to drink of the cup &c.] Behold, even My people the Jews, which, in comparison of thee, had no reason to be put to these extremities of judgments, they have been plagued severely by My just hand: and shalt thou think to go unpunished? Bp. Hall.

13. — Bozrah] One of the chief cities of Idumea: see Isai. xxxiv. 6; lxiii. 1. W. Lowth. "All the cities thereof:" the daughter cities, that appertain to Bozrah, the prime city. Bp. Hall.

14. I have heard a rumour from the Lord, &c.] The Prophets often represent God as summoning armies, and setting them in array of battle against those people whom He has decreed to destroy. See chap. l. 9—21; li. 11; Isai. xiii. 2, 3; xviii. 3. God's stirring up men's minds to invade such countries is described here, as if He had sent an ambassadour to the Chaldeans and their confederates, to engage them in a war against the Idumeans, according to the methods in which earthly princes use to engage their allies: compare chap. li. 27, 28. W. Lowth.

16. — O thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock,] Compare Obad. ver. 4; Numb. xxiv. 21; and see the note there. Saint Jerome, who lived in the neighbourhood, tells us, in his commentary upon Obadiah, that Idumea was a rocky mountainous country. W. Lowth.

17. — shall hiss] See the note on chap. xix. 8.

18. As in the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah &c.] A proverbial expression denoting an utter desolation: see chap. l. 40; Isai. xiii. 19. W. Lowth.

We know little more of the history of the Edomites, than as it is connected with that of the Jews: and where is the name or the nation now? They were swallowed up and lost, partly among the Nabathean Arabs, and partly among the Jews: and the very name was abolished and disused about the first century after Christ. Thus were they rewarded for insulting and oppressing their brethren the Jews, and hereby were fulfilled the prophecies of Jeremiah in this chapter; and of the other Prophets enumerated in the note on the seventh verse. Bp. Newton.

19. Behold, he shall come up like a lion &c.] A description of Nebuchadnezzar, marching with his army against Idumea. W. Lowth. Upon occasion of the inundations, to which the Jordan is subject, (see the note on chap. xii. 5,) we are told by Maundrell, that several sorts of wild beasts, which are wont to harbour among the trees and bushes by the river side, are forced out of their covert, and infest the neighbouring plains. To this circumstance the Prophet here alludes. Dr. Blayney.

—— I will suddenly make him run away from her:] The most probable sense of these words is, that they indicate the Edomites running away from Nebuchadnezzar out of their own country, which seems to be understood by "her." Poole. "Him," namely, "the son of man," of whom it was said in the preceding verse, that he should not abide or dwell there. Dr. Blayney.

—— and who is a chosen man, that I may appoint over her?] That is, I will single out a man remarkable for his prowess; namely, Nebuchadnezzar, and place him at the head of the army, which shall execute My vengeance upon Edom. W. Lowth.

—— who will appoint me the time? and who is that shepherd &c.] Who will challenge Me to meet him in the field, as if we were upon equal terms? Or what leader or general can enter the lists with Me? The word "shepherd" often signifies a prince or commander: see chap. vi. 3; xxv. 34. But here it is used in opposition to the "lion," mentioned before; as if he had said, A shepherd may as well encounter a lion, as the best appointed warriour contend with God Almighty, or those whom He makes the instruments of His vengeance. W. Lowth.

20. — Surely the least of the flock shall draw them out:] The very meanest and basest of the Chaldean army shall discomfit and overthrow the proud inhabitants of Teman. Bp. Hall.

21. The earth is moved at the noise &c.] The surrounding countries are astonished at its ruin, and the sound of it reaches even to the Red sea, which was at a considerable distance from the land of Edom. The Prophet compares the destruction of a nation to the fall of a great building: see Ezek. xxvi. 15; xxxi. 16. W. Lowth.

23. Concerning Damascus.] Damascus was the capital of the kingdom of Syria, and had seemingly at this time swallowed up all the other petty sovereignties of that country. Isaiah had before uttered a prophecy concerning it of calamitous import, chap. xvii; which had been fulfilled by Tiglath-pileser's taking it, and carrying away the people captives to Kir, 2 Kings xvi. 9. Amos also had foretold the same event, chap. i. 3—5. But it had recovered itself after the fall of the Assyrian empire, and is here doomed to suffer again the like calamities from the resentment of Nebuchadnezzar, probably about the same time with the other nations. See the note on chap. xlviii. 1. Dr. Blayney.

—— Hamath — and Arpad:] See the note on Isai. x. 9.

—— there is sorrow on the sea;] The word may be interpreted of the Aradians, who lay on the seacoast: or, adopting the marginal reading, "as on the sea," we may understand the sentence in the sense of Isaiah's words, "They are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest," chap. lvii. 20. W. Lowth.

25. How is the city of praise not left, &c.] How is it, that so goodly and famous a city as Damascus, so praised, so admired, hath not the favour to be spared from sackcloth and vastation? Bp. Hall.

27. — Ben-hadad.] This seems to have been a common name for the kings of Syria, as Pharaoh was for those of Egypt. Dr. Blayney. See the note on Gen. xii. 15.

28. Concerning Kedar, and concerning the kingdoms of Hazor,] The kingdoms whose metropolis is Hazor or Petra. Kedar was that part of Arabia inhabited by the posterity of Kedar, Ishmael's son, Gen. xxv. 13; called likewise "the kingdoms of Hazor;" each division having anciently a petty prince or king over it. W. Lowth.

—— the men of the east.] As the Arabians are called in the Scripture dialect. W. Lowth.

29. Their tents and their flocks &c.] Their substance consisted in their cattle, their furniture, and their tents, from whence the country itself is called "the tents of Kedar," Ps. cxx. 5: with these they removed from place to place for the convenience of pasture. See Isai. xiii. 20. W. Lowth.

31. Arise, get you up unto the wealthy nation, &c.] Arise, O ye Chaldeans; get ye up to the wealthy nation of the Hazorites, that dwell without care in their tents; abounding with flocks and herds in the desert, where they dwell apart without cities or towns. Bp. Hall.

34. — against Elam] Elam was an independent and even powerful kingdom in the days of Abram, Gen. xiv. 1. When the monarchy of Persia was established under Cyrus, Elam was blended into, and formed a part of it: but before that time they were two distinct kingdoms. According to the present prophecy, Elam is spoken of as having actually become a province of the Babylonish empire, Dan. viii. 2: and Daniel appears to have presided over it, having Shushan for the seat of his government. It therefore probably was, as the name would lead us to suppose, the country called by heathen writers Elymais, which Pliny and Strabo, in conformity with Daniel, describe as separated from

37 For I will cause Elam to be dismayed before their enemies, and before them that seek their life: and I will bring evil upon them, even my fierce anger, saith the LORD; and I will send the sword after them, till I have consumed them:

38 And I will set my throne in Elam, and will destroy from thence the king and the princes, saith the LORD.

3 For out of the north there cometh up a nation against her, which shall make her land desolate, and none shall dwell therein: they shall remove, they shall depart, both man and beast.

4 ¶ In those days, and in that time, saith the LORD, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping: they shall go, and seek the LORD their God.

5 They shall ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward, saying, Come, and let us join ourselves to the LORD in a perpetual covenant that shall not be forgotten.

Susiana by the river Eulæus, or Ulai. On the final subversion of the Babylonish monarchy, Elam was restored again, as is intimated below, ver. 39, to its former possessors, who had fought under the banners of the Medes and Persians. See Isai. xxi. 2. Dr. Blayney.

35. — the bow of Elam,] Isaiah thus speaks of the Elamites, chap. xxii. 6; "And Elam bare the quiver." Strabo says, that the mountainous parts of Elymais bred chiefly archers: and Livy and other heathen writers speak of the Elymean bowmen. Dr. Blayney.

36. — four winds from the four quarters of heaven,] That is, enemies from every quarter. Wars and commotions are metaphorically denoted by winds: see chap. iv. 11, 12; li. 1; Dan. vii. 2. W. Lowth.

38. And I will set my throne in Elam,] Nebuchadnezzar acting under the commission and authority of God, the establishment of his power was in effect the setting up of the throne or dominion of His principal. Dr. Blayney, W. Lowth.

39. — I will bring again the captivity of Elam,] See note on ver. 34.

Chap. L. This chapter and the next contain a prophecy concerning the fall of Babylon, intermixed and contrasted with predictions concerning the redemption of Israel and Judah, who were not, like those oppressors, to be finally extirpated, but to survive them, and upon their repentance and conversion to be pardoned and restored. The prophecy was delivered and sent to Babylon in the fourth year of Zedekiah's reign, as appears from chap. li. 59. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 2. — set up a standard;] To call people together, and impart to them these good tidings. The destruction of Babylon would be likewise a sort of signal to the Jews, to assemble together, in order to their return home: the time of their captivity being then to expire. W. Lowth.

—— Bel — Merodach] See the second note on chap. xliii. 12; and concerning "Bel," see the note from Dean Prideaux on Gen. x. 9. "Merodach" might be the name of one of their kings, that was afterwards deified by some of his subjects. W. Lowth.

3. — out of the north there cometh up a nation &c.] The Medes, who lay to the north of Babylon: see ver. 9, 41. W. Lowth.

—— which shall make her land desolate,] See the note on Isai. xiii. 20—22.

4. In those days, — the children of Israel &c.] In those days the children of Israel, and the children of Judah, shall, through the favour of the Persian monarchs, go up together, weeping for joy to return to their country, and to the place of God's worship and service. Bp. Hall. "In that time" will denote "during the time of Babylon's desolation:" which, being designed to be perpetual, will comprehend as well the time of the general restoration of Israel and Judah in the latter days, as that of their more immediate and partial return from Babylon. Dr. Blayney.

5. — a perpetual covenant] We find the Jews, after their return from Babylon, in Nehemiah's time, entering into a covenant to walk in God's law, and to obey Him, Neh. ix. 38; x. 1, &c. But by the "perpetual," or "everlasting covenant," may probably be understood that of the Gospel. Dr. Blayney.

6. — their shepherds have caused them to go astray,] Their pastors and governors have led them to commit idolatry, of which the mountains were a principal scene: see chap. ii. 20; iii. 6, 23; Ezek. vi. 3, 4, 13; xviii. 6, &c. And "they have gone from mountain to hill," varying the object or place of their idolatrous worship, and forgetting the sanctuary of their God, where alone they ought to have set up their rest. Dr. Blayney.

7. — the habitation of justice,] A refuge and protection for those who are good and just. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST 595.

9 ¶ For, lo, I will raise and cause to come up against Babylon an assembly of great nations from the north country: and they shall set themselves in array against her; from thence she shall be taken: their arrows shall be as of a mighty ‖ expert man; none shall return in vain.

‖ Or, destroyer.

10 And Chaldea shall be a spoil: all that spoil her shall be satisfied, saith the LORD.

11 Because ye were glad, because ye rejoiced, O ye destroyers of mine heritage, because ye are grown † fat as the heifer at grass, and bellow as bulls;

[b] Chap. 49. 17.

14 Put yourselves in array against Babylon round about: all ye that bend the bow, shoot at her, spare no arrows: for she hath sinned against the LORD.

15 Shout against her round about: she hath given her hand: her foundations are fallen, her walls are thrown down: for it is the vengeance of the LORD: take vengeance upon her; as she hath done, do unto her.

16 Cut off the sower from Babylon, and him that handleth the ‖ sickle in the time of harvest: for fear of the oppressing sword they shall turn every one to his people, and they shall flee every one to his own land.

‖ Or, scythe.

Before CHRIST 595.

17 ¶ Israel is a scattered sheep; the lions have driven him away: first the king of Assyria hath devoured him; and last this Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath broken his bones.

18 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will punish the king of Babylon and his land, as I have punished the king of Assyria.

19 And I will bring Israel again to his habitation, and he shall feed on Carmel and Bashan, and his soul shall be satisfied upon mount Ephraim and Gilead.

20 In those days, and in that time, saith the LORD, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found: for I will pardon them whom I reserve.

21 ¶ Go up against the land ‖ of Merathaim, even against it, and against the inhabitants of ‖ Pekod: waste and utterly destroy after them, saith the LORD, and do according to all that I have commanded thee.

11. — fat as the heifer] See notes at Deut. xxxii. 15.

12. Your mother shall be sore confounded; &c.] Your mother, city, Babylon, shall be sore confounded; and Chaldea, which was the queen of all nations, shall now be cast behind all the rest, and become a very wilderness and a barren desert. Bp. Hall.

15. — she hath given her hand:] In token of subjection and homage. The phrase occurs in the same sense, 1 Chron. xxix. 24; Lam. v. 6. It probably alludes to the act of the vanquished, who, throwing down his arms, and stretching forth his defenceless hands, acknowledges himself in the power of the conqueror. Dr. Blayney.

—— her foundations are fallen,] The signification of the Hebrew word, which occurs no where else, is uncertain. It probably means "the battlements," which is the rendering of the Greek version. Dr. Blayney.

16. Cut off the sower from Babylon,] Babylon resembled a country walled in, rather than a city: the walls, according to Herodotus, being sixty miles in circumference. Within this large circuit a great deal of ground was cultivated with corn: so that enough grew within the walls to support the inhabitants during a long siege. W. Lowth.

—— they shall turn every one to his people,] They, that is, the allies of Babylon. Compare chap. xlvi. 15; Isai. xiii. 14. W. Lowth.

17. — first the king of Assyria hath devoured him; and last &c.] After Nineveh, the metropolis of the Assyrian empire, was destroyed, Babylon became the queen of the East. They were both equally enemies to the people of God; the one subverted the kingdom of Israel, and the other the kingdom of Judah: the one carried away the ten tribes, and the other the two remaining tribes, into captivity. No wonder therefore that there are several prophecies relating to each of these cities, and that the fate of Babylon is foretold as was that of Nineveh. Bp. Newton. See the notes on Isai. x; Nahum ii, iii; Zeph. ii. 13; Ezek. xxxi. 3.

18. — as I have punished the king of Assyria.] This may most probably be understood of the destruction of Nineveh, the chief seat of the Assyrian empire, by Nebuchadnezzar and Ahasuerus, or Astyages, as it is related in Tobit, chap. xiv. 15. At the taking of this great city, foretold by Jonah, Nahum, and Zephaniah, Chynaladanus the last king of the Assyrian race was killed: and the seat and title of the empire removed to Babylon, which was no longer called the Assyrian, but the Babylonian monarchy. W. Lowth.

20. — the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, &c.] Their sins shall be done away through My grace and mercy. Bp. Hall.

The promise contained in this verse seems evidently to respect the Gospel times, and "the remnant" that shall be saved "according to the election of grace." Compare chap. xxxi. 34; xxxiii. 8; Isai. lix. 20; Rom. xi. 5, 26, 27. Dr. Blayney.

21. Go up against the land of Merathaim, — and — of Pekod:] Go up, ye Medes and Persians, against the territories of Babylon: even against the land of these proud "rebels," against the land of those who have "visited" My people with the sword and merciless destruction. Bp. Hall. There is no certainty, and indeed little probability, that there were any places to which belonged the names in the text. Dr. Blayney. See the margin.

23. How is the hammer of the whole earth cut asunder and broken!] That oppressive empire, "which smote the people with a continual stroke," as it is described by Isaiah, chap. xiv. 6. W. Lowth.

24. I have laid a snare for thee, &c.] See the note on chap. li. 31.

28. The voice of them that flee &c.] Some of those, who were more than ordinarily zealous for the welfare of God's Church and people, were ready, upon the first news of the taking of Babylon, to bring the glad tidings thereof into Judea, how God had avenged the cause of His people, and executed His judgments on those who destroyed His temple, and profaned the holy vessels of it, that were dedicated to His service. See Dan. v. 1—3, 5, 30: and compare chap. li. 51. W. Lowth.

30. Therefore shall her young men fall in the streets,] Xenophon relates, that Gadatas and Gobryas with their soldiers, when they were got into the town, marched directly toward the palace, and, killing all they met, became masters of the place, and slew the king himself. W. Lowth.

32. — I will kindle a fire in his cities,] This may be meant of the destructions made in the Babylonian territories in the several expeditions which Cyrus undertook against that monarchy during the space of twenty years before the taking of Babylon; from the year before Christ 559, to the year 539. W. Lowth.

35. A sword is upon — her princes,] Who were slain together with their king Belshazzar at a feast: see chap. li. 39; Dan. v. 2—30: "and upon her wise men;" who, though famous for their skill in astrology and the other arts of divination, could not foresee or prevent the dangers coming upon themselves in the common calamity. See Isai. xlvii. 13, 14. W. Lowth.

44 Behold, he shall come up [d] like a lion from the swelling of Jordan unto the habitation of the strong: but I will make them suddenly run away from her: and who is a chosen man, that I may appoint over her? for who is like me? and [e] who will ‖ appoint me the time? and who is that shepherd that will stand before me?

45 Therefore hear ye the counsel of the LORD, that he hath taken against Babylon; and his purposes, that he hath purposed against the land of the Chaldeans: Surely the least of the flock shall draw them out: surely he shall make their habitation desolate with them.

46 At the noise of the taking of Babylon the earth is moved, and the cry is heard among the nations.

CHAP. LI.

1 The severe judgment of God against Babylon in revenge of Israel. 59 Jeremiah delivereth the book of this prophecy to Seraiah, to be cast into Euphrates, in token of the perpetual sinking of Babylon.

THUS saith the LORD; Behold, I will raise up against Babylon, and against them that dwell in the † midst of them that rise up against me, a destroying wind;

† Heb. heart.

2 And will send unto Babylon fanners, that shall fan her, and shall empty her land: for in the day of trouble they shall be against her round about.

3 Against him that bendeth let the archer bend his bow, and against him that lifteth himself up in his brigandine: and spare ye not her young men; destroy ye utterly all her host.

Before CHRIST 595.

4 Thus the slain shall fall in the land of the Chaldeans, and they that are thrust through in her streets.

5 For Israel hath not been forsaken, nor Judah of his God, of the LORD of hosts; though their land was filled with sin against the Holy One of Israel.

6 [a] Flee out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver every man his soul: be not cut off in her iniquity; for this is the time of the LORD's vengeance; he will render unto her a recompence.

[a] Chap. 50. 8. Rev. 18. 4.

43. The king of Babylon hath heard the report of them, &c.] Belshazzar was a weak and dissolute prince, and dismayed upon the first apprehension of danger, when he understood that Cyrus's army laid siege to the city. See Dan. v. 6. W. Lowth.

44. Behold, he shall come up &c.] He, that is, the invading army. See the notes on chap. xlix. 19—21.

Chap. LI. ver. 1. — a destroying wind;] In allusion to the hot pestilential wind, as the Arabick version renders these words, which is frequent in those parts, and concerning which see the note on 2 Kings xix. 35.

7. Babylon hath been a golden cup in the Lord's hand, &c.] In what sense Babylon is called "a cup" may be seen by comparing chap. xxv. 15. She was a splendid instrument of vengeance ordained by God against the neighbouring nations; and as all these had suffered by her, all are represented as ready to glory over her, or rejoice when her turn of suffering came. Dr. Blayney.

9. We would have healed Babylon,] This is spoken in the name of God's Prophets, and the other witnesses of His truth, importing that they had sufficiently testified against her errours, and idolatries, but she was irreclaimable. And therefore it was time for all the lovers of truth to depart out of her, lest they be involved in her punishments: see ver. 6. W. Lowth. Or they are the words of the allies of Babylon, who say that they had endeavoured to support her sinking cause, but in vain; and therefore, as the case was desperate, they call one another to leave her to herself, and return every man to his own country. Poole, Dr. Blayney.

10. The Lord hath brought forth our righteousness:] He hath declared our cause to be just, (compare Ps. xxxvii. 6,) by bringing such remarkable judgments upon our enemies. And therefore we ought to give glory to Him in the assemblies of His Church, and in the most publick manner imaginable. W. Lowth.

11. — the kings of the Medes:] Neriglissar king of Babylon having formed an alliance against the Medes, Cambyses sent his son Cyrus with an army of thirty thousand Persians to join the Medes commanded by Cyaxares: this Cyaxares king of Media, called Darius the Mede in Scripture, was Cyrus's uncle; and it was properly his army that made the expedition against the Babylonians, he employing Cyrus as his general. Persia was then a small part of the empire of Media, and was of little account till Cyrus made a figure in the world: and even then it was called the kingdom of the Medes and Persians, the Medes having still the preference. And in aftertimes the Greek historians style those wars, in which their country encountered with Xerxes, by the name of the Median wars, because the Medes were the founders of that empire. W. Lowth.

[f] Chap. 10. 16.

19 [f] The portion of Jacob is not like them; for he is the former of all things: and Israel is the rod of his inheritance: the LORD of hosts is his name.

‖ Or, in thee, or, by thee.

20 Thou art my battle ax and weapons of war: for ‖ with thee will I break in pieces the nations, and with thee will I destroy kingdoms;

21 And with thee will I break in pieces the horse and his rider; and with thee will I break in pieces the chariot and his rider;

22 With thee also will I break in pieces man and woman; and with thee will I break in pieces old and young; and with thee will I break in pieces the young man and the maid;

Before CHRIST 595.

23 I will also break in pieces with thee the shepherd and his flock; and with thee will I break in pieces the husbandman and his yoke of oxen; and with thee will I break in pieces captains and rulers.

24 And I will render unto Babylon and to all the inhabitants of Chaldea all their evil that they have done in Zion in your sight, saith the LORD.

25 Behold, I am against thee, O destroying mountain, saith the LORD, which destroyest all the earth: and I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain.

26 And they shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations; but thou shalt be † desolate for ever, saith the LORD.

† Heb. everlasting desolations.

28 Prepare against her the nations with the kings of the Medes, the captains thereof, and all the rulers thereof, and all the land of his dominion.

29 And the land shall tremble and sorrow: for every purpose of the LORD shall be performed against Babylon, to make the land of Babylon a desolation without an inhabitant.

14. —with men, as with caterpillers;] Or locusts. Armies are often compared to caterpillers, locusts, and such like devouring insects: see Nahum iii. 15, 16; Joel ii. 2, 3, &c. W. Lowth.

15—19. These verses are repeated from chap. x. 12—16. See the notes there.

20. Thou art my battle ax and weapons of war:] God speaks here to Cyrus, and tells him, that He will make use of him as an instrument of Providence, for the destroying of the whole power of the Babylonish empire, and of all orders and degrees of men in it; as He had formerly made that empire the executioner of His judgments upon other countries: see chap. l. 23. W. Lowth. Or, the army of the Medes and Persians is intended; as elsewhere the instrument of God's vengeance is called a "sword," a "rod," a "scourge." Dr. Blayney.

25. —O destroying mountain,] Though Babylon was seated in a low watery plain, yet it is here called a "mountain," on account of its power and greatness, as well as of the vast height of its walls and towers, its palaces and temples: and Berosus, speaking of some of its buildings, says, that they appeared most like mountains. Bp. Newton, Poole. "The rocks," from whence it was to be "rolled," were its strong holds. Dr. Blayney.

27. —the kingdoms of Ararat, Minni, and Ashchenaz;] The two former of these Bochart reasonably concludes to be the greater and less Armenia: and the latter to be a part of Phrygia near the Hellespont. Homer appears to speak of it by the name of Ascania. And that both the Armenians and Phrygians composed part of the army which Cyrus led against Babylon, may be seen in Xenophon. Dr. Blayney.

—— as the rough caterpillers.] Or chafers; to which the hostile cavalry are compared, chiefly, I suppose, on account of their numbers. Parkhurst.

courage so as to face the enemy in the field again; they retired within their walls, and Cyrus could never draw them forth to try the fortune of arms. Bp. Newton.

31. One post shall run to meet another, &c.] That is, Couriers shall run from different parts, and so fall in with one another, all carrying the same intelligence to the same person, that the city was taken on the side that each came from. Dr. Blayney.

Babylon was taken by surprise, by unexpectedly draining the river Euphrates, and entering through the channel into the city, as Herodotus relates.

For the carrying on of this stratagem, Cyrus took the opportunity of a publick festival, when the whole night was usually spent in revellings, and all manner of disorders, see ver. 39. In this time of riot the gates leading down to the river, that used to be shut every night, were left open, and gave a passage to Cyrus and his army into the city, which he became master of, while they thought themselves in the utmost security, both from the height and strength of their walls, and depth of their river: Cyrus having as yet made little progress in the siege, though he had invested the city with his army two years before. This surprise caused so many messengers to run one after the other, to acquaint the king with this unexpected news. The vast compass of this city has been observed in the notes on chap. l. 16. W. Lowth.

32. — that the passages are stopped,] Or rather, "surprised." These were most probably the entrances into the city from the river side, which were secured by gates, that ought, as Herodotus observes, to have been fast barred; which, if it had been done, would have effectually frustrated the attempt of the enemy; but being left open and unguarded on account of the publick festivity, the assailants were in possession of those entrances, and in the heart of the city, before the besieged were aware of it. Dr. Blayney.

—— and the reeds they have burned with fire,] The soldiers, seeing the Euphrates nearly dry, set fire to the reeds which covered its borders, in order to facilitate the approach of the troops to the walls. The messengers reported to the king this circumstance, for the purpose of signifying to him that all the waters round about Babylon were dried up, and that there was no longer any thing to shelter the city from the enemy. These reeds are said to have been very large and high, and, together with the mud on which they stood, to have formed as it were another wall round the city. Calmet, Poole.

33. — it is time to thresh her:] To tread, or cause the city to be trodden, as a threshingfloor. Parkhurst.

34. Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon hath devoured me,] A pathetick description of the calamities brought upon the Jews by Nebuchadnezzar and his forces, who after they had devoured the wealth, and laid waste the beauty of their country, then turned them out of it, and led them captives into a strange land. W. Lowth.

35. — to me and to my flesh] To me and to my children. Our nearest relations are called our flesh in Scripture: see Judg. ix. 5; 2 Sam. v. 1; Nehem. v. 5. W. Lowth.

36. — I will dry up her sea, and make her springs dry.] See the notes on Isai. xiv. 23; and ver. 31 of this chapter. By the means there described, Babylon was taken, as here foretold. The city would have been otherwise impregnable, as it was supplied with provisions for many years, saith Herodotus; for more than twenty years, according to Xenophon; for, as Herodotus saith, if the Babylonians had but known what the Persians were doing, by shutting the gates which opened upon the river, and by standing upon the walls which were built as banks, they might have taken and destroyed the Persians as in a net, or cage. Bp. Newton.

37. And Babylon shall become heaps, &c.] See the notes on Isai. xiii. 20.

38. They shall roar together like lions:] Either for grief and anguish of mind: compare Zech. xi. 3; Isai. lix. 11; or else, the Prophet describes the revels and riotous noise that they made on the night of the publick festival, on which the city was taken: see the following verse. W. Lowth.

39. In their heat I will make their feasts, &c.] See the note on ver. 31.

41, — the praise of the whole earth] Compare chap. xlix. 25; Dan. iv. 30; Isai. xiii. 19. See the note there.

42. The sea is come up upon Babylon:] By "the sea" any large collection of waters is denoted, and particularly the river Euphrates, ver. 36: so that the fate of Babylon is here alluded to, concerning which see ver. 64; and Isai. xiv. 23. Others by "the sea" understand metaphorically a numerous army, and by the overspreading of waters the invasion and conquest of the country. Dr. Blayney.

51 We are confounded, because we have heard reproach: shame hath covered our faces: for strangers are come into the sanctuaries of the LORD's house.

52 Wherefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will do judgment upon her graven images: and through all her land the wounded shall groan.

53 Though Babylon should mount up to heaven, and though she should fortify the height of her strength, yet from me shall spoilers come unto her, saith the LORD.

54 A sound of a cry cometh from Babylon, and great destruction from the land of the Chaldeans:

Before CHRIST 595.

55 Because the LORD hath spoiled Babylon, and destroyed out of her the great voice; when her waves do roar like great waters, a noise of their voice is uttered:

56 Because the spoiler is come upon her, even upon Babylon, and her mighty men are taken, every one of their bows is broken: for the LORD God of recompences shall surely requite.

57 And I will make drunk her princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men: and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the king, whose name is the LORD of hosts.

58 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; ‖ The broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly ‖ broken, and her high gates shall be burned with fire; and the people shall labour in vain, and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary.

60 So Jeremiah wrote in a book all the evil that should come upon Babylon, even all these words that are written against Babylon.

61 And Jeremiah said to Seraiah, When thou comest to Babylon, and shalt see, and shalt read all these words;

62 Then shalt thou say, O LORD, thou hast spoken against this place, to cut it off, that none shall remain in it, neither man nor beast, but that it shall be † desolate for ever.

† Heb. desolations.

44.—I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed up:] This was literally fulfilled, when the vessels of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar had brought from Jerusalem, and placed in the temple of Bel, Dan. i. 2, were restored by order of Cyrus, Ezra i. 7, and carried to Jerusalem again. Bp. Newton.

46.—a rumour shall both come one year, &c.] Denoting that terrifying rumours shall continue year after year. Dr. Blayney.

—— violence in the land, ruler against ruler.] This should be a time of hostile depredations and invasions. Cyrus and the king of Babylon should now appear at the head of two contending armies. W. Lowth.

53. Though Babylon should mount up to heaven, &c.] Though Babylon prides herself in the glory of her empire, placed above the common height of human greatness; compare Isai. xlvii. 7, 8; though she thinks herself never so secure in her high gates, ver. 58, and strength of her walls, which were three hundred and fifty feet high, according to Herodotus, yet this shall not place her out of the reach of My vengeance: compare chap. xlix. 16. W. Lowth.

55.—destroyed out of her the great voice;] When cities are populous, they are of course noisy. See Isai. xxii. 2. Silence is therefore a mark of depopulation; and in this sense we are to understand God's destroying or taking away out of Babylon the great noise, which during the time of her prosperity was constantly heard there; "the busy hum of men," as the poet calls it. In this manner the mystical Babylon is threatened, Rev. xviii. 22, 23. Compare chap. vii. 34; xvi. 9; xxv. 10. Dr. Blayney.

58.—The broad walls,—her high gates &c.] See the notes on Isai. xiii. 19—22.

—— and the people shall labour in vain, &c.] In vain shall the people labour to quench that fire, which is kindled for the consuming of Babylon. Bp. Hall.

59.—with Zedekiah] Rather, "from Zedekiah," or, "on his behalf," as in the margin; or, by virtue of his commission: for we have no reason to suppose that Zedekiah went in person to Babylon at that time. W. Lowth, Dr. Blayney.

—— Seraiah was a quiet prince.] "The chief chamberlain," as in the margin. W. Lowth. So the word seems to mean; or, as we might call him, Lord Chamberlain. Parkhurst.

6 And in the fourth month, in the ninth day of the month, the famine was sore in the city, so that there was no bread for the people of the land.

63. — thou shalt bind a stone to it, &c.] See the note on Gen. xxxii. 25. The Prophets sometimes gave sensible representations of the judgments they foretold: see chap. xix. 10. This was a significative emblem of Babylon's sinking irrecoverably under the judgments here denounced against her. Compare Rev. xviii. 21. This threatening was in a literal sense fulfilled. See the note on Isai. xiv. 23. W. Lowth.

64. — Thus far are the words of Jeremiah.] This is probably mentioned to shew that the next chapter was added by Ezra, or Baruch, or whoever collected this prophecy into one volume. W. Lowth.

Chap. LII. This chapter was confessedly added by some one after Jeremiah's time, probably by Ezra, or whoever revised the sacred writings after the return of the Jews from Babylon, and collected them into one body. It contains a brief history of the captivity, nearly the same, word for word, as it is related in the second book of Kings, chap. xxiv. 18—20, and xxv.; together with some few additions. Some have supposed it placed here as a proper introduction to the book of Lamentations. But more probably the design was, by immediately subjoining this historical narrative of the desolations of the Jewish nation to the predictions of Jeremiah concerning them, to hold forth a nearer view of the exact accomplishment of the Divine word of prophecy. Dr. Blayney.

Ver. 12. — in the tenth day of the month,] In the parallel place, 2 Kings xxv. 8, we read, "on the seventh day of the month." It is probable that Nebuzar-adan came to Jerusalem on the seventh, but did not set fire to the city and temple till the tenth. Josephus relates this remarkable circumstance attending the burning of the temple under Nebuchadnezzar and Vespasian, that it happened both times on the same day of the year. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST 588.

23 And there were ninety and six pomegranates on a side; and all the pomegranates upon the network were an hundred round about.

24 ¶ And the captain of the guard took Seraiah the chief priest, and Zephaniah the second priest, and the three keepers of the † door:

† Heb. saw the face of the king. ‖ Or, scribe of the captain of the host.

26 So Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard took them, and brought them to the king of Babylon to Riblah.

times. The first was, when Nebuchadnezzar came up against Jehoiakim, Dan. i. 2. The second time was at the captivity of Jeconiah; see chap. xxvii. 19; and 2 Kings xxiv. 13. And now at the destruction of the city and temple, they entirely stripped it of all its ornaments. W. Lowth.

19. — that which was of gold in gold, &c.] That is, the utensils above mentioned, some of which were of gold, and some of silver; he took them away of both kinds. Dr. Blayney.

20. — twelve brasen bulls that were under the bases,] Rather, "which were instead of bases," to support the brasen sea. See 1 Kings vii. 25. W. Lowth.

21. — the height of one pillar was eighteen cubits;] See 1 Kings vii. 15; but in 2 Chron. iii. 15, it is said, that both the pillars made thirty-five cubits: perhaps one cubit should be allowed for the basis. W. Lowth.

23. And there were ninety and six pomegranates on a side;] Thus the pomegranates on the four sides, together with those which may have been at the corners of the building, make up the four hundred, mentioned at 1 Kings vii. 42; 2 Chron. iv. 13. Dr. Blayney.

24. — and the three keepers of the door:] These were not the ordinary porters, who were taken from among the Levites, but were priests, who stood at the door to receive the offerings of the people, and thus were keepers of the sacred treasury; an office of high trust and consideration. See 2 Kings xii. 9; xxiii. 4. Dr. Blayney.

25. — the principal scribe of the host,] In the margin the translation is, "the scribe of the captain of the host." It appears however, that there were certain officers belonging to the Jewish armies called scribes, who were what we call mustermasters of the troops. See 1 Mac. v. 42. And the person here spoken of was probably the mustermaster or intendant general of the army: the secretary at war. Dr. Blayney.

—— and threescore men &c.] Eminent persons, who had concealed themselves, but were afterwards discovered. W. Lowth.

27. — Thus Judah was carried away captive out of his own land.] The transplanting of people or nations has been practised by more modern conquerors. Thus in the year 796, "Charlemagne transplanted the Saxons from their own country, to oblige them to remain faithful to him, into different parts of his kingdom, either Flanders, or the country of the Helvetians, &c. Their own country was repeopled by the Adrites, a Sclavonian nation." Henault. So in much later times, "It was the policy of Abbas the First, who ascended the throne of Persia in 1585, to transplant the inhabitants of conquered places from one country to another, with a view, not only of preventing any danger from their disaffection, but likewise of depopulating the countries exposed to an enemy." Hanway's Revolutions of Persia, Parkhurst.

28—30. This is the people &c.] It is not to be supposed, that the whole number of the Jews, whom Nebuchadnezzar carried into captivity, was no more than four thousand six hundred. He carried away more than twice that number at one time, in the eighth year of his reign, 2 Kings xxiv. 12—16. Before that time he had carried off a number of captives from Jerusalem, in the first year of his reign, among whom were Daniel and his companions, Dan. i. 3—6. These are confessedly not taken notice of here. And as the taking and burning of Jerusalem is in this very chapter said to have been in the fourth and fifth months of the nineteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar, those, who were carried into captivity at the date of those events, cannot possibly be the same with those that are said to be carried away, either in the eighteenth or the twenty-third year of that prince. Nor indeed is it credible, that the number carried away at the time the city was taken, and the whole country reduced, could be so few as eight hundred and thirty-two, supposing a mistake in the date of the year, which some are willing to do, though without sufficient grounds. Here then we have three deportations, and those the most considerable ones, in the first, the eighth, and the nineteenth years of Nebuchadnezzar, sufficiently distinguished from those in his seventh, eighteenth, and twenty-third years. So that it seems most reasonable to conclude with Archbishop Usher, that by the latter three the historian meant to point out deportations of a lesser kind, not elsewhere noticed in direct terms in Scripture. The first of these, said to have been in the seventh year of Nebuchadnezzar, was of those who had been picked up in several parts of Judah by the bands of Chaldeans, Syrians, and others, whom the king of Babylon sent against the land previously to his own coming, 2 Kings xxiv. 2. That in the eighteenth year corresponds with the time, when the Chaldean army broke off the siege before Jerusalem, and marched to fight the Egyptian army; at which time they might think it proper to send off the prisoners that were in camp under a guard to Babylon. And the last in the twenty-third year of Nebuchadnezzar was, when that monarch, being engaged in the siege of Tyre, sent off Nebuzar-adan against the Moabites, Ammonites, and other neighbouring nations, who at the same time carried away the last gleaning of Jews that remained in their own land; amounting in all to no more than seven hundred and forty-five. Dr. Blayney.

31. — Evil-merodach — lifted up the head of Jehoiachin] St. Jerome reports, from an ancient tradition of the Jews, that Evil-merodach, having had the government of the Babylonish empire during the distraction of his father, used his power so ill, that as soon as the old king came to himself he put him in prison for it, where he contracted a particular acquaintance with Jehoiachin, who was his fellow prisoner, and that this was the cause of the great kindness he expressed towards him. W. Lowth.

32. — set his throne above the throne of the kings] That is, he shewed him more respect and honour than he did to any other of the captive princes, by placing him nearest himself. See Esth. iii. 1. Dr. Blayney. It is probable the phrase may have proceeded from the custom of placing cushions for persons of more than ordinary distinction in the places allotted them to sit in. Harmer.

THE LAMENTATIONS OF JEREMIAH.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Lamentations of Jeremiah are very properly distributed into five chapters, each of them containing a distinct elegy, consisting of twenty-two periods, according to the number of letters in the Hebrew alphabet.

They were not composed till after the destruction of Jerusalem and its temple, and the depopulation of the country by the transmigration of all its inhabitants; which events are described not at all in the style of prophetick predictions, but alluded to and bewailed as what had been already fully accomplished and brought to pass. We cannot admire too much the full and graceful flow of pathetick eloquence, in which the author pours forth the effusions of a patriotick heart, and piously weeps over the ruins of his venerable country. Never was there a more rich and elegant variety of beautiful images ranged together within so small a compass, nor more happily chosen and applied. But it was before observed, that the Prophet's peculiar talent lay in working up and expressing the passions of grief and pity; and unhappily for him, as a man and a citizen, he met with a subject but too well calculated to give his genius its full display. Dr. Blayney.

Perhaps the most perfect and regular elegiack composition in the world, is the Lamentations of Jeremiah; as the Prophet mourns in this book over the destruction of the temple and the holy city, and the overthrow of the whole state, he assembles all the affecting images which a subject so melancholy could suggest. The composition is uncommonly artificial. By turns, the Prophet and the city Jerusalem are introduced, as pouring forth their sorrows; and, in the end, a chorus of the people send up the most earnest and plaintive supplications to God. The lines of the original, as may in part appear from our translation, are longer than is usual in other kinds of Hebrew poetry; and the melody is rendered thereby more flowing, and better adapted to the querimonious strain of elegy. Dr. Blair.

CHAP. I.

Before CHRIST about 588.

1 The miserable estate of Jerusalem by reason of her sin. 12 She complaineth of her grief, 18 and confesseth God's judgment to be righteous.

HOW doth the city sit solitary, that was full of people! how is she become as a widow! she that was great among the nations, and princess among the provinces, how is she become tributary!

[a] Jer. 13. 17. [b] Job 7. 3.

2 She [a] weepeth sore in the [b] night, and her tears are on her cheeks: among all her lovers she hath none to comfort her: all her friends have dealt treacherously with her, they are become her enemies.

3 Judah is gone into captivity because of affliction, and † because of great servitude: she dwelleth among the heathen, she findeth no rest: all her persecutors overtook her between the straits.

Before CHRIST about 588.

† Heb. for the greatness of servitude.

4 The ways of Zion do mourn, because none come to the solemn feasts: all her gates are desolate: her priests sigh, her virgins are afflicted, and she is in bitterness.

5 Her adversaries [c] are the chief, her enemies prosper; for the LORD hath afflicted her for the multitude of her transgressions: her [d] children are gone into captivity before the enemy.

[c] Deut. 28. 13, 43, 44. [d] Jer. 52. 28.

6 And from the daughter of Zion all her beauty is departed: her princes are become

Chap. I. ver. 1. — she that was great among the nations, &c.] See what is said of David's conquests and sovereignty over the neighbouring states, 2 Sam. viii. 1—14; x. 6—19; of the extent of his son Solomon's dominions, 1 Kings iv. 21, 24; of the power of Judah in the reign of Jehoshaphat, 2 Chron. xvii. 10, 11; and also in that of Uzziah, 2 Chron. xxvi. 6—8. Dr. Blayney.

2. — all her lovers &c.] Those, that courted her alliance in the time of her prosperity, not only universally failed and deserted her in the time of need, but most of them turned against her, and took a malignant pleasure in aggravating her misfortunes. See Jer. xlviii. 27; Ps. cxxxvii. 7; Ezek. xxv. 3, 6, 8, 12, 15; xxvi. 2; xxviii. 24; xxix. 6, 7; Obad. ver. 10—14. Dr. Blayney.

3. Judah is gone into captivity &c.] Many Jews, to avoid the miserable servitude of the Chaldeans, have betaken themselves to a voluntary transmigration to other nations, hoping there to find rest; but even there have these Babylonian persecutors overtaken them, so that they are surprised in those straits, which could no way be avoided. Bp. Hall.

5. Her adversaries are the chief,] They have got the advantage over her, and she is become their vassal: and thus the judgment, that Moses threatened the Jews upon their disobedience, is fulfilled, Deut. xxviii. 43, 44, "That their enemies should be the head, and they should be the tail." W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 588.

like harts that find no pasture, and they are gone without strength before the pursuer.

7 Jerusalem remembered in the days of her affliction and of her miseries all her ‖ pleasant things that she had in the days of old, when her people fell into the hand of the enemy, and none did help her: the adversaries saw her, and did mock at her sabbaths.

‖ Or, desirable.

8 Jerusalem hath grievously sinned; therefore she † is removed: all that honoured her despise her, because they have seen her nakedness: yea, she sigheth, and turneth backward.

† Heb. is become a removing, or, wandering.

9 Her filthiness is in her skirts; she remembereth not her last end; therefore she came down wonderfully: she had no comforter. O LORD, behold my affliction: for the enemy hath magnified himself.

10 The adversary hath spread out his hand upon all her ‖ pleasant things: for she hath seen that the heathen entered into her sanctuary, whom thou didst command that [c] they should not enter into thy congregation.

‖ Or, desirable.

[c] Deut. 23. 3.

11 All her people sigh, they seek bread; they have given their pleasant things for meat ‖ to relieve the soul: see, O LORD, and consider; for I am become vile.

‖ Or, to make the soul to come again.

12 ¶ ‖ Is it nothing to you, all ye that † pass by? behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the LORD hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger.

‖ Or, It is nothing. † Heb. pass by the way?

13 From above hath he sent fire into my bones, and it prevaileth against them: he hath spread a net for my feet, he hath turned me back: he hath made me desolate and faint all the day.

14 The yoke of my transgressions is bound by his hand: they are wreathed, and come up upon my neck: he hath made my strength to fall, the LORD hath delivered me into their hands, from whom I am not able to rise up.

Before CHRIST about 588.

15 The LORD hath trodden under foot all my mighty men in the midst of me: he hath called an assembly against me to crush my young men: the LORD hath trodden ‖ the virgin, the daughter of Judah, as in a winepress.

‖ Or, the winepress of the virgin, &c.

16 For these things I weep; [f] mine eye, mine eye runneth down with water, because the comforter that should † relieve my soul is far from me: my children are desolate, because the enemy prevailed.

[f] Jer. 13. 17. & 14. 17. ch. 2. 18. † Heb. bring back.

17 Zion spreadeth forth her hands, and there is none to comfort her: the LORD hath commanded concerning Jacob, that his adversaries should be round about him: Jerusalem is as a menstruous woman among them.

18 ¶ The LORD is [g] righteous; for I have rebelled against his † commandment: hear, I pray you, all people, and behold my sorrow: my virgins and my young men are gone into captivity.

[g] Dan. 9. 7. † Heb. mouth.

19 I called for my lovers, but they deceived me: my priests and mine elders gave up the ghost in the city, while they sought their meat to relieve their souls.

20 Behold, O LORD; for I am in distress: my [h] bowels are troubled; mine heart is turned within me; for I have grievously rebelled: abroad the sword bereaveth, at home there is as death.

[h] Isai. 16. 11. Jer. 48. 36.

21 They have heard that I sigh: there is none to comfort me: all mine enemies have heard of my trouble; they are glad that thou hast done it: thou wilt bring the day that thou hast ‖ called, and they shall be like unto me.

‖ Or, proclaimed.

22 Let all their wickedness come before thee; and do unto them, as thou hast done unto me for all my transgressions: for my sighs are many, and my heart is faint.

---

7. — did mock at her sabbaths.] The heathen writers commonly ridicule the Jewish sabbaths, as a mark of the sloth and idleness of the people; without considering the excellent uses that day was designed for, namely, to give men leisure to attend upon the service of God, and learn the duties of religion. W. Lowth.

8. — because they have seen her nakedness:] She is stripped of all her ornaments, and carried naked and bare into captivity. As she has defiled herself with idolatry, called spiritual adultery in Scripture; so God has ordered her to be exposed to shame, like a common harlot: see note on Jer. xiii. 22. W. Lowth.

9. Her filthiness is in her skirts;] The Prophet proceeds in comparing the Jewish people to a woman, whose filthiness is exposed to the publick view. But, as he continues, notwithstanding such degrees of sin, they would not believe or consider what would be the end of their wickedness. Poole.

13. From above hath he sent fire into my bones,] That is, a judgment as consuming as fire in the bones, so that the strength of the Jews was exhausted. Poole.

15. — trodden — as in a winepress.] God's vengeance is often thus compared in the prophetical writings. See Isai. lxiii. 3; Rev. xiv. 19, 20; xix. 15. W. Lowth.

21. — thou wilt bring the day that thou hast called, &c.] The day, when Thou wilt execute Thy judgments upon the Babylonians, and other nations hostile to the Jews, will certainly come at Thy appointed time. W. Lowth, Poole.

The destruction of Jerusalem affords us a melancholy and alarming instance of Divine justice. The severity of this justice appears, not only in the city's being taken, and the people exposed to the fury of their enemies, and carried into captivity; but more especially in the burning of the temple, and the suppression of the Divine service. After such an example as this, no one can doubt but that God will severely revenge the contempt which men offer to His covenant, His worship, and the invitations of His mercy. Ostervald.

CHAP. II.

Before CHRIST about 588.

1 Jeremiah lamenteth the misery of Jerusalem. 20 He complaineth thereof to God.

HOW hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger, and cast down from heaven unto the earth the beauty of Israel, and remembered not his footstool in the day of his anger!

2 The Lord hath swallowed up all the habitations of Jacob, and hath not pitied: he hath thrown down in his wrath the strong holds of the daughter of Judah; he hath † brought them down to the ground: he hath polluted the kingdom and the princes thereof.

† Heb. made to touch.

3 He hath cut off in his fierce anger all the horn of Israel: he hath drawn back his right hand from before the enemy, and he burned against Jacob like a flaming fire, which devoureth round about.

4 He hath bent his bow like an enemy: he stood with his right hand as an adversary, and slew † all that were pleasant to the eye in the tabernacle of the daughter of Zion: he poured out his fury like fire.

† Heb. all the desirable of the eye.

5 The Lord was as an enemy: he hath swallowed up Israel, he hath swallowed up all her palaces: he hath destroyed his strong holds, and hath increased in the daughter of Judah mourning and lamentation.

6 And he hath violently [a] taken away his ‖ tabernacle, as if it were of a garden: he hath destroyed his places of the assembly: the LORD hath caused the solemn feasts and sabbaths to be forgotten in Zion, and hath despised in the indignation of his anger the king and the priest.

[a] Ps. 80. 12. & 89. 40. Isai. 5. 5.
‖ Or, hedge.

7 The Lord hath cast off his altar, he hath abhorred his sanctuary, he hath † given up into the hand of the enemy the walls of her palaces; they have made a noise in the house of the LORD, as in the day of a solemn feast.

† Heb. shut up.

Before CHRIST about 588.

8 The LORD hath purposed to destroy the wall of the daughter of Zion: he hath stretched out a line, he hath not withdrawn his hand from † destroying: therefore he made the rampart and the wall to lament; they languished together.

† Heb. swallowing up.

9 Her gates are sunk into the ground; he hath destroyed and broken her bars: her king and her princes are among the Gentiles: the law is no more; her [b] prophets also find no vision from the LORD.

[b] Ps. 74. 9.

10 The elders of the daughter of Zion sit upon the ground, and keep silence: they have cast up dust upon their heads; they have girded themselves with sackcloth: the virgins of Jerusalem hang down their heads to the ground.

11 Mine eyes do fail with tears, my bowels are troubled, my liver is poured upon the earth, for the destruction of the daughter of my people; because the children and the sucklings ‖ swoon in the streets of the city.

‖ Or, faint.

12 They say to their mothers, Where is corn and wine? when they swooned as the wounded in the streets of the city, when their soul was poured out into their mother's bosom.

13 What thing shall I take to witness for thee? what thing shall I liken to thee, O daughter of Jerusalem? what shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion? for thy breach is great like the sea: who can heal thee?

14 Thy [c] prophets have seen vain and foolish things for thee: and they have not discovered thine iniquity, to turn away thy captivity; but have seen for thee false burdens and causes of banishment.

[c] Jer. 2. 8. & 5. 31. & 14. 14. & 23. 16.

Chap. II. ver. 1. — remembered not his footstool] See note at 1 Chron. xxviii. 2.

3. — he hath drawn back his right hand from before the enemy,] That is, the right hand of Israel himself, his exertions of strength being rendered ineffectual by God, or turned away from obstructing or opposing the progress of the enemy; just as God says, Jer. xxi. 4, that He would turn aside the weapons of war, which were in the hands of the Jews, so as to prevent their hindering the Chaldean army from entering the city. Dr. Blayney.

6. — his tabernacle, as if it were of a garden:] As if it were no better than a tent or cottage, set up in a garden or vineyard, whilst the fruit is gathering, and then to be taken away again. Compare Isai. i. 8. W. Lowth.

7. — they have made a noise &c.] The enemies triumphed in the desolation of the temple with as loud a noise, as the people were wont to make there in celebrating the praises of God on a solemn festival. Compare Ps. lxxiv. 4. Dr. Blayney.

8. — he hath stretched out a line,] To mark out the extent of what was to be pulled down. Dr. Blayney. See the note on Isai. xxxiv. 11; also on Jer. xlvii. 6.

9. — the law is no more;] The priests and Levites, whose office it is to instruct the people in the law, are dispersed among the heathen; and that part of the law, which regards the publick worship of God, is rendered impracticable by the temple's being destroyed. W. Lowth.

11. — my liver is poured upon the earth,] Compare Job xvi. 13. Dr. Blayney.

13. What thing shall I take to witness for thee?] With what example of like misery shall I go about to comfort thee? Bp. Hall.

—— thy breach is great like the sea:] Like the breaking in of the sea, that overflows a whole country, where no stop can be put to the inundation. W. Lowth.

14. — they have not discovered thine iniquity, &c.] They have not given the people a just sense of their iniquities, in order to avert God's judgment; but rather flatter them in their sins, with the hope of impunity. See Jer. v. 31; xiv. 14. W. Lowth.

—— false burdens] The Hebrew word is usually translated "burden," and generally signifies a burdensome prophecy: see the note on Jer. xxiii. 33. But it likewise imports prophecy in 16 All thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee: they hiss and gnash the teeth: they say, We have swallowed her up: certainly this is the day that we looked for; we have found, we have seen it.

17 The LORD hath done that which he had [e] devised; he hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded in the days of old: he hath thrown down, and hath not pitied: and he hath caused thine enemy to rejoice over thee, he hath set up the horn of thine adversaries.

CHAP. III.

1 The faithful bewail their calamities. 22 By the mercies of God they nourish their hope. 37 They acknowledge God's justice. 55 They pray for deliverance, 64 and vengeance on their enemies.

I AM the man that hath seen affliction by the rod of his wrath.

2 He hath led me, and brought me into darkness, but not into light.

3 Surely against me is he turned; he turneth his hand against me all the day.

4 My flesh and my skin hath he made old; he hath broken my bones.

5 He hath builded against me, and compassed me with gall and travel.

6 He hath set me in dark places, as they that be dead of old.

7 He hath hedged me about, that I cannot get out: he hath made my chain heavy.

8 Also when I cry and shout, he shutteth out my prayer.

9 He hath inclosed my ways with hewn stone, he hath made my paths crooked.

10 He was unto me as a bear lying in wait, and as a lion in secret places.

11 He hath turned aside my ways, and pulled me in pieces: he hath made me desolate.

12 He hath bent his bow, and set me as a mark for the arrow.

general: see Prov. xxx. 1; xxxi. 1: and so it is used here; for Jeremiah complains of those impostors, who prophesied of peace, and soothed men in their sins to their final destruction. W. Lowth.

15. All that pass by clap their hands at thee;] See note at Job xxvii. 23.

17. — he hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded] God hath not surprised us by these providences; He gave us notice what He would do, and hath done no more than what He threatened long since, Lev. xxvi. 16, &c.; Deut. xxviii. 15, &c. It is true He hath severely punished us, so that in His dispensation there appear no marks of pity: He hath set up our enemies, and made them to triumph over His people, but in all this He hath but justified His truth, and fulfilled His word. Poole. The word "command" is sometimes used for any part of the covenant which God had engaged Himself to perform. See Ps. cv. 8; cxi. 9. W. Lowth.

18. — O wall of the daughter of Zion, &c.] As the wall and ramparts are said to lament, ver. 8, because their ruins are objects of lamentation; so here devout persons, upon the destruction of the city, direct their prayers to God, as if the ruins themselves did entreat Him to have compassion on the miseries of that place, which He had chosen for His peculiar residence. W. Lowth.

19. — in the top of every street.] The same phrase occurs, chap. iv. 1; Isai. li. 20; Nahum iii. 10; and perhaps signifies "in every street;" (W. Lowth;) or at the extremity of the streets at either end. Dr. Blayney.

20. — Shall the women eat their fruit, &c.] We find by comparing this verse with chap. iv. 10, that God brought upon them that terrible judgment, which He had denounced against them, if they continued to provoke Him; namely, that they should "eat the flesh of their own sons and daughters," Lev. xxvi. 29; Deut. xxviii. 53; Jer. xix. 9. W. Lowth.

22. Thou hast called as in a solemn day my terrors round about,] Terrours came upon me on every side by Thy appointment; just as multitudes used to flock to Jerusalem at the times of the solemn feasts. The phrase "fear or terrour on every side," is elsewhere used by Jeremiah to express great misery and desolation, Jer. vi. 25; xx. 3; xlvi. 5; xlix. 29. W. Lowth.

Chap. III. ver. 2. — darkness, — light.] "Darkness" is a common emblem of distress, as "light" is of prosperity. Dr. Blayney.

16. He hath also broken my teeth with gravel stones, &c.] In this and the foregoing verse, the Prophet aggravates the calamities of his people by such expressions as imply, that, instead of any support or comfort, they find nothing but miseries and afflictions: see note on Jer. ix. 15. The Septuagint render the latter part of the verse, "He hath fed me with ashes," that is, We fare as hard as those who feed upon bread baked in ashes, whose teeth are in danger of being broken by grits and stones. Compare Ps. cii. 9; Job vi. 7. W. Lowth.

17. — I forgat prosperity.] I have been a stranger to prosperity long enough to wear the remembrance of it out of my mind: so Joseph, speaking of the seven years of famine, saith, that "plenty shall be forgotten in the land of Egypt," Gen. xli. 30. By the same figure the Prophet Isaiah, describing happy times, saith, "the former troubles are forgotten," chap. lxv. 16. W. Lowth.

19. — wormwood and the gall.] See note on Jer. ix. 15.

27. — that he bear the yoke in his youth.] It is good to be inured betimes to bear those useful restraints which arise from a sense of the duty we owe to God, and the obedience we ought to pay to His laws. W. Lowth.

28. He sitteth alone &c.] The discipline of affliction makes a man serious and thoughtful, it disposes him to reflect on himself and his ways, and instructs him to acquiesce in the dispensations of Providence. W. Lowth.

29. He putteth his mouth in the dust; &c.] He prostrates himself even to the ground before Almighty God, in token of the deepest humiliation of soul: see Ps. cxix. 25; if by that means he may recover the Divine favour. W. Lowth.

33. For he doth not afflict willingly &c.] God never dispenses any event to us, so much with intent to exercise His power over us, as to express His goodness towards us: He never "doth afflict or grieve" us more against our will, than against His own desire; never indeed but when goodness itself calleth for it, and even mercy doth urge thereto. Dr. Isaac Barrow.

34. To crush under his feet &c.] In this and the two next verses certain acts of tyranny, malice, and injustice are specified, which men often indulge themselves in the practice of, one towards another; but which the Divine goodness is far from countenancing or approving by any similar conduct. Dr. Blayney.

36. To subvert a man in his cause,] That is, to prevent his having justice done him in a lawsuit or controversy by any undue interference: as by bearing or suborning false witness; or exerting any kind of influence in opposition to truth and right. Dr. Blayney.

38. Out of the mouth of the most High proceedeth not evil and good?] Do not calamities come from God's will and disposal, as well as prosperity? See Isai. xlv. 7; Amos iii. 6. W. Lowth.

39. Wherefore doth a living man complain, &c.] If we consider God's afflictions as a just reward of our evil deeds, this will prevent all murmuring and repining against Providence: especially as long as men are on this side of the grave, they ought to be thankful for having an opportunity given them for repentance. W. Lowth.

53. They have cut off my life in the dungeon, &c.] I was not only sequestered from all human society like a dead man; see ver. 6; but in apparent danger of losing my life in the dungeon: see Jer. xxxvii. 20; xxxviii. 9, 10. And their laying a stone upon the entrance of that dark cavern resembled the burying me alive. Compare Dan. vi. 17; Matt. xxvii. 60. W. Lowth.

Chap. IV. ver. 1. How is the gold become dim! &c.] How is the glory of the temple obscured! The sanctuary now lies in ruins! And the stones of it are not distinguished from the common rubbish! In like manner the priests and Levites, who attended upon the service of God, and the elders of the people, the members of the great Sanhedrim, who kept their court within the precincts of the temple, (see note on Jer. xxxv. 4;) these persons, that might be resembled to the pillars or corner stones of that sacred building, are now involved in the same common destruction with the meanest of the people. See ver. 16, and chap. ii. 20. W. Lowth.

7. Her Nazarites] By the word, rendered "Nazarites," we are in this place probably to understand, not persons, properly so called, who had set themselves apart by a religious vow, but persons of rank and distinction. Dr. Blayney. See the note from Stackhouse on Gen. xlix. 26.

8. Their visage is blacker than a coal; &c.] Meaning, their complexion is spoiled by famine, and other hardships, so as to make them look dry and withered. W. Lowth.

14. They have wandered as blind men in the streets, &c.] When they fled for their lives, they were like blind men not knowing which way to go, because of the many carcases which lay in the way: whereby they became stained with blood, and so legally polluted: see Numb. xix. 16. Thus they carried the marks of their sin in their punishment. W. Lowth.

—— so that men could not touch their garments.] They were so defiled with innocent blood, that men could not touch their very garments without uncleanness. Bp. Hall. Some translate it, "so that they could not but touch it with their garments." W. Lowth.

15. They cried unto them, Depart ye; &c.] When they fled to save their lives they could find no safe retreat, but every body shunned them; and used the same words to express their abhorrence of this defilement of such persons, whose office it was to cleanse and purify others, as the lepers were obliged by the law to pronounce upon themselves and cry "Unclean, unclean:" see Levit. xiii. 45. The filthy garments of the priests were an emblem of their filthy minds; see Zech. iii. 4, 5; and called to remembrance the innocent blood, which had been shed by their means; see ver. 13; when people saw their sin thus retaliated upon them. W. Lowth.

—— they said among the heathen, &c.] When those priests were driven out into heathen countries, every one looked upon their banishment as a just judgment upon their wickedness, and accounted them unworthy to attend any longer upon God's worship in His temple. W. Lowth.

19. Our persecutors are swifter than the eagles &c.] God has brought upon us the judgments which He threatened by Moses, of "bringing a nation against us as swift as the eagle flieth," Deut. xxviii. 49. Such were the horsemen of the Chaldean army. See Jer. iv. 13; lii. 8. W. Lowth.

20. The breath of our nostrils, the anointed of the Lord, &c.] Zedekiah is here meant, of whom the Prophet saith, he was taken in those toils which his enemies laid to catch him with: see Jer. lii. 9; Ezek. xii. 13. As long as he was safe they had hopes of preserving some face of government, although carried away captive into a foreign land. W. Lowth.

21. Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom,] An ironical expression, like that of Solomon, Eccles. xi. 9, "Rejoice, O young man," &c. As if the Prophet had said, Rejoice while thou mayest, O Edom, over the calamities of the Jews. See Ps. cxxxvii. 7; Obad. ver. 10. But thou shalt not rejoice long, for in a little time it shall come to thy turn to feel God's afflicting hand. See Jer. xlix. 7, &c. W. Lowth.

22. The punishment of thine iniquity is accomplished,] It is usual with the Prophets, when they have denounced God's judgments against any heathen nation, at the same time to give gracious promises to Israel: thereby importing, that God will never cast off His people utterly, as He doth strangers, but in due time will extend His mercies towards them. Compare Jer. xlvi. 27, 28; l. 18—20; Ezek. xxviii. 24—26; Obad. ver. 17, &c. W. Lowth.

‖ Or, For wilt thou utterly reject us?

Chap. V. ver. 4. We have drunken our water for money;] See Numb. xx. 17, 19. It would sound strange in England, if a person, travelling, should propose to pay for drinking of the water at the wells by the road-side. But still stronger is the expression here: "We have drunk our own water for money:" we bought it of our foreign rulers, although we were the natural proprietors of the wells. Fragments to Calmet.

5. Our necks are under persecution:] We are become slaves to our enemies, "who put a yoke of iron upon our necks" according to the threatenings denounced by Moses, Deut. xxviii. 48. W. Lowth.

6. We have given the hand to the Egyptians, &c.] We have made ourselves slaves and tributaries to them: this was done by the ceremony of "giving the hand," a form used in an oath or covenant. See Ezek. xvii. 18; Gen. xxiv. 2. W. Lowth.

From Ockley's History of the Saracens it appears, that the putting of the protester's hand into the hand of him who received the protestation, which conveyed the notion of an oath between the parties, was a customary token of acknowledgment of allegiance. The mode of swearing allegiance, or doing homage for provinces, anciently used between sovereigns and vassals, in some European countries, bears considerable resemblance to this Eastern usage. The vassal put both his hands into the hands of his sovereign, repeating words to this effect: "Thus I do thee homage for such, or such, a province," &c. After which he withdrew his hands. The phrase, used to denote this customary token of allegiance and fidelity among the Orientals, is the same as that in the text; namely, to "give the hand." Fragments to Calmet. See the note from Harmer on 2 Kings x. 15.

7. Our fathers have sinned, and are not; and we have borne their iniquities.] It is not to be imagined from these words, that God, who is just and good, punishes children so as to exclude them from His mercy, for the sins which their fathers have committed: but it often happens, that God, to chastise the fathers, and for the good of the children themselves, exposes them in this life to the calamities, which their fathers by their sins have brought upon them. This the captive Jews at Babylon experienced, as God had threatened in their law, Exod. xx. 5; and this we daily see come to pass in the course of His providence. Ostervald. See the notes on Jer. xxxi. 29, 30.

8. Servants have ruled over us:] Servants to the great men among the Chaldeans, and other strangers, are become our masters. See Neh. v. 15. W. Lowth.

9. We gat our bread with the peril of our lives because of the sword of the wilderness.] It may mean, that the people were exposed to the incursions of the Arabian freebooters, who might not improperly be styled "the sword of the wilderness." Dr. Blayney.

12. — by their hand:] The hand of the enemies. W. Lowth.

13. — to grind,] See Exod. xi. 5; xii. 29; and the notes there.

—— the children fell under the wood.] They were made to carry such heavy burdens of wood, that they fainted under the load. W. Lowth.

14. The elders have ceased from the gate,] That is, they no longer sit there to administer justice. Dr. Blayney.

18. — the foxes] See notes at Judg. xv. 4; Cant. ii. 15.

22. But thou hast utterly rejected us;] Thou art resolved to cast off the Jews of this generation, and wilt not shew us any favour, till the seventy years of our captivity are expired. W. Lowth.

It is to be observed, that though the Babylonians had reduced the Jews to their present deplorable condition, yet the Prophet attributes all these misfortunes to God; and says, that it was God Himself, who had cast off His people, and delivered His temple, His altars, and His city, into the hands of the idolaters. The enemies of the Jews could not have hurt them, if God had not withdrawn His protection from the people that He had chosen. God is the dispenser of afflictions to mankind: but in His Church particularly nothing happens without His will. It is also to be considered, that, when God thus exposes His Church to sufferings, He does not design to destroy it, but only to reform and purify it by His corrections. And the same judgment should be passed on all the evils, which befall men in this life. Ostervald.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET EZEKIEL.

INTRODUCTION.

EZEKIEL, who was the third of the great Prophets, was, like his contemporary Jeremiah, of the sacerdotal race. He was carried away captive to Babylon with Jehoiachin, king of Judah, in the year of the world 3406, before Christ 598; and was placed with many others of his countrymen upon the banks of the river Chebar in Mesopotamia, where he was favoured with the Divine revelations contained in this Book. He began to prophesy in the fifth year of his captivity, and is supposed to have prophesied about twenty-one years. The boldness, with which he censured the idolatry and wickedness of his countrymen, is said to have cost him his life: but his memory was greatly revered, not only by the Jews, but also by the Medes and Persians.

The Divine instructions were first revealed to him in a glorious vision, in which he beheld a representation, or, as he reverently expresses it, "the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord," attended by His cherubim symbolically pourtrayed. "The word of the Lord came expressly" unto him, and he received his commission by a voice, which was followed by a forcible influence of the Spirit, and by awful directions for his conduct. He appears to have executed his high trust with great fidelity. The author of Ecclesiasticus says of him, that "he directed them who went right," chap. xlix. 9: which may be considered as a merited encomium on the industry, with which he endeavoured to guide and instruct his countrymen in righteousness.

Ezekiel represents himself as the author of this Book, in the beginning and other parts of it; and justly assumes the character and pretensions of a Prophet: as such he has been universally considered.

This Book may be considered under the five following divisions. The first three chapters contain the glorious appearance of God to the Prophet, and his solemn appointment to his office, with instructions and encouragements for the discharge of it. From the 4th to the 24th chapter inclusive, he describes, under a variety of visions and similitudes, the calamities impending over Judea, and the total destruction of the temple and city of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, occasionally predicting another period of yet greater desolation, and more general dispersion. From the beginning of the 25th to the end of the 32d chapter, the Prophet turns his attention to those nations, who had unfeelingly triumphed over the Jews in their affliction: predicting that destruction of the Ammonites, Moabites, and Philistines, which was effected by Nebuchadnezzar, that mighty instrument of God's wrath against the wickedness of man; and particularly he foretells the ruin and desolation of Tyre and Sidon, the fall of Egypt, and the base degeneracy of its future people, in a manner so forcible, in terms so accurately and minutely descriptive of their several fates and present condition, that nothing can be more interesting than to trace the accomplishment of these prophecies in the accounts of historians and travellers. From the 32d to the 40th chapter, he inveighs against the accumulated sins of the Jews collectively, and the murmuring spirit of his captive brethren; exhorts them earnestly to repent of their hypocrisy and wickedness, upon the assurance that God will accept sincere repentance; and encourages them to resignation by promises of deliverance, and by intimations of spiritual redemption. In the two last chapters of this division, under the promised victories to be obtained over Gog and Magog, he predicts the final return of the Jews from their dispersion in the latter days; with an obscurity however that can be dispelled only by the event. The last nine chapters contain a remarkable vision of the structure of a new temple and a new polity, applicable in the first instance to the return from the Babylonian captivity, but in its ultimate sense referring to the glory and prosperity of the universal Church of Christ.

St. Jerome observes, that the visions of Ezekiel are among the things in Scripture "hard to be understood." This obscurity arises, in part at least, from the nature and design of the prophecies themselves: they were delivered amidst the gloom of captivity; and though calculated to cheer the drooping spirits of the Jews, and to keep alive a watchful and submissive confidence in the mercy of God, yet they were intended to communicate only such a degree of encouragement, as was consistent with a state of punishment, and to excite an indistinct expectation of future blessings upon the condition of repentance and amendment. But, though mysterious in themselves, the predictions are related by the Prophet in a plain and historical manner. He seems to have been desirous of conveying the strong impressions, which he received, as accurately as they were capable of being described. It ought to be observed, that the last twelve chapters of this book bear a very striking resemblance to the concluding chapters of the Book of Revelation.

The style of this Prophet may be characterized as bold, vehement, and tragical; as often worked up to a kind of tremendous dignity. His book is highly parabolical, and abounds with figures and metaphorical expressions. He is employed rather in exciting our terrour than in moving our pity. He displays a rough but majestick dignity; an unpolished, though noble simplicity: excelled perhaps in other respects by most of the Prophets; but none in the whole compass of writers has ever equalled him in the manner of writing, for which he seems singularly qualified by nature, in force, impetuosity, weight, and grandeur. He sometimes emphatically and indignantly repeats his sentiments; fully dilates his pictures; and describes the adulterous manners of his countrymen under the strongest and most exaggerated representations, that the licence of the Eastern style would admit. His genius led him to amplification: and the Divine Spirit did not overrule the natural bent of his mind. This diffuseness of manner in mild and affectionate exhortation, this vehement enlarging on the guilt and consequent sufferings of his countrymen, seems wisely adapted to their capacities and circumstances; and must have had a forcible tendency to awaken them from their lethargy. Dr. Gray, Bps. Tomline and Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

Chap. I. ver. 1. — in the thirtieth year,] Usher, Prideaux, Lowth, and others, reckon the thirty years here spoken of, as well as the forty days or years mentioned in chap. iv. 6, from the covenant made by Josiah in the eighteenth year of his reign. See 2 Kings xxiii. 3. According to which computation this thirtieth year corresponds with the year of the world 3410, and the fifth year of Jehoiachin's captivity; or about 595 before Christ, as in the margin. Other chronologers conceive it to be the thirtieth year of Ezekiel's age; or the thirtieth of Nabopolassar's reign; and others the thirtieth year from the jubilee. Ezekiel usually dates his prophecies from the era of his appointment to the prophetical office. Dr. Gray.

—— fourth month,] Thammuz, which nearly corresponds to our July. Abp. Newcome. The sacred year is here understood, which began with the month Nisan. See the note on Exod. xii. 2.

—— among the captives] The margin of our Bible, and the Septuagint, express "in the midst of the captivity." It is not therefore to be imagined that Ezekiel was surrounded by a group of captives, when these visions occurred to him, but that he was in the place of his exile with the other captives who dwelt around him. Calmet.

—— Chebar,] A river in Mesopotamia, which falls into the Euphrates near Carchemish. It is mentioned by Ptolemy under the name of Chaboras. Abp. Newcome.

—— the heavens were opened,] The eyes of the Prophet were strengthened with celestial light. St. Jerome says, that the heavens were opened, not by a division of the sky, but by the faith of the believer. Calmet.

2. — the fifth year of king Jehoiachin's captivity,] This was the thirteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign; for Jehoiachin was carried captive in the eighth, 2 Kings xxiv. 12. It was also the fifth year of the reign of Zedekiah in Jerusalem, and the sixth before the destruction of the city and the temple. Ezekiel was made a captive with Jehoiachin, and he computes the succeeding parts of his prophecy from that event. W. Lowth.

3. — and the hand of the Lord &c.] The efficacy of God's Spirit did shew itself in and upon him in His holy revelations. Bp. Hall. The "hand of the Lord" marks the action, the force, the energy of the Holy Spirit. Abp. Newcome.

4. — out of the north,] This is supposed to denote the calamities which were to burst on Jerusalem from her northern enemies the Chaldeans. Abp. Newcome. See the notes on Jer. i. 13; iv. 6.

—— a fire infolding itself,] Appearing in folds like one wreath within another. W. Lowth. Embracing itself, not spreading. Moses uses the same expression when he speaks of the storm excited by him in Egypt, Exod. ix. 24. Abp. Newcome.

—— amber,] By "amber" the ancients often meant a mixed metal of gold and silver, which was much celebrated for its beautiful lustre, and which, when exposed to the fire, becomes more bright and shining. Parkhurst.

5. — four living creatures.] Compare Rev. iv. 6.

—— likeness of a man.] They had the human stature. Houbigant. The likeness might consist partly in their moving erect upon two legs, and partly in their having several members of the human form. Calmet.

7. — straight feet;] Their legs were straight up like those of a man, without any power of bending but at the knee. Bp. Hall, Abp. Newcome.

—— like the sole of a calf's foot:] And their feet were round as the circumference of a calf's foot, for the greater fitness of that turning motion which they should be put unto. Bp. Hall.

8. — hands; — wings] Wings and hands are instruments, and natural signs, of swiftness and power. Abp. Newcome.

9. Their wings were joined] Of the two in front, and of the two behind, the right wing of one reached to the left wing of the other: the extremities of the expanded inner wings forming an arch. Abp. Newcome.

—— they turned not] This signifies that nothing ever diverted them from fulfilling God's command. W. Lowth.

10. — had the face of a man, &c.] See note at Exod. xxv. 18.

11. — were joined one to another,] They touched one another as the wings of the cherubim did over the mercy seat. See 1 Kings vi. 27. W. Lowth.

12. — the spirit] That power, which was the principle of all their motions. See ver. 20. W. Lowth.

lamps: it went up and down among the living creatures; and the fire was bright, and out of the fire went forth lightning.

14 And the living creatures ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning.

15 ¶ Now as I beheld the living creatures, behold one wheel upon the earth by the living creatures, with his four faces.

16 The appearance of the wheels and their work was like unto the colour of a beryl: and they four had one likeness: and their appearance and their work was as it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel.

17 When they went, they went upon their four sides: and they turned not when they went.

18 As for their rings, they were so high that they were dreadful; and their ‖ rings were full of eyes round about them four.

‖ Or, strakes.

19 And when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them: and when the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up.

20 Whithersoever the spirit was to go, they went, thither was their spirit to go; and the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit ‖ of the living creature was in the wheels.

‖ Or, of life.

21 When those went, these went; and when those stood, these stood; and when those were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit ‖ of the living creature was in the wheels.

‖ Or, of life.

22 And the likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creature was as the colour of the terrible crystal, stretched forth over their heads above.

Before CHRIST about 595.

23 And under the firmament were their wings straight, the one toward the other: every one had two, which covered on this side, and every one had two, which covered on that side, their bodies.

24 And when they went, I heard the noise of their wings, like the noise of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech, as the noise of an host: when they stood, they let down their wings.

25 And there was a voice from the firmament that was over their heads, when they stood, and had let down their wings.

26 ¶ And above the firmament that was over their heads was the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone: and upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it.

27 And I saw as the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it, from the appearance of his loins even upward, and from the appearance of his loins even downward, I saw as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about.

28 As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the LORD. And when I saw it, I fell upon my face, and I heard a voice of one that spake.

---

13. — it went up and down] That is, the fire moved itself up and down. Abp. Newcome.

15. — upon the earth] Not lifted up. See ver. 19.

—— by the living creatures, with his four faces.] That is, one wheel stood before every one of the living creatures on each face of the square figure or chariot. Dr. Lightfoot, W. Lowth.

16. — beryl:] Rather a "chrysolite," so named from its fine gold yellow colour, called by modern jewellers "the topaz." Parkhurst.

18. — their rings,] Tires or circumferences of the wheels; they were so vast as to cause a terrour in the Prophet who beheld them. W. Lowth.

——full of eyes] The eyes denote God's all-seeing providence. That the cherubim also were full of eyes, see chap. x. 12. Abp. Newcome.

19—21. And when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them: &c.] The living creatures and the wheels were animated by the same principle of understanding and motion, to signify with what readiness and alacrity all the instruments of Providence concur in carrying on its great designs and purposes, chap. x. 16, 17. W. Lowth.

20. — over against them:] Or, "beside them." W. Lowth. Or, "near to them." Parkhurst. Chap. x. 19; xi. 22.

22. — the likeness of the firmament] And the colour of the firmament, which was spread over their heads, was as the colour of a glorious crystal, which had in it a kind of majestical brightness. Bp. Hall.

24. — like the noise of great waters,] To denote the terribleness of the judgments which they were to execute upon Jerusalem, and upon the whole Jewish nation. Compare chap. xliii. 2; Dan. x. 6. W. Lowth.

26. — the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone:] God is described in Scripture as "dwelling in light, and clothing Himself with it," Exod. xxiv. 10; Rev. iv. 2, 3; Ps. civ. 2. So the throne of God here described was made up of light, resembling the colours and brightness of a sapphire. W. Lowth.

—— of a man] The Representative of the invisible God, His ever blessed and only begotten Son, who at length assumed human nature. Bp. Hall, Abp. Newcome. When Moses and the elders saw the God of Israel, Exod. xxiv. 9—11, or the glory of God, they saw nothing but an inconceivably resplendent brightness, that they might not imagine the Deity represented by any image. Here the form of a man seems to prefigure the incarnation. W. Lowth. See the note on Jer. i. 4.

27. — within it,] Within the colour of amber. The upper part of this appearance was of an amber colour outwardly, but more flaming inwardly. W. Lowth.

28. As the appearance of the bow] As this vision was an evident representation of the Word, that was to be made flesh, whose incarnation is the foundation of God's covenant and mercy with mankind; a rainbow, the symbol and token of mercy, was a very fit attendant upon that glorious vision, Rev. x. 1. W. Lowth.

—— the glory of the Lord.] See Isai. vi. 1, 2: where this glory assumed a different appearance.

CHAP. II.

Before CHRIST about 595.

1 Ezekiel's commission. 6 His instruction. 9 The roll of his heavy prophecy.

AND he said unto me, Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak unto thee.

2 And the spirit entered into me when he spake unto me, and set me upon my feet, that I heard him that spake unto me.

3 And he said unto me, Son of man, I send thee to the children of Israel, to a rebellious † nation that hath rebelled against me: they and their fathers have transgressed against me, even unto this very day.

† Heb. nations.

4 For they are † impudent children and stiffhearted. I do send thee unto them; and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD.

† Heb. hard of face.

5 And they, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, (for they are a rebellious house,) yet shall know that there hath been a prophet among them.

6 ¶ And thou, son of man, be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though ‖ briers and thorns be with thee, and thou dost dwell among scorpions: be not afraid of their words, nor be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house.

‖ Or, rebels.

7 And thou shalt speak my words unto them, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear: for they are † most rebellious.

Before CHRIST about 595.

† Heb. rebellion.

8 But thou, son of man, hear what I say unto thee; Be not thou rebellious like that rebellious house: open thy mouth, and [a] eat that I give thee.

[a] Rev. 10. 9.

9 ¶ And when I looked, behold, an hand was sent unto me; and, lo, a roll of a book was therein;

10 And he spread it before me; and it was written within and without: and there was written therein lamentations, and mourning, and woe.

CHAP. III.

1 Ezekiel eateth the roll. 4 God encourageth him. 15 God sheweth him the rule of prophecy. 22 God shutteth and openeth the prophet's mouth.

MOREOVER he said unto me, Son of man, eat that thou findest; eat this roll, and go speak unto the house of Israel.

2 So I opened my mouth, and he caused me to eat that roll.

3 And he said unto me, Son of man, cause thy belly to eat, and fill thy bowels with this roll that I give thee. Then did I [a] eat it; and it was in my mouth as honey for sweetness.

[a] Rev. 10. 9.

This august vision was a representation of God's glory, which tended to convince the Prophet of the Divine appearance. It signified likewise, that God is every where present; that His knowledge and power are infinite; that He governs all things by His providence; and as it was by His will that Jerusalem was destroyed, so He would change its condition, and bring the Jews again from their captivity by means known only to Himself. Ostervald.

Chap. II. ver. 1. — Son of man,] This expression is generally understood as applied to the Prophet, to put him in mind of his frailty and mortality, and of the infinite distance between God and man. In which sense it is supposed to be taken, when spoken of Christ in the New Testament; implying His great humility in assuming our nature, and appearing no otherwise than as an ordinary man. W. Lowth, Calmet. See the note on Dan. viii. 17.

—— stand upon thy feet,] It appears from the last verse in the first chapter, that the Prophet had fallen prostrate in the Eastern manner at the manifestation of the glory of God. Abp. Newcome.

2. — the spirit] The Spirit of God. Bp. Hall, W. Lowth. The power of the Highest, Luke i. 35; see chap. iii. 12, 14, 24; 1 Kings xviii. 12; 2 Kings ii. 16. Abp. Newcome. See Abp. Secker's note on Nehem. ix. 30.

5. And they, whether they will hear, &c.] Whether they will hear, or will not hear, (as is more probable, for they are a stubborn people,) yet shall they feel and find by the event answering thy predictions, that they have had a Prophet amongst them; on which account, if their sins are not reformed, they shall be more deeply punished. Bp. Hall.

6. — though briers and thorns be with thee,] Though thou art likely to be torn by briers and thorns, and to be stung by scorpions; that is, though thou exposest thyself to injurious and malignant treatment. Abp. Newcome. The Prophets and messengers of God are often exhorted to take courage, and are promised a proportionable assistance in the discharge of their office, without fearing any man's person, or standing in awe of any man's greatness. See chap. iii. 8, 9; Jer. i. 8, 18. Such a presence of mind is expressed by "boldness" in the New Testament, and is spoken of as a peculiar gift bestowed upon the first preachers of the Gospel, Acts iv. 13, 29; Eph. vi. 19. And they had need of great presence of mind, who were to reprove men hardened in sin, who are always impatient of reproof, and become the enemies of those who tell them such truths as they have no mind to hear. W. Lowth.

Concerning scorpions, see the note on Deut. viii. 15.

8. — eat] See chap. iii. 1, 3, 10. God's words were to sink into him, that he might faithfully deliver them to others. Abp. Newcome. "Take in, retain, digest." Abp. Secker.

The knowledge of Divine truths is often expressed by the metaphors of bodily food and nourishment: and therefore to "eat" the words of this prophecy, signifies to commit them to memory, to meditate upon them, and digest them. W. Lowth.

10. — within and without:] The ancient books were rolled on cylinders of wood and ivory; and usually the writing was only on the inside. Grotius, Abp. Newcome.

The writing on both sides shewed that the prophecy would be long. Calmet.

—— lamentations, and mourning, and woe.] All the prophecies contained therein consisted of God's judgments and mournful events, without any mixture of mercy, at least with respect to the Jews of the present age. W. Lowth.

Chap. III. ver. 1. — that thou findest;] That which is given to you. Houbigant.

2. —he caused me to eat that roll.] See the note on chap. iv. 1. This circumstance of Ezekiel's eating the roll plainly belongs to his first vision: during which he ate the roll; and therefore his eating was visionary, not real. Dr. Waterland.

3. — as honey for sweetness.] Perhaps it was sweet from the pleasure of being so honourably employed. Abp. Secker. So pleasing a contentment there is in a holy obedience to the commands of God. Bp. Hall.

11 And go, get thee to them of the captivity, unto the children of thy people, and speak unto them, and tell them, Thus saith the Lord GOD; whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear.

12 Then the spirit took me up, and I heard behind me a voice of a great rushing, saying, Blessed be the glory of the LORD from his place.

6. — they would have hearkened unto thee.] And yet in all appearance these strangers would have hearkened to thy preaching, sooner than the house of Israel will, as the Ninevites did to Jonah's. Compare Matt. xii. 41; xi. 21. W. Lowth.

9. As an adamant] It is not ascertained what is properly meant by this word. Scheuchzer thinks it does not mean the adamant or diamond, but a very hard stone, called smiris, (a name nearly similar to the Hebrew word here translated,) which was used for engraving, polishing, and cutting other hard stones. Parkhurst.

12. — a voice of a great rushing,] See chap. i. 24.

—— from his place.] By us His ministering spirits, who are now in the place where His glory dwelleth. Abp. Newcome.

13. — over against them,] See the note on chap. i. 20.

14. — in bitterness,] The joy, that I first conceived in receiving the Divine message, was quickly turned into grief and anguish of mind. W. Lowth. Because of the calamities which I was to foretell. Abp. Newcome.

—— in the heat of my spirit;] In indignation against my rebellious countrymen. Abp. Newcome.

—— strong upon me.] Urging and empowering me to execute my commission. See Jer. xx. 9. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

15. — Tel-abib,] This is generally supposed to be the name of the place which was the principal residence of the captive Israelites, upon the banks of the Chebar. The meaning of the word in the original is, "a heap of corn;" and St. Jerome so translates it. The place might have been called so from its fertility. The Prophet might be said to "come to his people," not that he had ever departed actually into another place, but that by his vision he had been abstracted from his commerce with men; and that upon the conclusion of the vision he returned to it. Perhaps this is a distinct colony of captives from those that are mentioned, chap. i. 3. See ver. 23 of this chapter. Certain it is that the king of Babylon carried away the Jews by several captivities; some in the first year of his reign, Dan. i. 1: some in the seventh, Jer. lii. 28. Then followed Jehoiachin's captivity in the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kings xxiv. 12; when Ezekiel himself was carried captive. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

—— astonished] Having my spirit wholly cast down, and amazed under the apprehension of these terrible judgments which were to come upon my nation, and of which I was to be the messenger. See Jer. xxiii. 9. Seven days was the space of time appointed for mourning, Gen. l. 10; 1 Sam. xxxi. 13; Job ii. 13. W. Lowth. This appearance of silent astonishment was well calculated to excite the attention of his countrymen, and to prepare them for some important communication.

18. When I say &c.] Chap. xxxiii. 8. Compare ver. 17—19; and chap. xxxiii. 7—9. Abp. Newcome.

—— die;] An immature death, if not a violent one. Michaelis understands the phrase of all the punishments of sin. Abp. Newcome.

19. — hast delivered thy soul.] Thou art clear from the guilt of his sin. Compare Acts xx. 26. W. Lowth. The opposite to this clause is, "His blood will I require at thine hand," ver. 20. Abp. Newcome.

20. — and I lay a stumblingblock] And I cause his iniquity to become his ruin. W. Lowth.

CHAP. IV.

1 Under the type of a siege is shewed the time from the defection of Jeroboam to the captivity. 9 By the provision of the siege, is shewed the hardness of the famine.

THOU also, son of man, take thee a tile, and lay it before thee, and pourtray upon it the city, even Jerusalem:

2 And lay siege against it, and build a fort against it, and cast a mount against it; set the camp also against it, and set ‖ battering rams against it round about.

21. — warn the righteous] Hence we may learn, that the office of pastors is twofold: to collect the sheep that are astray, and to restrain those within the bounds of innocence and safety who are collected. Calmet.

25. — they shall put bands upon thee,] Thou shalt be confined to lie so many days upon thy right side, and so many upon thy left, as if thou wast bound and not able to stir. See chap. iv. 8. W. Lowth.

26. — dumb,] Because they regarded not the word which God commanded him to speak to them, he was directed to instruct them only by signs, such as are those emblems of the siege contained in the next chapter. W. Lowth.

27. — Thus saith the Lord] The Prophet was to declare his Divine commission in these words. See chap. ii. 4; iii. 11. It is more agreeable to these passages to suppose that the following words, "he that heareth—forbear," are the words of God to Ezekiel, not part of the message which the Prophet was to deliver. Abp. Newcome. And so the passage may be paraphrased, "But when I renew My commission to thee, and bid thee speak, I will then give a freedom of speech unto thee, and thou shalt say, Thus saith the Lord, Whether they hear thee or hear thee not, it is all one to thee; do thou thy duty, and it sufficeth." Bp. Hall.

Chap. IV. ver. 1. — take thee a tile,] The tiles or bricks used for building in the East were sometimes very large, with one of the surfaces well polished, and capable of receiving the representation here described. In the cabinets of the curious are still preserved fragments of such tiles, brought from what is by some persons supposed to be the site of ancient Babylon.

It has been a question among the learned, whether the orders which God here gave were intended as real commands and figures also, or only as figures of things to come under the form of commands; signifying not what the Prophet was to perform, but what God in His wise counsels had determined to bring about. Lowth, Wells, Bochart, and the generality of commentators, combine with the authority of most of the Fathers in support of the literal interpretation. They plead in the first instance, that all which is here commanded was practicable, and that the several circumstances mentioned carry no direct repugnancy nor absurdity with them; and they farther infer, that if the Prophet did not really perform what is here related, he could not have been "a sign to the house of Israel." See chap. iv. 3. But as several judicious interpreters, namely, St. Jerome, Maimonides, and amongst ourselves Smith, Stillingfleet, and Jenkins, conceive all that is here related to be a history only of the vision itself, or a prophetical scheme; and as some difficulties will occur by the adoption in all cases of the literal interpretation, it may be proper shortly to notice the reasons they assign for this construction. It is observed then, that though we have in this book an account of such and such commands, given in vision to Ezekiel, yet it is not said that he ever performed them: but that like as St. Peter in a vision was commanded to do what he never did, ("Arise, Peter, slay, and eat;") so Ezekiel was ordered in the same way to do several things in vision, which it was never intended that he should actually perform. And as St. Peter reports his vision for the instruction of Christians; so Ezekiel reports his for the instruction of the house of Israel. These emblematical commands so reported become signs, figures, and resemblances, of what had come or should come upon the house of Israel or Judah, and in what manner, and why: and thus they "were signs to the house of Israel," signifying things past, and prefiguring things to come; and they seem to have been delivered to him in a preceptive form, in order to imprint the things intended deeper in his mind, and make the representation of them to the Jews more lively and affecting. Dr. Waterland. Other interpreters have adopted a middle course: they suppose that some of the directions were given to the Prophet only by way of metaphorical instruction, such for instance as "eating the roll" of prophecy, where we perceive that he speaks only of a transaction in a vision; but that others were imposed upon him as commands, and actually performed; namely, the representation of the siege upon the removal of his household stuff, and the refraining from the customary shew of grief at the death of his wife, &c.; but whatever hypothesis we may adopt, whether we suppose them to be descriptive of real or imaginary events, or of both, they are very reconcileable with the Divine intention in the employment of the Prophet. On the supposition that they were real, we may reasonably conceive a miraculous assistance to have been afforded when necessary; and if we consider them as imaginary, they might be represented equally as emblematical forewarnings revealed to the Prophet. Drs. Gray and Waterland.

2. — lay siege against it,] Make a portraiture of a siege, and of such warlike preparations as are necessary. W. Lowth.

of military engine: certain it is that they are not mentioned in Homer; although, according to Pliny, they were invented by Epeus at the siege of Troy. Vitruvius says, that they were first used by the Carthaginians at the siege of Cadiz. Calmet.

3. — an iron pan,] Or plate of iron. See the margin. Probably such as cakes were baked on. This may denote the strong trenches of the besiegers, and the invincibleness of the siege. Bp. Hall. Or, according to others, that there was an iron wall between the besieged and God, whom the Prophet represented. Abp. Newcome.

4. Lie thou] In his own house, chap. iii. 24. This was to be his posture in the exercise of his prophetical office. It may be supposed, that the Prophet did not retain it without intermission, but only during a part of each day, when the people were likely to observe his conduct. Abp. Newcome.

—— lay the iniquity] That is, declare that you thus represent the iniquity, &c. Abp. Newcome.

—— thou shalt bear] Thou shalt represent My patience under the iniquity of the house of Israel. Bp. Hall.

The words are commonly explained in this manner; but as the circumstances under which Ezekiel was placed were all of them penal, and as the other expression of "laying on iniquity," used in connexion with this verse, (see ver. 4, 5,) conveys the imputation of guilt; the Prophet may be better supposed in this vision to represent and prefigure the punishment due to the idolatries of Israel and Judah. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome. The original word admits of either sense.

5. — three hundred and ninety days:] The number of years corresponding with this (see ver. 6.) will take us back with sufficient exactness from the year in which Jerusalem was sacked by Nebuchadnezzar, to the first year of Jeroboam's reign, when national idolatry began in Israel. The number of days was designed to signify the continuance of the siege of Jerusalem. That siege lasted, from the beginning to the ending of it, seventeen months, as appears from 2 Kings xxv. 1—4. But the king of Egypt coming to relieve the city, was the occasion of raising the siege for some time, Jer. xxxvii. 5. We may suppose therefore upon the authority of the text, as well as upon the circumstances of the story, that the actual siege lasted three hundred and ninety days. Abp. Usher, W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

6. — forty days:] Scaliger and some others begin the forty years corresponding to these days, from Jeremiah's mission as a Prophet; which was in the thirteenth year of Josiah, from which time till the last year of Zedekiah, when the city and temple were destroyed, is just forty years. W. Lowth.

—— each day for a year.] See Numb. xiv. 34; Dan. ix. 24.

7. — thine arm shall be uncovered,] Their habits were anciently contrived so that the right arm was disengaged from the upper garments, that they might be the more ready for action. Thus God is said to "make bare His arm," Isai. lii. 10; where He is represented as subduing His adversaries, and bringing salvation to His people. W. Lowth.

8. — I will lay bands upon thee,] God is said to do what was done in consequence of His commands. See chap. iii. 25. This seems to shew the firmness of the Chaldeans in carrying on the siege till they took the city. Abp. Newcome.

9. — wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentiles, &c.] By this mixture, it is intended to shew the distressed situation of the city of Jerusalem, during the approaching siege. The use of mixed corn is generally a proof of scarcity; but when beans and lentiles are added, it is a mark of severe distress. W. Lowth, Calmet.

10. — twenty shekels] About nine ounces. Bp. Cumberland.

11. — the sixth part of an hin:] Which is something above a pint and a half of our measure. Bp. Cumberland.

The Prophet was to take this pittance from day to day, and in small portions from time to time, while he subjected himself to publick notice. The act denoted scarcity during the siege. Abp. Newcome.

12. — as barley cakes,] Such as people make in haste, when they have not time for preparing a set meal, Exod. xii. 39. This represents the hurry and disorder of a siege. W. Lowth.

—— dung] To signify the scarcity of all kinds of fuel. W. Lowth. Dathius observes, that the dung of oxen and of camels was often used by the Easterns as fuel for preparing their food; but this command to use human dung for the same purpose is terribly significant of the extremities to which the Jews were to be reduced, and denotes a necessity which cannot be contemplated without horrour. Harmer.

13 — their defiled bread] The pollution here mentioned was not only in itself disgusting, but particularly odious to the Jews, as being positively condemned by the law, Lev. v. 3; vii. 21; Deut. xxiii. 12. Bp. Hall, Calmet.

Before CHRIST 595. my soul hath not been polluted: for from my youth up even till now have I not eaten of that which dieth of itself, or is torn in pieces; neither came there abominable flesh into my mouth.

15 Then he said unto me, Lo, I have given thee cow's dung for man's dung, and thou shalt prepare thy bread therewith.

16 Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, behold, I will break the [b] staff of bread in Jerusalem: and they shall eat bread by weight, and with care; and they shall drink water by measure, and with astonishment:

17 That they may want bread and water, and be astonied one with another, and consume away for their iniquity.

—— the siege] The typical siege. Abp. Newcome.

—— and smite] See ver. 12.

3. — bind them in thy skirts.] This denotes the remnant of the Jews that was left in the land under Gedaliah. But to shew how few were worthy to be snatched from the general destruction, the Prophet is afterwards directed to take a part even of this remnant, and to cast it into the fire, ver. 4. By these last may be understood, that part of the Jews who were destroyed in consequence of Ishmael's conspiracy against Gedaliah; see Jer. xlii. xliii, xliv. W. Lowth.

4. — a fire come forth into all the house of Israel.] The conspiracy of Ishmael was the occasion of the utter ruin of that poor remainder of the Jews which were left in their native country: after this some of them went down into Egypt, where they were all consumed according to Jeremiah's prophecy, chap. xliv. 11; and the rest were entirely carried away by Nebuzar-adan. W. Lowth.

6. — more than the nations,] More than the nations have changed their judgments. See Jer. ii. 11. Abp. Newcome.

—— for they have refused] The reason why the heathen have rejected My laws is, because they have kept constant to the religion of their forefathers; whereas the Jews have rejected that religion which their forefathers received from Me. See the next verse. W. Lowth.

7. — ye multiplied more than the nations] Because you have multiplied your sins more than the nations. Vulgate.

—— according to the judgments of the nations that are round about you;] You have not been so contant and zealous for the true religion, as they have in a false one; compare chap. xvi. 47; Jer. ii. 10, 11. W. Lowth.

9. — the like,] The destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar was a terrible example of Divine vengeance; and the calamities which the city and nation suffered from Titus and Adrian were still more signal. Calmet, Abp. Newcome.

Taking the words in their full extent, and comprehending all the marks of indignation which have already lain upon that people for so many centuries, (and how much longer they may continue we know not,) it may truly be said that none of God's judgments are like it. W. Lowth.

10. — the fathers shall eat the sons &c.] A terrible judgment threatened by Moses, Lev. xxvi. 29. We are not certain from history that this extremity of horrour actually took place in Jerusalem, during the approaching siege by Nebuchadnezzar; all we know is, that the famine was extreme: but if (as there is strong reason to believe) the Lamentations of Jeremiah relate to the circumstances of this siege, we may observe the actual accomplishment of the prophecy contained in this verse, Lam. ii. 20; iv. 10. Calmet.

—— and I will draw out a sword after them.] This imports that God's anger should still pursue them, even unto the countries whither they were banished, and carried captive. This was particularly fulfilled in those that went to Egypt; see Jer. xliii. 7; and it was remarkably verified in the several persecutions and massacres they have undergone at different times, in most of the countries of Europe, in later ages. W. Lowth.

13. — and I will be comforted:] I will satisfy My anger. This and the former expression are borrowed from human passions. As men find some ease and rest in bringing offenders to condign punishment, so God is here described as feeling ease and satisfaction in executing His justice upon incorrigible sinners. Calmet, W. Lowth. See Isai. i. 24; Ezek. xvi. 42.

16. — evil arrows of famine,] A grievous famine, which like unto deadly arrows shall pierce through their souls. Bp. Hall.

17. — evil beasts,] St. Jerome says, that it is by no means rare to see destructive beasts multiply in an abandoned country, and become dangerous to travellers: but the Chaldeans also may be here understood, who spread themselves over the country of Judea, like wild beasts, and committed the ravages here predicted. Nebuchadnezzar is described by the Prophets under the figure of a lion, and of an eagle. See Dan. vii. 4; Ezek. xvii. 3; Jer. xlviii. 40. Calmet.

—— pestilence and blood] "Blood" may here be equivalent to the sword, which is joined with the pestilence, ver. 17: see chap. xxxviii. 22. W. Lowth.

The Prophet tells the people in this chapter, that, because they had rejected God's ordinances, and profaned His sanctuary, and especially because they had imitated, and even exceeded the neighbouring nations in their idolatry, for this reason God would punish them in the sight of those nations: and that, as they had surpassed the other nations in wickedness, He would do to them such things as He had never done before, and would execute His judgments upon them with wrath and fury. Thus God punishes men for their rebellion, adapting their punishment to their crimes; and treating with the greatest severity those, who, having had the greatest share of His favours, ungratefully abuse them. Ostervald.

Chap. VI. ver. 2. — of Israel,] Israel being carried away captive, Judah is called Israel; and perhaps possessed a great part of the country. Abp. Secker.

4. — images] The word used here is generally supposed to signify such images as were erected to the honour of the sun, and is therefore translated sun images in the margin of our Bible. See Isai. xvii. 8. W. Lowth.

5. — before their idols;] This passage seems to imply, that God would permit the Chaldeans to slay the Jews at the feet of their idols, where they should fly for refuge. Calmet.

8. — a remnant,] A gracious exception that often occurs in the Prophets, when they denounce general judgments against the Jews; implying, that God will still preserve a remnant of that people, to whom He will fulfil the promises made to their fathers. See chap. xiv. 22; Jer. xliv. 14. W. Lowth.

9. — shall remember me] They shall repent; the evils which they suffer shall make them reflect upon their wickedness, and turn unto their God. Calmet.

Chap. VII. ver. 2. — unto the land of Israel;] The whole country of Judea; see chap. vi. 2, and note. It is probable that Manasses, and his successors in the kingdom of Judah, had the dominion of the whole land of Canaan, formerly divided into the two kingdoms of Judah and Israel, as tributaries under the kings of Assyria. Dean Prideaux.

—— upon the four corners] St. Jerome says, that the iniquity of the Jews was now arrived at its height; and that the calamity, which the Prophet foretold, would not be peculiar to this or that place, or to this or that tribe, but would fall upon all the people, and all the parts of the promised land. Calmet.

4. — thine abominations shall be in the midst of thee:] The punishment of your abominable idolatries shall be manifest among you. Abp. Newcome.

5. — an only evil,] That evil is come upon thee which alone shall make a despatch of thee: there shall need no other to second it. Bp. Hall.

6. — it watcheth for thee;] Literally, "it awaketh against thee;" see the margin: see ver. 10 of this chapter, and Jer. i. 12. The anger of the Lord, which had slept, is now roused against thee. Calmet.

7. The morning is come unto thee,] The expression alludes to the time when the magistrates used to give sentence against offenders, which was in the morning. W. Lowth.

—— and not the sounding again of the mountains.] The day of thy grievous trouble is actually and really come; which thou shalt find sensibly to be no empty and vain sound of an echo among the mountains, but a true and feeling destruction. Bp. Hall.

Before CHRIST 594.

8 Now will I shortly pour out my fury upon thee, and accomplish mine anger upon thee: and I will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompense thee for all thine abominations.

9 And mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity: I will recompense † thee according to thy ways and thine abominations that are in the midst of thee; and ye shall know that I am the LORD that smiteth.

† Heb. upon thee.

10 Behold the day, behold, it is come: the morning is gone forth; the rod hath blossomed, pride hath budded.

11 Violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness: none of them shall remain, nor of their ‖ multitude, nor of any of ‖ their's: neither shall there be wailing for them.

‖ Or, tumult.
‖ Or, their tumultuous persons.

12 The time is come, the day draweth near: let not the buyer rejoice, nor the seller mourn: for wrath is upon all the multitude thereof.

13 For the seller shall not return to that which is sold, † although they were yet alive: for the vision is touching the whole multitude thereof, which shall not return; neither shall any strengthen himself ‖ in † the iniquity of his life.

† Heb. though their life were yet among the living.
‖ Or, whose life is in his iniquity.
† Heb. his iniquity.

14 They have blown the trumpet, even to make all ready; but none goeth to the battle: for my wrath is upon all the multitude thereof.

15 The sword is without, and the pestilence and the famine within: he that is in the field shall die with the sword; and he that is in the city, famine and pestilence shall devour him.

Before CHRIST 594.

16 ¶ But they that escape of them shall escape, and shall be on the mountains like doves of the valleys, all of them mourning, every one for his iniquity.

17 All [a] hands shall be feeble, and all knees shall † be weak as water.

[b] Isai. 15. 2, 3. Jer. 48. 37.

19 They shall cast their silver in the streets, and their gold shall be † removed: their [c] silver and their gold shall not be able to deliver them in the day of the wrath of the LORD: they shall not satisfy their souls, neither fill their bowels: ‖ because it is the stumblingblock of their iniquity.

‖ Or, made it unto them an unclean thing.

21 And I will give it into the hands of the strangers for a prey, and to the wicked of the earth for a spoil; and they shall pollute it.

22 My face will I turn also from them, and they shall pollute my secret place: for ‖ the robbers shall enter into it, and defile it.

‖ Or, burglers.

23 ¶ Make a chain: for the land is full of bloody crimes, and the city is full of violence.

10. — the rod hath blossomed, pride hath budded.] The rod of oppression and of wickedness, ver. 11, prevails among the Jews, and their pride increases. Abp. Newcome.

11. — into a rod of wickedness:] This appears to be a continuation of the figure in the former verse; the rod had blossomed, and hath now produced the fruit of wickedness, and all is ripe for judgment. Calmet.

12. — let not the buyer rejoice, nor the seller mourn:] The buyer will have no reason to rejoice, because he will not enjoy what he hath bought; nor the seller cause to mourn for the loss of his possessions, which the approaching captivity will for ever deprive him of. W. Lowth.

13. — although they were yet alive:] By the privilege of the law, (see Lev. xxv. 13,) he who had sold his heritage had a right to re-enter upon it at the year of jubilee. But here the Prophet informs the sellers, that even if they should outlive the general calamity, yet being in captivity they could not enjoy the benefit of the law, nor return any more to their possessions. Bp. Hall, W. Lowth.

—— neither shall any strengthen himself &c.] Neither shall any wicked man have cause to encourage himself in the vain confidence of impunity from sin. Bp. Hall.

14. — but none goeth to the battle:] Such is the judicial cowardice that prevails; see ver. 17. Abp. Newcome.

16. — like doves of the valleys,] Doves are found in the valleys on account of the waters they find there, in which they delight. Harmer.

—— all of them mourning,] St. Jerome renders it, "all of them trembling;" an epithet ascribed to doves, Hos. xi. 11; who are by nature timorous. W. Lowth.

19. — their gold shall be removed:] Or, shall be accounted an unclean thing; see the margin: as utterly unprofitable for their relief. Bp. Hall.

—— they shall not satisfy] Their silver and their gold shall not remove the distresses of famine during the siege, because they have employed them to adorn their idols, the iniquitous causes of their fall. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth.

20. As for the beauty of his ornament, he set it &c.] As for His beautiful and glorious temple, He placed it in great majesty among them, as that which might well be their best and greatest ornament; but, &c. See chap. v. 11. Bp. Hall, W. Lowth, Calmet.

—— therefore have I set it far from them.] See the margin. The Prophets, to denote the certainty of the event, speak of what is to come as if it were already done. W. Lowth.

21. — the strangers] The Chaldeans.

22. — enter into it,] My secret place or sanctuary. Abp. Newcome.

23. Make a chain:] Jeremiah is commanded to make bonds and yokes, Jer. xxviii. 2. And Ezekiel is here directed to make a chain, to foreshew the approaching captivity, when king and people should be carried in chains to Babylon. See 2 Kings xxv. 7; Jer. xl. 1. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

Before CHRIST 594.

24 Wherefore I will bring the worst of the heathen, and they shall possess their houses: I will also make the pomp of the strong to cease; and ‖ their holy places shall be defiled.

‖ Or, they shall inherit their holy places.

25 † Destruction cometh; and they shall seek peace, and there shall be none.

† Heb. Cutting off.

26 Mischief shall come upon mischief, and rumour shall be upon rumour; then shall they seek a vision of the prophet; but the law shall perish from the priest, and counsel from the ancients.

27 The king shall mourn, and the prince shall be clothed with desolation, and the hands of the people of the land shall be troubled: I will do unto them after their way, and † according to their deserts will I judge them; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

† Heb. with their judgments.

CHAP. VIII.

1 Ezekiel, in a vision of God at Jerusalem, 5 is shewed the image of jealousy, 7 the chambers of imagery, 13 the mourners for Tammuz, 15 the worshippers towards the sun. 18 God's wrath for their idolatry.

594. AND it came to pass in the sixth year, in the sixth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I sat in mine house, and the elders of Judah sat before me, that the hand of the Lord GOD fell there upon me.

2 Then I beheld, and lo a likeness as the appearance of fire: from the appearance of his loins even downward, fire; and from his loins even upward, as the appearance of brightness, as the colour of amber.

Before CHRIST 594.

3 And he [a]put forth the form of an hand, and took me by a lock of mine head; and the spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem, to the door of the inner gate that looketh toward the north; where was the seat of the image of jealousy, which provoketh to jealousy.

[a] Dan. 5. 5.

4 And, behold, the glory of the God of Israel was there, according to the vision that I [b]saw in the plain.

[b] Chap. 1. 28.

5 ¶ Then said he unto me, Son of man, lift up thine eyes now the way toward the north. So I lifted up mine eyes the way toward the north, and behold northward at the gate of the altar this image of jealousy in the entry.

6 He said furthermore unto me, Son of man, seest thou what they do? even the great abominations that the house of Israel committeth here, that I should go far off from my sanctuary? but turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations.

---

24. — the worst of the heathen,] The Chaldeans; see chap. xxx. 11—24. They were at that time the oppressors of the world, and a terrour to all the countries round about them. W. Lowth.

—— the pomp of the strong] Compare chap. xxiv. 21, and xx. 6; Lev. xxvi. 19. The excellency of their strength; that is, the temple. Abp. Secker.

26. — but the law shall perish from the priest, &c.] But, as a just punishment for their former neglect and security, God shall take away His gifts from their priests and prophets, so as they shall not be able to declare His will unto them for their direction and preservation. Bp. Hall.

Chap. VIII. ver. 1. — in the sixth year, in the sixth month,] This date is one year and two months after the commencement of the vision, chap. i. 1. Abps. Newcome and Secker, Dean Prideaux.

—— and the elders of Judah sat before me,] Men of note for their age or authority, perhaps such as had been members of the greater or lesser consistories before their captivity. W. Lowth.

—— sat before me,] This was the posture of those, who came to hear the instructions of any Prophet or teacher. Compare chap. xiv. 1; xx. 1; xxxiii. 31; 2 Kings iv. 38. In aftertimes the teachers sat in a chair or eminent seat, and the hearers on lower forms at the feet of their master; see Luke x. 39; Acts xxii. 3. W. Lowth. See the note on Deut. xxxiii. 3.

This chapter and the three following contain the particulars of a single vision. Calmet.

3. — the form of an hand,] Just as the form of a hand appeared writing upon the wall, Dan. v. 5. W. Lowth.

—— in the visions of God] By mental representation; as if the Prophet had been personally present. It seems most probable that every thing to chap. xi. 24. passed while the Prophet was in a trance, chap. xi. 25. Ezekiel relates his vision to the elders who sat before him. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

—— the image of jealousy,] What this image was which rivalled Jehovah with the Jews, cannot be ascertained; see 2 Chron. xxxvi. 14. St. Jerome conjectures, that it was the image of Baal, which having been erected by Manasseh, and afterward destroyed by Josiah, had been probably restored by his successors. Others think, that the expression was intended to express the false gods in general, by the worship of which the anger of God had been excited against His people; or it may be, that the false divinity was Adonis; and this conjecture is not without some appearance of reason, as the Prophet, upon his return to the northern gate, where he had first seen "the image of jealousy," beheld women sitting and weeping for Tammuz, and Tammuz was Adonis; see ver. 14. Abp. Newcome, Bp. Hall, Calmet.

By that time the sins of this wretched people were ripe for the punishment of their approaching captivity, they had polluted themselves with all kinds of Egyptian abominations, as appears from this famous vision of the Prophet, wherein their three capital idolatries are so clearly described. The Prophet represents himself as brought in a vision to Jerusalem, and at "the door of the inner gate that looked toward the north," he saw "the seat of the image of jealousy, which provoketh to jealousy." This is a prelude to the visions, which describe the various idolatries of the house of Israel, where, in the noblest stretch of an inspired imagination, idolatry is itself personified and made an idol, and the image sublimely called "the image of jealousy," which the Prophet explains by observing, that "it was that which provoked God to jealousy." He then proceeds to the various scenery of the inspired vision. Bp. Warburton.

4. — in the plain.] See chap. iii. 22, 23.

5. — at the gate of the altar] Probably so called from the time of Ahaz, who placed the brasen altar to the north of the altar, built according to the model of that which he had seen at Damascus, 2 Kings xvi. 14. Abp. Newcome.

6. — go far off from my sanctuary?] That I should forsake it, and deliver it up to the heathen to be polluted, chap. vii. 21, 22. W. Lowth. We may suppose a reference to chap. ix. 3; x. 18; in both which texts the glory of the Lord is said to have changed its place. Michaelis.

Before CHRIST 594.

7 ¶ And he brought me to the door of the court; and when I looked, behold a hole in the wall.

8 Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall: and when I had digged in the wall, behold a door.

9 And he said unto me, Go in, and behold the wicked abominations that they do here.

10 So I went in and saw; and behold every form of creeping things, and abominable beasts, and all the idols of the house of Israel, pourtrayed upon the wall round about.

11 And there stood before them seventy men of the ancients of the house of Israel, and in the midst of them stood Jaazaniah the son of Shaphan, with every man his censer in his hand; and a thick cloud of incense went up.

12 Then said he unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen what the ancients of the house of Israel do in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery? for they say, [c] The LORD seeth us not; the LORD hath forsaken the earth.

Before CHRIST 594.

13 ¶ He said also unto me, Turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations that they do.

[c] Chap. 9.

14 Then he brought me to the door of the gate of the LORD's house which was toward the north; and, behold, there sat women weeping for Tammuz.

15 ¶ Then said he unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations than these.

16 And he brought me into the inner court of the LORD's house, and, behold, at the door of the temple of the LORD, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple of the LORD, and their faces toward the east; and they worshipped the sun toward the east.

17 ¶ Then he said unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? ‖ Is it a light thing to the house of Judah that they com-

‖ Or, Is there any thing lighter than to commit?

7. —the door of the court;] The east gate of the inner court, over which was the council chamber where the Sanhedrim used to meet. Dr. Lightfoot.

8. —dig now in the wall:] We have here a very lively and circumstantial description of the celebrated mysteries of Isis and Osiris. For 1st, the rites are represented as performed in a secret subterraneous place, ver. 7—9. This secret place was, as the Prophet tells us, in the temple. And such kind of places for this use the Egyptians had in their temples, as we learn from a similitude of Plutarch: "Like the disposition," says he, "and the ordonnance of their temples, which in one place enlarge and extend themselves in wings and fair and open aisles; in another, sink into dark and secret subterraneous vestries, like the adyta of the Thebans." 2dly, These rites were celebrated by the Sanhedrim, or the elders of Israel, ver. 11. Now it appears from the best accounts we have of the mysteries, that none but princes, rulers, and the wisest of the people, were admitted to their most secret celebrations. 3dly, The paintings and imagery on the walls of this subterraneous apartment answer exactly to the descriptions, which the ancients have given us, of the mystick cells of the Egyptians. Bp. Warburton.

10. —of creeping things, and abominable beasts,] This practice, so strongly reprobated here, was probably borrowed from the Egyptians. Diodorus Siculus says, "Round the room in Thebes, where the body of king Osymanduas seemed to be buried, a multitude of chambers was built, which had elegant paintings of all the beasts sacred in Egypt." Abps. Secker and Newcome. See the note from Bryant on Deut. iv. 18. Pictures were as much prohibited by the law as carved images, Numb. xxxiii. 52; Lev. xxvi. 1. W. Lowth.

11. —Jaazaniah] Probably a prince of the people. See the close of chap. xi. 1. Abp. Newcome. Shaphan was well known under the reign of king Josiah. See 2 Kings xxii. 3, 9. The seventy "ancients," or elders with him, were probably the members of the Sanhedrim, or great council of the Jews. Bp. Hall.

12. —in the dark,] No darkness, nor secrecy, can hide the knowledge of men's sins from Him, who knoweth all things: no concealment can shelter sinners from His judgment. Ostervald.

14. —weeping for Tammuz.] The ancient expositors consider Tammuz as Adonis.

This was the Phenician superstition. It was derived from the Egyptians, and afterwards the Phenicians improved it. Bp. Warburton, W. Lowth.

The ancient Greeks used to place their dead near the doors of their houses, and to attend them there with mourning. Chandler observed the continuance of this custom when travelling in Greece. The weeping for Tammuz is described as performed near a door of the temple, perhaps with a view to such a custom. Harmer.

15. —turn thee yet again, &c.] This is a description of the Persian superstition. It is to be observed, that, when the Prophet is bid to turn from the Egyptian to the Phenician rites, he is then said to look towards the north, ver. 14, the situation of Phenicia with respect to Jerusalem; consequently, he before stood southward, the situation of Egypt with respect to the same place. And when from thence he is bid to turn into the inner court of the Lord's house, to see the Persian rites, this was east, the situation of Persia: with so much exactness of representation is the whole vision conducted. Again, as the mysterious rites of Egypt are said, agreeably to their usage, to be held in secret by their "elders" and rulers only, so the Phenician rites, for the same reason, are shown as they were celebrated by the people in open day. And the Persian worship of the same, which was performed by the Magi, is here said to be observed by the priests alone; "five and twenty men with their faces toward the east." Bp. Warburton.

16. —between the porch and the altar,] The place where the Jewish priests invoked the mercy of Jehovah for the people. See Joel ii. 17.

——five and twenty men,] Possibly the twelve priests and twelve Levites of the weekly service, with the high priest. Calmet.

——their backs toward the temple] They turned their backs to God Almighty, and their faces to the sun. Perhaps Hezekiah may allude to some such idolatrous practice in that confession of his, 2 Chron. xxix. 6, "Our fathers have done evil in the eyes of the Lord, and have forsaken Him, and turned away their faces from the habitation of the Lord, and turned their backs." "They turned their back unto Him, and not their face;" as Jeremiah expresses their contempt towards Him, chap. ii. 27; xxxii. 33. For this reason the people were commanded to come in at the north or south gate of the outward court of the temple when they came to worship, that they might not at their return turn their backs upon God. See chap. xlvi. 9. The Jews always turned their faces towards the temple when they worshipped. W. Lowth, Dr. Spencer.

17. —the branch to their nose.] The text seems plainly to allude to the Magian fire-worshippers, who, as Strabo tells us, when they were praying before the sacred fire, held a little bunch of twigs in their hand. Dr. Hyde, in his History of the Religion of the ancient Persians, gives a more particular account of this Magian rite; and presents us with a print of a Mage, or priest, standing before the fire altar, and holding the twigs in his left hand. The idolaters mentioned by Ezekiel had their backs turned toward the temple of Jehovah, and "worshipped the sun toward the east, and lo!" while thus worshipping, "they put the branch (or twig) to their nose." Parkhurst.

Chap. IX. ver. 1. —them that have charge over the city] The angels who had the charge of executing God's judgments upon the city, 2 Kings x. 24. W. Lowth. This is prophetical of the slaughter the Babylonians were to make. Abp. Newcome.

2. —six men came from the way of the higher gate, &c.] See chap. viii. 14. And behold there appeared six men according to the number of the principal gates of Jerusalem, in representation of so many destroying angels, which came from the way of the north, which lieth towards Chaldea. Bp. Hall.

—— the higher gate, which lieth toward the north,] This was the north gate of the temple; and it is called "the higher gate," because it was higher in situation than the north gate of the court of the people; the temple being placed on a platform higher than that court. Calmet.

—— with a writer's inkhorn by his side:] To set a mark on those who were to be saved from the common destruction. *W. 3. —from the cherub,] The word "cherub" stands for cherubim, as chap. x. 2. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome. We are to distinguish this appearance of the Divine glory, which had its constant residence in the temple, from that which was shewed particularly to Ezekiel, chap. i. 26; iii. 23; x. 1. W. Lowth.

4. —set a mark upon the foreheads] Compare Rev. vii. 3. The expression alludes to the custom of the Eastern nations, of marking their servants in the forehead. Grotius.

The Easterns used ink in sealing; whence the use of the inkhorn: see ver. 3. Harmer. They make the impression of their name with their seal, generally of cornelian, which they wear with their finger, and which is blackened, when they have occasion to seal with it. Bp. Pococke.

9 And when I looked, behold the four wheels by the cherubims, one wheel by one cherub, and another wheel by another cherub: and the appearance of the wheels was as the colour of a [c] beryl stone.

[c] Chap. 1. 16.

10 And as for their appearances, they four had one likeness, as if a wheel had been in the midst of a wheel.

11 When they went, they went upon their four sides; they turned not as they went, but to the place whither the head looked they followed it; they turned not as they went.

12 And their whole † body, and their backs, and their hands, and their wings, and the wheels, were full of eyes round about, even the wheels that they four had.

† Heb. flesh.

13 As for the wheels, ‖ it was cried unto them in my hearing, O wheel.

‖ Or, they were called in my hearing, wheel, or, galgal.

14 And every one had four faces: the first face was the face of a cherub, and the second face was the face of a man, and the third the face of a lion, and the fourth the face of an eagle.

well to be observed, that when Ezekiel inquired of God, whether He would destroy His people, God answered, that the sins of the Jews were too great not to be avenged; that they had carried their impiety so far as to say, "The Lord hath forsaken the land, the Lord seeth not;" and therefore that He would no longer have any pity on them. When men have arrived at a certain degree of wickedness; when they have lost all fear of God, and every thing is in the utmost disorder; God is, as it were, obliged to execute justice, and His mercy gives way to His vengeance. Ostervald.

Chap. X. ver. 1. — in the firmament] See note on chap. i. 26.

2. — even under the cherub,] The wheels were below or beside the cherubim, and the firmament was above them; and the fire here mentioned ran up and down among the wheels and the cherubim. See chap. i. 13. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth.

—— over the city.] A beautiful prophecy that Jerusalem should be burnt by the Babylonians. Coals of fire frequently denote the Divine vengeance. Abp. Newcome, Dr. E. Pocock.

3. Now the cherubims stood] The cherubim which were part of the vision shewed to Ezekiel.

—— and the cloud filled the inner court.] This bright cloud seems to be an attendant upon that glory, which was represented in this vision to Ezekiel, chap. viii. 4; x. 1. W. Lowth.

4. — the glory of the Lord went up from the cherub,] See chap. ix. 3. To shew them that He meant to remove away from Israel; and yet not all at once, but by degrees, and therefore He removed first only to the threshold of the temple. Bp. Hall.

5. — the outer court,] The noise was heard in the court of the people; for all this passed in the sanctuary. Calmet. See the plan of the temple.

9—12.] See chap. i. 16—18.

10. — had one likeness,] The works of God, however they may sometimes appear diversified to the weak sight of mortals, are always equally and uniformly directed by a consistent wisdom, and always effectual to their proper ends. Bp. Hall.

13. — O wheel.] The wheels were animated with the same principle of understanding and motion, as the living creatures, chap. i. 6—10. W. Lowth. And therefore addressed, because capable of obeying the Great Director. Milton describes them, > —— Wheel within wheel undrawn,

> Itself instinct with spirit.

Michaelis observes, that the original word signifies a storm, or a whirlwind. Abp. Newcome. We learn from this passage, that God takes perfect notice of the events of things, and both gives and judges their motion. Bp. Hall.

14. — the first face was the face of a cherub,] That is, of an ox, as appears by comparing this verse with chap. i. 10. The word "cherub" does originally signify an ox. The several faces are here represented in a different order from the description given of them, chap. i. 10; of which difference this reason may be assigned. In the first chapter, the Prophet saw his vision coming out of the north, and advancing southward, ver. 4, where the face of a man being placed on the south side was first in view. The lion, being

15 And the cherubims were lifted up. This is the living creature that I saw by the river of Chebar.

16 And when the cherubims went, the wheels went by them: and when the cherubims lifted up their wings to mount up from the earth, the same wheels also turned not from beside them.

17 When they stood, these stood; and when they were lifted up, these lifted up themselves also: for the spirit ‖ of the living creature was in them.

‖ Or, of life.

18 Then the glory of the LORD departed from off the threshold of the house, and stood over the cherubims.

19 And the cherubims lifted up their wings, and mounted up from the earth in my sight: when they went out, the wheels also were beside them, and every one stood at the door of the east gate of the LORD's house; and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above.

20 This is the living creature that I saw under the God of Israel by the river of Chebar; and I knew that they were the cherubims.

21 Every one had four faces apiece, and every one four wings; and the likeness of the hands of a man was under their wings.

22 And the likeness of their faces was the same faces which I saw by the river of Chebar, their appearances and themselves: they went every one straight forward.

MOREOVER the spirit lifted me up, and brought me unto the east gate of the LORD's house, which looketh eastward: and behold at the door of the gate five and twenty men; among whom I saw Jaazaniah the son of Azur, and Pelatiah the son of Benaiah, princes of the people.

2 Then said he unto me, Son of man, these are the men that devise mischief, and give wicked counsel in this city:

3 Which say, ‖ It is not [a]near; let us build houses: this city is the caldron, and we be the flesh.

‖ Or, It is not for us to build houses near.

[a] 2 Pet. 3. 4.

4 ¶ Therefore prophesy against them, prophesy, O son of man.

5 And the Spirit of the LORD fell upon me, and said unto me, Speak; Thus saith the LORD; Thus have ye said, O house of Israel: for I know the things that come into your mind, every one of them.

6 Ye have multiplied your slain in this city, and ye have filled the streets thereof with the slain.

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD; Your slain whom ye have laid in the midst of it, they are the flesh, and this city is the caldron: but I will bring you forth out of the midst of it.

8 Ye have feared the sword; and I will bring a sword upon you, saith the Lord GOD.

9 And I will bring you out of the midst thereof, and deliver you into the hands of strangers, and will execute judgments among you.

in the east part, was toward his right hand; the ox, being placed toward the west, was on his left; and the eagle was toward the north. Here the Prophet is supposed to stand by the porch of the temple, (chap. viii. 16,) westward of the Shechinah, as that was moving out of the inner court eastward: see ver. 18, 19. So the ox was first in his view, as being nearest him. W. Lowth, Dr. Spencer.

The prevailing animal characteristick of the living creatures was that of the ox, of which they had not only the head but the feet. Calmet.

18. — departed from off the threshold] Then the Lord removed the testimony of His presence from the temple, and forsook even the very threshold thereof, and stood on high over the cherubim, as signifying that, for the great abominations of Israel, He had withdrawn Himself from them. Bp. Hall.

19. — the wheels also were beside them,] See chap. i. 19—26.

—— at the — east gate] The cherubim stopped, and the glory of the Lord rested over the great eastern gate of the temple, which was the entrance from the city to the court of the people. This was a farther removal. Calmet, W. Lowth.

Chap. XI. ver. 1. — the east gate] The Divine glory had placed itself there before. See chap. x. 19.

—— princes of the people.] Probably members of the great Sanhedrim. Compare chap. viii. 11. W. Lowth.

3. Which say, It is not near; let us build houses: &c.] This image seems first to have been suggested by Jeremiah, chap. i. 13. Jerusalem is there represented as a seething pot, and the fire that should consume its contents was threatened from the north. The fulfilment of this prophecy was then imminent, but the Jews seem to have disregarded it. The twenty-five are represented as teaching the people a false security; as instructing them to build houses in perfect confidence that their generation would at least be safe; that Jerusalem was indeed the caldron, and they the flesh: but that the fire would not consume them, who were only to be prepared and perfected by the process, and would remain in safety to a mature old age. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

5. — Thus have ye said, &c.] Ye have advanced the assertion maintained ver. 3. You have rightly said what you say: "The city is the caldron, and we are the flesh," shall be fulfilled, but not as you understand it; many of you will perish in the city. For those it will be the caldron, and they will be the flesh boiled in it. But yourselves shall not be the flesh in the caldron; but you shall be taken out, and elsewhere cut in pieces. Michaelis, Bp. Hall.

6. Ye have multiplied your slain] See chap. xxii. 3, 4.

7. — but I will bring you forth out of the midst of it.] You shall not die there, but I will reserve you for further punishment. W. Lowth.

9, 10. — I will bring you out of the midst thereof, &c.] See Jer. xxxix. 5; 2 Kings xxv. 19—21.

Before CHRIST 594.

10 Ye shall fall by the sword; I will judge you in the border of Israel; and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

11 This city shall not be your caldron, neither shall ye be the flesh in the midst thereof; but I will judge you in the border of Israel:

12 And ye shall know that I am the LORD: ‖ for ye have not walked in my statutes, neither executed my judgments, but have done after the manners of the heathen that are round about you.

‖ Or, which have not walked.

13 ¶ And it came to pass, when I prophesied, that Pelatiah the son of Benaiah died. Then fell I down upon my face, and cried with a loud voice, and said, Ah Lord GOD! wilt thou make a full end of the remnant of Israel?

14 Again the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

15 Son of man, thy brethren, even thy brethren, the men of thy kindred, and all the house of Israel wholly, are they unto whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said, Get you far from the LORD: unto us is this land given in possession.

16 Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come.

17 Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord GOD; I will even gather you from the people, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel.

Before CHRIST 594.

18 And they shall come thither, and they shall take away all the detestable things thereof and all the abominations thereof from thence.

19 And [b] I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them an heart of flesh:

[b] Jer. 32. 39. ch. 36. 26.

20 That they may walk in my statutes, and keep mine ordinances, and do them: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God.

21 But as for them whose heart walketh after the heart of their detestable things and their abominations, I will recompense their way upon their own heads, saith the Lord GOD.

22 ¶ Then did the cherubims lift up their wings, and the wheels beside them; and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above.

23 And the glory of the LORD went up from the midst of the city, and stood upon the mountain which is on the east side of the city.

24 ¶ Afterwards the spirit took me up, and brought me in a vision by the Spirit of God into Chaldea, to them of the captivity. So the vision that I had seen went up from me.

25 Then I spake unto them of the captivity all the things that the LORD had shewed me.

CHAP. XII.

1 The type of Ezekiel's removing. 8 It shewed the captivity of Zedekiah. 17 Ezekiel's trembling sheweth the Jews' desolation. 21 The Jews' presumptuous proverb is reproved. 26 The speediness of the vision.

10. — the border of Israel;] Called "the entering in of Hamath," 1 Kings viii. 65; 2 Kings xiv. 25, because it was just upon the borders of Judea. W. Lowth.

13. — Then fell I down upon my face, &c.] The Prophet thought this an earnest of the common destruction which was coming upon the inhabitants of the city, and thereupon he earnestly deprecated so severe a judgment. W. Lowth, Bp. Hall.

15. — thy brethren,] Thy fellow captives. St. Jerome remarks upon this passage, that we should never insult those whom God appears to have abandoned; and who suffer under His afflicting hand. The sorrowful and humbled sinner is often more acceptable in the sight of God, than those who live in apparent prosperity, and feel no repentance. Calmet.

16. — a little sanctuary] They could no longer worship God in the holy temple of Jerusalem: but God here promises to serve them as a temple in their exile; to be their refuge and protection; and to give them gracious testimonies of His presence with them. Calmet, Bp. Hall.

17. — I will even gather you from the people,] This may be in some degree fulfilled in those that returned from the captivity; but the utmost completion of this and the following verses may probably be expected at the general restoration of the Jewish nation. Compare chap. xx. 4; xxviii. 25. W. Lowth.

18. — detestable things] The idols, which had been the cause of God's anger. The Jews who returned from the captivity did not relapse into idolatry. Calmet.

19. And I will give them one heart, &c.] And I will give them a holy and happy accordance in My truth; and will renew a right spirit in them; and will take away that perverse and obstinate indisposition which is naturally in them to that which is good; and will give them a tenderness of heart, such as may make them capable of the impressions of My Spirit. Bp. Hall.

We read throughout the Prophets, that the time of the Messiah is all along represented as a time of universal love, and peace, and godliness; wherein as the natures of people shall be changed, and all malice and ill nature rooted out, (Isai. xi,) so God would give them a heart to do His will, and "He would be their God, and they should be His people," ver. 20. Dr. T. Burnett.

23. — went up from the midst of the city,] This was emblematical that God would desert Jerusalem, as well as the temple. Abp. Newcome.

—— and stood upon the mountain which is on the east side] The mount of Olives. W. Lowth. This was the last spot upon which the glory of the Lord rested, before he quitted the devoted city; and it is remarkable, that it was the spot from which the Saviour of the world afterwards ascended up to heaven in the sight of His disciples. Calmet.

24. — in a vision by the Spirit of God into Chaldea,] Returned me back into Chaldea in the same manner as it carried me away from thence, being still under the power of a Divine ecstacy, and the immediate influence of God's Spirit. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST 594.

THE word of the LORD also came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, thou dwellest in the midst of a rebellious house, which have eyes to see, and see not; they have ears to hear, and hear not: for they are a rebellious house.

3 Therefore, thou son of man, prepare thee ‖ stuff for removing, and remove by day in their sight; and thou shalt remove from thy place to another place in their sight: it may be they will consider, though they be a rebellious house.

[a] Chap. 17. 20.

Chap. XII. ver. 2.—thou dwellest in the midst of a rebellious house,] He was among them of the captivity in Chaldea, ver. 10; chap. xi. 24; xiv. 22; and these seem to have disbelieved the prophecies that Jerusalem should be smitten and burnt, and its inhabitants scattered abroad, chap. iv. 2; ix. 5; x. 2; xi. 9. Abp. Newcome.

St. Jerome remarks upon this place, that the words of this chapter were addressed to the Jews of the captivity, who were then regretting that they had listened to the prophecies of Jeremiah, since Jerusalem was still standing, of which he had predicted the fall; and the object of it seems to have been to shew that they, who were left behind to endure the miseries of a siege, and the insults of a conqueror, would be in a worse condition than those who were already captives. Calmet.

3.—prepare thee stuff for removing,] Instruments, furniture, goods, whatever is fitting for a long journey. Abp. Newcome.

——by day] Do this openly, and at noonday, that they may all see and take notice of it. W. Lowth. See the note on chap. iv. 1. There appears no reason for thinking that the Prophet might not really perform all that is mentioned in this chapter, without forfeiting either his discretion or gravity. The manner and circumstances of the whole narrative plead strongly for the strict and literal interpretation. It is no less than seven times repeated, that the Prophet was to do, or did, thus and thus, "in the sight" of the people: and he did it in the "evening," in the "twilight," ver. 7: and "in the morning" after, ver. 8, 9, God came to ask him whether the house of Israel had taken notice of such his uncommon behaviour, and had enquired what it meant. These and other circumstances appear to be very urgent proofs of real fact, and that it is more than a narration of a vision, or a recital of a parable. Dr. Waterland.

4.—thou shalt go forth at even in their sight, &c.] This is as they do in the caravans: they carry out their baggage in the daytime, and the caravan loads in the evening; for in the morning it is too hot to set out in a journey for that day, and they cannot well see in the night. Sir J. Chardin.

6.—thou shalt cover thy face,] The actions of the Prophet were intended for prophetical instruction, and sometimes conveyed it with more force and efficacy than words. Covering the face was a token of shame and grief. Persons condemned to death had their faces covered. David had his head covered when he fled from Absalom, 2 Sam. xv. 30. Calmet.

——for I have set thee for a sign] Language by signs is common in the East: so that when the Prophets in the Old Testament were divinely directed to act a portion of the information, which they were to communicate to the people, they did little or nothing more than what was done every day in the countries where they resided. When Isaiah says, he and his children were for signs; when Jeremiah found his girdle marred as a sign; when Ezekiel was a sign to the people in not mourning for the dead, chap. xxiv, and in his removing into captivity, and digging through the wall; these and similar actions were not only well understood, but they were one customary manner of conveying information, and they had the advantage of being in daily use among the people to whom they were addressed. Fragments to Calmet.

9.—hath not the house of Israel—said] The meaning is, I know that they have said. As, "Are they not written in the book of the acts of Solomon, &c." Houbigant.

——What doest thou?] The actions of the Prophet would naturally produce an anxiety in the minds of the Jews who witnessed them, to know their object and intention. Or, it is probable that the question was asked in pure derision, and therefore they are termed a rebellious house. W. Lowth.

10.—This burden concerneth the prince &c.] Or, "This prophecy is against the prince, against Jerusalem, and against all, &c." Houbigant. By "the prince," king Zedekiah is meant. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth.

——among them.] In the midst of Jerusalem. Michaelis.

11. Say, I am your sign: &c.] Say, God hath appointed to prefigure and foresignify in me what He means to do unto you. Bp. Hall.

12.—they shall dig] For the fact, see Jer. xxxix. 4; lii. 7; 2 Kings xxv. 4. In the passages referred to, the king and his party are said to have escaped through the gate between two walls, by the way of the garden. They might have fled through a breach made by themselves in the wall, or, as Michaelis suggests, the gate through which they fled might have been walled up during the siege, and broken down in their flight. Abp. Newcome.

15 And they shall know that I am the LORD, when I shall scatter them among the nations, and disperse them in the countries.

† Heb. men of number.

18 Son of man, eat thy bread with quaking, and drink thy water with trembling and with carefulness;

† Heb. the fulness thereof.

20 And the cities that are inhabited shall be laid waste, and the land shall be desolate; and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

21 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

22 Son of man, what is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel, saying, The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth?

23 Tell them therefore, Thus saith the Lord GOD; I will make this proverb to cease, and they shall no more use it as a proverb in Israel; but say unto them, The days are at hand, and the effect of every vision.

Before CHRIST 594.

24 For there shall be no more any vain vision nor flattering divination within the house of Israel.

25 For I am the LORD: I will speak, and the word that I shall speak shall come to pass; it shall be no more prolonged: for in your days, O rebellious house, will I say the word, and will perform it, saith the Lord GOD.

26 ¶ Again the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

27 Son of man, behold, they of the house of Israel say, The vision that he seeth is [b] for many days to come, and he prophesieth of the times that are far off.

—— yet shall he not see it, though he shall die there.] Having his eyes put out before he came thither. Josephus tells us, that Zedekiah thought this prophecy inconsistent with that of Jeremiah, chap. xxxiv. 3, that Zedekiah's "eyes should behold the eyes of the king of Babylon;" and therefore believed neither: but they both actually came to pass, as the sacred story assures us. W. Lowth. See note at 2 Kings xxv. 7.

16. — that they may declare] Confessing that they were justly punished for their idolatries and immoralities. Abp. Newcome.

18. — eat thy bread with quaking, &c.] By this action the Prophet is directed to represent the state of terrour, want, and misery, to which the Israelites would be reduced by the siege. Calmet. See ver. 19.

22. — The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth?] Words of the same import with those at ver. 27; and chap. xi. 3. Both of them the words of infidels, who turn the grace of God to wantonness, and take encouragement from His patience and long-suffering to despise His threatenings, as if they would never be fulfilled. Compare Isai. v. 19; Amos v. 18; (W. Lowth, Dr. Waterland:) and to deride His Prophets, as if they had prophesied in vain. Calmet.

23. — and the effect of every vision.] The word or matter of every vision draweth near. Perhaps, "and every vision shall be fact:" and so, perhaps, ver. 25 should be translated, "When I the Lord speak, what I speak shall be fact, and it shall be done: it shall no more be prolonged." Abp. Secker.

24. For there shall be no more any vain vision] The false prophets, who foretold peace and safety, shall see their prophecies so confuted by the events quite contrary to what they foretold, that they will never pretend any more to publish new prophecies. Compare chap. xiii. 23. W. Lowth.

Chap. XIII. ver. 2. — that prophesy,] The true Prophets often denounce God's judgments against the false ones; laying to their charge many misdemeanours in their private conversation, and upbraiding them for unfaithfulness in the office they undertook, of guiding and directing men's consciences, chap. xxii. 25—28; Jer. vi. 14; xxiii. 11; Mic. iii. 5. W. Lowth.

—— out of their own hearts,] Without being inspired or called to the office of prophecy. The fickle and credulous people of the Jews always found persons who were ready to flatter them in their disorders, and who deceived and misled them by false prophecies. Calmet.

12 Lo, when the wall is fallen, shall it not be said unto you, Where is the daubing wherewith ye have daubed it?

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD; I will even rend it with a stormy wind in my fury; and there shall be an overflowing shower in mine anger, and great hailstones in my fury to consume it.

14 So will I break down the wall that ye have daubed with untempered morter, and bring it down to the ground, so that the foundation thereof shall be discovered, and it shall fall, and ye shall be consumed in the midst thereof: and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

15 Thus will I accomplish my wrath upon the wall, and upon them that have daubed it with untempered morter, and will say unto you, The wall is no more, neither they that daubed it;

16 To wit, the prophets of Israel which prophesy concerning Jerusalem, and which see visions of peace for her, and there is no peace, saith the Lord GOD.

17 ¶ Likewise, thou son of man, set thy face against the daughters of thy people, which prophesy out of their own heart; and prophesy thou against them,

[b] Jer. 6. 14.
|| Or, a slight wall.

3. — and have seen nothing!] Who give their own vain imaginations for prophecies, and boast of visions which they have not seen. Calmet.

4. — foxes in the deserts.] Cowardly, unprofitable, and deceitful, they seek only to seize upon their prey, and to gratify their rapacity and sensuality. Calmet.

5. Ye have not gone up into the gaps,] Or, stood in the gap, or breach, as it is expressed, chap. xxii. 30; Ps. cvi. 23.

The phrase is taken from those that put a stop to the enemy when he is just entering in at a breach. In like manner it was the office and duty of those Prophets, if they had truly been what they pretended, by their prayers and intercessions to put a stop to God's vengeance when it was just ready to be poured out upon a sinful people. W. Lowth.

—— neither made up the hedge for the house of Israel] "Nor made up a wall," as the Latin Vulgate translates it. Another expression taken from those that are besieged, who, if a breach be made in a wall, presently make it up, or build up a new one within it, to prevent the enemy from entering, and becoming masters of the city. The original word, here rendered "hedge," signifies any other sort of fortification, Ps. lxii. 3. W. Lowth.

6. — they have made others to hope &c.] Their speaking with so much assurance made others confidently expect that the event should answer their predictions. W. Lowth.

9. — written in the writing of the house of Israel,] Registered in the roll of the house of Israel. Bp. Hall.

The expressions being an allusion to the registers that used to be kept of the members of any city or corporation, the privileges of which society none can pretend to but they whose names are entered into such registers. Compare Ezra ii. 62; Ps. lxix. 28; Luke x. 20; Heb. xii. 23. W. Lowth.

10. — and one built up a wall, and, lo, others daubed it &c.] One laid false grounds of comfort, and the other flourished them over with unsound and plausible pretences. Bp. Hall.

Instead of providing such a fence and bulwark as might secure the people against the judgments that threatened them, (see ver. 5,) they have made a slight wall without any morter or cement to bind and strengthen it; that is, they have applied slight and palliating remedies to publick calamities, which will never give true peace to men's consciences, nor stand them in any stead when God visits for their iniquities: just as if an unskilful builder should undertake to set up a wall, and his fellow workmen should daub it with untempered morter. W. Lowth.

11. — there shall be an overflowing shower;] "When I was at Tozer in December, 1727, we had a small drizzling shower, that continued for the space of two hours; and so little provision was made against accidents of this kind, that several of the houses, which are built only as usual with palm branches, mud, and tiles baked in the sun, corresponding perhaps to, and explanatory of, the 'untempered morter' in Ezekiel, fell down by imbibing the moisture of the shower. Nay, provided the drops had been larger, or the shower of a longer continuance, or 'overflowing,' in the Prophet's expression, the whole city would have undoubtedly dissolved and dropt to pieces." Dr. Shaw.

13. — I will even rend it with a stormy wind &c.] Under these metaphors is foretold the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldean army. Thus the Chaldee Paraphrase expounds it: I will bring a mighty king with the force of a whirlwind, and destroying people as it were an overflowing storm, and powerful princes like great hailstones. W. Lowth.

17. — the daughters of thy people,] As there were occasionally true Prophetesses amongst the Jews, such for instance as

‖ Or, elbows.

19 And will ye pollute me among my people for handfuls of barley and for pieces of bread, to slay the souls that should not die, and to save the souls alive that should not live, by your lying to my people that hear your lies?

20 Wherefore thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I am against your pillows, wherewith ye there hunt the souls ‖ to make them fly, and I will tear them from your arms, and will let the souls go, even the souls that ye hunt to make them fly.

CHAP. XIV.

1 God answereth idolaters according to their own heart. 6 They are exhorted to repent, for fear of judgments, by means of seduced prophets. 12 God's irrevocable sentence of famine, 15 of noisome beasts, 17 of the sword, 19 and of pestilence. 22 A remnant shall be reserved for example of others.

THEN came certain of the elders of Israel unto me, and sat before me. about 594.

2 And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

3 Son of man, these men have set up their idols in their heart, and put the stumblingblock of their iniquity before their face: should I be enquired of at all by them?

Miriam, the sister of Moses, Exod. xv. 20; Deborah, Judges iv. 4; Huldah, 2 Kings xxii. 14: so it appears from this, as well as other places of Scripture, that there were others of the same sex who pretended to this gift without Divine authority. Calmet.

18. —that sew pillows to all armholes, &c.] That speak pleasing and plausible words to all hearers, and fit every man's humour with their flattering divinations. Bp. Hall. This figurative language may be designed to express, that men were taught by the artifices of these female seducers, to recline at ease on their couches, and to partake of banquets in security. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth. Sir J. Chardin mentions, that people of quality in Asia cause carpets and cushions to be carried wherever they like, in order to repose upon them more agreeably. Harmer. "For their further ease likewise and convenience, there is a row of damask or velvet bolsters, ranged along each side of the floor; an indulgence which seems to be alluded to, 'by the sewing of pillows to all armholes,' as we have it expressed by the Prophet Ezekiel." Dr. Shaw.

—and make kerchiefs upon the head of every stature] They did this to persons of every age and stature, without distinction. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome. We are told by some Oriental travellers, that the Eastern women bind on their other ornaments with a rich or embroidered handkerchief, and which is described as completing the headdress of the ladies, and falling without order upon the hair behind. This figurative expression, therefore, may, like the former, relate to those whom the false prophetesses flattered into ease by their allurements. See chap. xxiv. 16, 17, 22, &c. Harmer.

—to hunt souls!] That they may drive them into those nets and snares that they have laid for them, and make them their prey. W. Lowth.

—and will ye save the souls alive] Dare you promise that they shall live, when I promise no such thing? Or can you preserve them alive, whom you deceive by your promises? Are you not at all afraid thus to profane My name, and to ensnare My people? Poole. This verse should seem to mean, that these women made every body easy to his ruin for their own profit. Abp. Secker.

19. And will ye pollute me] Will ye profane My name by making use of it to give credit to your own dreams and lies? W. Lowth.

—pieces of bread,] For the meanest reward, Prov. xxviii. 21. W. Lowth.

—to slay the souls] By pronouncing the sentence of death on the righteous, and by assuring the wicked that they should live; see ver. 22. Abp. Newcome.

"To slay" and "to save alive," signify here, to promise men life, or to threaten them with death. W. Lowth.

20. —to make them fly.] To make them run into those nets and snares that you have laid for them, ver. 18. The metaphor is continued from the manner of hunting and pursuing living creatures, by that means to drive them into the toils prepared for them. W. Lowth.

22. —with lies ye have made the heart of the righteous sad, &c.] In terrifying them with those evils, which shall not come; and encouraged wicked men, by pretending to secure them against those evils which shall surely fall upon them. Bp. Hall.

The faithful minister makes the word of God his only rule, both of faith and of doctrine: he converts it into nourishment for his own soul's health and salvation, and then he administers "the sincere milk of the word" to his hearers. Whereas the seducers and false teachers either withhold the Scriptures from the people, and substitute inventions of their own, which, like "walls built and daubed with untempered morter," can yield no security or defence. Or they pretend to a particular light within, which is no other than a "vain vision," a "lying divination." Or else they set up unfounded interpretations of Scripture, and say, "The Lord saith, albeit the Lord hath not spoken." Scripture, when applied to deceive, and to establish errour, is no Scripture: it changes its nature, ceases to be Divine truth, and becomes a lie. God's word in the mouth of a false teacher is not the word of God. Wogan.

Chap. XIV. ver. 3. —have set up their idols in their heart, &c.] Have given up their hearts to idolatry. Bp. Hall.

—and put the stumblingblock of their iniquity before their face:] And have actually placed before them idols which they worship. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

They are not only inclined to idolatry in their hearts, but have actually set up idols and worshipped them. However, the Prophet shews plainly, that their idolatries consisted, not in entirely deserting, but in polluting with foreign worship, the religion of Moses. Bp. Warburton.

—should I be enquired of at all by them?] Is it fit that such miscreants should come, as these hypocritically do, to inquire aught from Me? Bp. Hall.

Before CHRIST about 594.

4 Therefore speak unto them, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Every man of the house of Israel that setteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the stumblingblock of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to the prophet; I the LORD will answer him that cometh according to the multitude of his idols;

5 That I may take the house of Israel in their own heart, because they are all estranged from me through their idols.

6 ¶ Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Repent, and turn ‖ yourselves from your idols; and turn away your faces from all your abominations.

‖ Or, others.

7 For every one of the house of Israel, or of the stranger that sojourneth in Israel, which separateth himself from me, and setteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the stumblingblock of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to a prophet to enquire of him concerning me; I the LORD will answer him by myself:

8 And I will set my face against that man, and will make him a [a] sign and a proverb, and I will cut him off from the midst of my people; and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

[a] Deut. 28. 37. ch. 5. 15.

9 And if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the LORD [b] have deceived that prophet, and I will stretch out my hand upon him, and will destroy him from the midst of my people Israel.

10 And they shall bear the punishment of their iniquity: the punishment of the prophet shall be even as the punishment of him that seeketh unto him;

11 That the house of Israel may go no more astray from me, neither be polluted any more with all their transgressions; but that they may be my people, and I may be their God, saith the Lord GOD.

12 ¶ The word of the LORD came again to me, saying,

13 Son of man, when the land sinneth against me by trespassing grievously, then will I stretch out mine hand upon it, and will break the [c] staff of the bread thereof, and will send famine upon it, and will cut off man and beast from it:

‖ Or, bereave.

5. That I may take the house of Israel in their own heart,] That I may convince them; catch, surprise them in their own consciences; when they perceive that I am acquainted with their secret idolatries. Abp. Newcome.

7. —or of the stranger that sojourneth in Israel,] "The stranger within thy gates," as it is expressed in the fourth commandment. These devoted themselves to the one true God, although they were not all of them circumcised, for which reason they are styled the worshippers of God, Acts xvi. 14; xviii. 7. W. Lowth.

8. —a sign and a proverb,] A fearful example of My just revenge in every man's mouth. Bp. Hall.

9. —I the Lord have deceived that prophet,] That is, permitted him to be deceived and to deceive the people, as a just judgment upon them for their infidelity, with respect to His true Prophets. This He threatens at the 5th verse; "I will take the house of Israel &c.:" because they have chosen to themselves false gods, I will suffer them to be deceived with false prophets: and that this is the meaning appears by the threatening added, "and I will stretch out My hand upon him, and will destroy him from the midst of My people." Now God will not punish that whereof He is the author. Abp. Tillotson.

10. And they shall bear the punishment of their iniquity:] When God has sufficiently made known His will to men, and they notwithstanding err from the right way, obstinately following their own wills and imaginations, He in His just judgment forsakes them, and then, meeting with seducers, they give ear to lies rather than to the truth. Thus it happened to the Jews, who in consequence perished with their seducers, as Ezekiel here threatens them. It is a dangerous thing to hearken to any other voice than that of God. Ostervald.

13. —when the land sinneth against me by trespassing grievously,] The design of this and the following verses is to shew, that when the inhabitants of a land have filled up the measure of their iniquities, and God ariseth to execute judgment upon them, the few righteous that are left among them shall not be able by their prayers and intercessions to deliver the nation from the judgment decreed against it, "they shall but deliver their own souls;" as we see in the case of Sodom, where there were none righteous but Lot and his family; those just persons were saved themselves, but no intercession could avail to save the city. W. Lowth.

As there is a time of mercy, when the righteousness of one or a few may reprieve a whole nation from destruction; see Gen. xviii. 32; Ps. cvi. 30; Jer. v. 1: so when the appointed time of their fatal stroke is come, though Noah, Daniel, and Job should be in the midst of it, they could prevail no further than the delivery of their own souls. Bp. Sanderson.

——and will break the staff of the bread thereof,] See chap. iv. 16.

14. Though these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it,] Daniel was then in captivity; he was taken in the third year of Jehoiakim, Dan. i. 1; after this, Jehoiakim reigned eight years, 2 Kings xxiii. 36; and this prophecy, as appears from chap. viii. 1, was uttered in the sixth year of Jehoiachin's captivity, who succeeded Jehoiakim, and reigned only three months, 2 Kings xxiv. 6, 8; therefore at this time Daniel had been fourteen years in captivity, and was little more than thirty years of age. It is observable how early the fame of his piety had spread over Chaldea. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth.

All these persons were eminent for their piety. Noah and his family were saved from the universal deluge, and obtained a promise from the Most High, that He would never again destroy the world by an inundation of water. Daniel interceded with the Almighty for the whole nation of the Jews, and obtained a promise of their restoration, Dan. ix. And Job was appointed by God Himself to make intercession for his three friends. But when the Almighty's irreversible decree is gone out against a nation, even the prayers of such favourites of Heaven would be ineffectual to procure their deliverance. The Prophet, in this allusion to Abraham's intercession for Sodom, declares from God, that when His judgments come out against the land of Judea, the righteous found in it should only save themselves: which plainly shews a Providence extending to particulars. Bp. Warburton.

Before CHRIST about 594.

that it be desolate, that no man may pass through because of the beasts:

16 Though these three men were † in it, as I live, saith the Lord GOD, they shall deliver neither sons nor daughters; they only shall be delivered, but the land shall be desolate.

† Heb. in the midst of it.

17 ¶ Or if I bring a sword upon that land, and say, Sword, go through the land; so that I cut off man and beast from it:

18 Though these three men were in it, as I live, saith the Lord GOD, they shall deliver neither sons nor daughters, but they only shall be delivered themselves.

19 ¶ Or if I send a pestilence into that land, and pour out my fury upon it in blood, to cut off from it man and beast:

20 Though Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, as I live, saith the Lord GOD, they shall deliver neither son nor daughter; they shall but deliver their own souls by their righteousness.

‖ Or, Also when.

21 For thus saith the Lord GOD; ‖ How much more when I send my four sore judgments upon Jerusalem, the sword, and the famine, and the noisome beast, and the pestilence, to cut off from it man and beast?

22 ¶ Yet, behold, therein shall be left a remnant that shall be brought forth, both sons and daughters: behold, they shall come forth unto you, and ye shall see their way and their doings: and ye shall be comforted concerning the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, even concerning all that I have brought upon it.

Before CHRIST about 594.

23 And they shall comfort you, when ye see their ways and their doings: and ye shall know that I have not done without cause all that I have done in it, saith the Lord GOD.

CHAP. XV.

1 By the unfitness of the vine branch for any work
6 is shewed the rejection of Jerusalem.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, about 594.

2 Son of man, What is the vine tree more than any tree, or than a branch which is among the trees of the forest?

3 Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work? or will men take a pin of it to hang any vessel thereon?

6 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD; As the vine tree among the trees of the forest, which I have given to the fire for

21. — How much more when I send my four &c.] How much more should there be an utter destruction, when I send, &c. &c. W. Lowth. If it is just with respect to other countries that the good alone should escape punishment, how much more with respect to Jerusalem, after such repeated instructions and admotions? Abp. Newcome.

22. Yet, behold, therein shall be left a remnant] Notwithstanding these four sore judgments, some shall escape and be brought into Chaldea to be your companions in captivity; compare chap. vi. 8; Jer. lii. 29, 30. W. Lowth.

—— both sons and daughters:] See ver. 16, 18, 20, of this chapter.

—— and ye shall see their way and their doings:] Ye shall be made sensible of their guilt and reformation. Abp. Newcome. Those very persons whom I have reserved from destruction, and who shall come here into captivity with you, shall suffice to justify My rigour; you shall witness what their conduct is, and shall acknowledge that destruction has been justly brought upon a nation so perverse and so corrupted. Calmet, Bp. Hall.

23. And they shall comfort you,] This will compose your minds, and make you give glory to God, and acknowledge His judgments to be righteous, though they touch you very nearly in the destruction of your friends and country. W. Lowth.

From the latter part of this chapter we learn, that the sword, famine, pestilence, and other the like calamities, are the punishments inflicted by God upon countries and nations. Especially we are called upon to consider what is here said of Noah, Daniel, and Job, those holy men, so acceptable in the sight of God, that if they were among a nation, which God had determined to destroy, they could not prevent its destruction. The intercession of good men prevaileth much, but is not always effectual for others: nevertheless God takes care of His faithful servants, and exempts them from those punishments and miseries, to which the wicked and sinners are exposed. Ostervald.

Chap. XV. ver. 2. Son of man, What is the vine tree &c.] The vine is a noble plant in respect to the fruit it bears; but in regard of its wood, no shrub is so mean; it is so far from affording any useful timber, that not even a pin can be made from it, on which any vessel may be hung. Lo, such is Israel! if it bore good fruit, it would be dear and precious to Me, but in itself it is but mean and base in comparison of other nations, and unfit for any service: it is only meet to be cast into the fire for fuel. Bp. Hall.

The chief excellence of a parable is, that it contains an image, which is known and proper to the subject, and the use of which was plain, and determined by custom: the necessary consequence of which is perspicuity, wherein the chief beauty of an allegory consists. The Prophets frequently make use of these kinds of images by way of comparison or illustration: and such is this of the useless vine, by which these ungrateful people are more than once described. Bp. Lowth.

4. Behold, it is cast into the fire for fuel;] Wood is very rare in the East: they are reduced therefore to adopt twigs, leaves, &c. Amongst these D'Arvieux notices vine twigs as used for the purpose of fuel. Fragments to Calmet.

—— the fire devoureth both the ends of it, &c.] A fit representation of the present state of Judea, when both its extremities were consumed by the ravages of a foreign enemy, and the midst of it, where the capital city stood, is ready to be destroyed; just as a fire spreads toward the middle part of a stick when both ends of it are lighted. W. Lowth.

9 Then washed I thee with water; yea,

---

7. — another fire shall devour them;] Some of the inhabitants of Jerusalem were destroyed in their own country, and others in Egypt. Abp. Newcome. How dreadful the effects of the raging element of fire are in devouring and consuming any combustible matter on which it seizeth, is a thing so well known, that to compare any thing and the effects of it thereto, is the strongest expression of extensive mischief, and utter destruction, that can be used; see Amos i. 4; Jer. vii. 20. Dr. E. Pocock.

Chap. XVI. ver. 2. — cause Jerusalem to know her abominations,] Declare to them that are with thee, and to them that are at Jerusalem; to these declare by letter, to those by word of mouth, what state was theirs in their infancy, what I did for them, namely, for the whole nation of the Jews. Poole.

3. — Thy birth and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan; &c.] Jerusalem is here represented under the image of an exposed infant, whom God preserved from destruction, brought up, espoused, and exalted to sovereignty: but she proved faithless and abandoned; and therefore God threatens her with severe vengeance, but graciously promises that hereafter He will fulfil His early covenant with her. The allegory is easily understood; and as Mr. Lowth observes, has much force, liveliness, and vehemence of eloquent amplification. The images are adapted to a people immersed in sensuality. Abp. Newcome, Bp. Lowth.

—— of the land of Canaan;] As your fathers sojourned in the land of Canaan before they came to have any right or property in it; so you, their posterity, have all along resembled the manners of Canaan, more than those of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, your ancestors. W. Lowth.

—— thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite.] Those are said to be our parents, in the Scripture dialect, whose manners we resemble: see ver. 45 of this chapter; John viii. 44. There is an expression of the same import in the History of Susanna, ver. 56, that seems to be copied from this text, "O thou seed of Chanaan, and not of Juda, beauty hath deceived thee, and lust hath perverted thine heart." W. Lowth. It is the language of indignation and reproof. Abp. Newcome. See the note on Job xxx. 29.

4. — in the day thou wast born] The forlorn condition of the Israelites in Egypt is here described under the similitude of a newborn infant, exposed in its native filthiness, without any friend to pity its condition, or to take the least care of it. W. Lowth, Bp. Hall.

—— not salted at all,] Galen says, that by rubbing a small quantity of salt upon a newborn infant, the skin is rendered thicker and more solid. Abp. Newcome.

5. — but thou wast cast out in the open field,] Every one knows the barbarous custom which prevailed among the ancients, of exposing their children on account of poverty, or some natural defect. This inhuman practice was not permitted among the Hebrews: but Ezekiel alludes to it here, as a thing common and well known amongst other nations. Calmet.

6. — when thou wast in thy blood,] Whilst as yet nobody took so much care of thee, as to wash thee from thy native filthiness, ver. 4, I took pity on thee, as a traveller that passes by and sees an infant lie exposed; and I provided all things necessary for thy support. W. Lowth.

7. I have caused thee to multiply &c.] For multitude the people are compared to the numberless buds of the herb; for flourishing they are like the bud in the beauty of its spring: and both include the goodness and richness of the land they dwelt in. Poole.

—— and thou art come to excellent ornaments:] As jewels and rich vestments set off a beautiful person, so the successes in enterprises, rich returns in merchandise, and fruitfulness of the country itself, were the lustre of thy beauty, which all thy neighbours courted: thou wast adorned with the choicest blessings of Divine Providence. Poole.

8. — thy time was the time of love;] When I rejoiced in thee, and espoused thee to be My wife. Poole.

—— I spread my skirt over thee,] See Ruth iii. 9. I took thee under My protection, as a husband doth the wife. W. Lowth.

9. Then washed I thee with water; &c.] The allegory is here continued, and declares what more was done to prepare this virgin for advancement by this marriage covenant. The Prophet

Before CHRIST 594.

I throughly washed away thy † blood from thee, and I anointed thee with oil.

† Heb. bloods.

10 I clothed thee also with broidered work, and shod thee with badgers' skin, and I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk.

11 I decked thee also with ornaments, and I put bracelets upon thy hands, and a chain on thy neck.

12 And I put a jewel on thy forehead, and earrings in thine ears, and a beautiful crown upon thine head.

13 Thus wast thou decked with gold and silver; and thy raiment was of fine linen, and silk, and broidered work; thou didst eat fine flour, and honey, and oil: and thou wast exceeding beautiful, and thou didst prosper into a kingdom.

14 And thy renown went forth among the heathen for thy beauty: for it was perfect through my comeliness, which I had put upon thee, saith the Lord GOD.

15 ¶ But thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications on every one that passed by; his it was.

16 And of thy garments thou didst take, and deckedst thy high places with divers colours, and playedst the harlot thereupon: the like things shall not come, neither shall it be so.

17 Thou hast also taken thy fair jewels of my gold and of my silver, which I had given thee, and madest to thyself images † of men, and didst commit whoredom with them,

Before CHRIST 594.

18 And tookest thy broidered garments, and coveredst them: and thou hast set mine oil and mine incense before them.

† Heb. of a male.

19 My meat also which I gave thee, fine flour, and oil, and honey, wherewith I fed thee, thou hast even set it before them for † a sweet savour: and thus it was, saith the Lord GOD.

† Heb. a savour of rest.

20 Moreover thou hast taken thy sons and thy daughters, whom thou hast borne unto me, and these hast thou sacrificed unto them † to be devoured. Is this of thy whoredoms a small matter, † Heb. to devour.

21 That thou hast slain my children, and delivered them to cause them to pass through the fire for them?

22 And in all thine abominations and thy whoredoms thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth, when thou wast naked and bare, and wast polluted in thy blood.

23 And it came to pass after all thy wickedness, (woe, woe unto thee! saith the Lord GOD;)

24 That thou hast also built unto thee an ‖ eminent place, and hast made thee an high place in every street.

‖ Or, brothel house.

25 Thou hast built thy high place at every head of the way, and hast made thy beauty to be abhorred, and hast opened thy feet to every one that passed by, and multiplied thy whoredoms.

26 Thou hast also committed fornication probably alludes to a very ancient custom among the Eastern people, of purifying virgins who were soon to be espoused: see Esth. ii. 12. Poole. I added every thing that could contribute to thy beauty and ornament. The anointing with oil was an essential part in a festival dress, Ruth iii. 3; Isai. lxi. 3; Matt. vi. 17. W. Lowth.

10. — and shod thee with badgers' skin, &c.] This and the following verses allude to those parts of women's dress, which serve not only for use, but for ornament; and represent the varieties of wealth, luxury, and honour, which were bestowed by God upon the Jewish people. W. Lowth.

—— badgers' skin,] See note at Exod. xxv. 5: and respecting the shoes worn, see note at Cant. vii. 1.

12. — a jewel on thy forehead,] The same which is called a "nose jewel," Isai. iii. 21. See note at Gen. xxiv. 22.

—— and a beautiful crown upon thine head.] Crowns or garlands were used in times of publick rejoicing; from whence is derived that expression of St. Paul, a "crown of rejoicing," 1 Thess. ii. 19. Virgins were sometimes adorned with crowns: see Baruch vi. 9: and such ornaments were commonly put on the heads of persons newly married. W. Lowth.

13. — thou didst eat fine flour, and honey, and oil:] Thy country afforded all manner of plenty and delicacies. W. Lowth.

14. And thy renown went forth among the heathen for thy beauty:] Thy name was great and honoured among the most distant nations, for the prosperity of thy country, the riches of thy merchants, the abundance of thy peace, the excellent form of thy civil government and its laws, and the holiness, purity, and truth of thy religion. Poole.

15. — and playedst the harlot &c.] Hast yielded over thyself to the spiritual fornications of all the nations round about thee. Bp. Hall.

16. And of thy garments thou didst take, &c.] Those ornaments of wit, of strength, of wealth, which I had bestowed upon thee, thou hast turned to the countenancing and furtherance of gross idolatries. Bp. Hall.

—— the like things shall not come,] Such things have never before been, and shall never be again, without bringing down My vengeance upon the authors of them. Calmet.

17. — images of men,] Images of deified heroes. W. Lowth. See chap. xxiii. 14, 15. Probably the Prophet might have intended in this passage an allusion to those obscene figures which were carried in the ceremonies of Tammuz or Adonis. Calmet.

20. — thy sons and thy daughters,] See notes at Lev. xviii. 21; Deut. xviii. 10.

25. Thou hast built thy high place at every head of the way, &c.] These and the following expressions allude to the practices of common harlots, who used to frequent the most publick places to allure passengers to them: see Prov. ix. 14, 15: idolatry being in this chapter and elsewhere compared to fornication. W. Lowth. See Isai. lvii. 5; Jer. ii. 23, 24. See notes at Deut. xii. 2.

‖ Or, cities.

28 Thou hast played the whore also with the Assyrians, because thou wast unsatiable; yea, thou hast played the harlot with them, and yet couldest not be satisfied.

29 Thou hast moreover multiplied thy fornication in the land of Canaan unto Chaldea; and yet thou wast not satisfied herewith.

30 How weak is thine heart, saith the Lord GOD, seeing thou doest all these things, the work of an imperious whorish woman;

‖ Or, In thy daughters is thine, &c.

31 ‖ In that thou buildest thine eminent place in the head of every way, and makest thine high place in every street; and hast not been as an harlot, in that thou scornest hire;

Before CHRIST 594.

35 ¶ Wherefore, O harlot, hear the word of the LORD:

36 Thus saith the Lord GOD; Because thy filthiness was poured out, and thy nakedness discovered through thy whoredoms with thy lovers, and with all the idols of thy abominations, and by the blood of thy children, which thou didst give unto them;

37 Behold, therefore I will gather all thy lovers, with whom thou hast taken pleasure, and all them that thou hast loved, with all them that thou hast hated; I will even gather them round about against thee, and will discover thy nakedness unto them, that they may see all thy nakedness.

38 And I will judge thee, † as women that break wedlock and shed blood are judged; and I will give thee blood in fury and jealousy.

† Heb. with judgments of.

39 And I will also give thee into their hand, and they shall throw down thine eminent place, and shall break down thy high places: they shall strip thee also of thy clothes, and shall take † thy fair jewels, and leave thee naked and bare.

26. — the Egyptians] They were remarkable for many gross idolatries; and the Jews had learnt to practise them. See chap. xx. 7, 8; Lev. xx. 3; Deut. xxix. 16, 17; Josh. xxiv. 14. Of all the idolatrous nations the Egyptians have exercised the greatest indecencies in their worship. Calmet.

27. — have diminished thine ordinary food,] I will abandon you like an adulteress. The law commanded that certain things should be given by husbands to their wives. See Exod. xxi. 10. God says, that He will take away all these things from His faithless spouse. Calmet.

—— and delivered thee unto the will &c.] As a punishment of the idolatries which king Ahaz introduced amongst you: see ver. 57; and 2 Chron. xxviii. 18, 19. "The daughters of the Philistines" are here put for the Philistines; as the daughters of Samaria, Sodom, and the Syrians, stand for the people of those places, ver. 46, 48, 57; to carry on the allegory and comparison between them and Jerusalem, being all of them described as so many lewd women prostituting themselves to idols: see ver. 41. By the same metaphor Samaria and Sodom are called sisters to Jerusalem, ver. 46. W. Lowth.

—— which are ashamed of thy lewd way.] Those have not forsaken the religion of their country, as you Jews have done; nor have been so fond of foreign idolatries. Compare chap. v. 7; Jer. ii. 11. W. Lowth. Or it means, that they were ashamed of the excess, to which their abominations were carried by the Jews.

30. How weak is thine heart,] Having neither strength of judgment to discern the truth and purity of religion, nor strength of resolution to hold fast to it. Poole.

—— imperious — woman;] No way restrained in thy licentiousness. Abp. Newcome.

31. — thine eminent place] See ver. 16, 24.

33. — but thou givest thy gifts &c.] The Jews are often upbraided for making leagues with idolaters, and courting their favours by presents, and by complying with their idolatries, Isai. xxx. 6; lvii. 5—9. W. Lowth.

34. — whereas none followeth thee to commit whoredoms:] It is not meant, that no particular Gentile ever embraced the Jewish religion; but that no Gentile people took in any of its rites into their national worship. Bp. Warburton.

36. — by the blood of thy children,] See ver. 20; Jer. ii. 34.

37. — all thy lovers,] Thy allies.

—— with all them that thou hast hated;] Compare ver. 41. Such were Edom, Moab, and Ammon; who always bore a spite to the Jews, and insulted over their calamities, chap. xxv. 3, 8, 12. W. Lowth.

—— and will discover thy nakedness] I will put thee to shame and confusion before the faces of those which consorted with thee in thine idolatries. Bp. Hall. After the taking of Jerusalem, the shame of that unhappy city was fully seen. The enemy beat down, broke in pieces, and pillaged the idols, to which she had delivered herself: she then found too late the vanity of her hopes, and the absurdity of her worship. Calmet.

38. — as women that break wedlock] Adultery and idolatry, which is spiritual adultery, were both capital offences by the law, Lev. xx. 10; Deut. xvii. 2, 7. Abp. Newcome.

against thee, and they shall stone thee with stones, and thrust thee through with their swords.

41 And they shall [a] burn thine houses with fire, and execute judgments upon thee in the sight of many women: and I will cause thee to cease from playing the harlot, and thou also shalt give no hire any more.

[a] 2 Kings 25. 9. Jer. 52. 13.

42 So will I make my fury toward thee to rest, and my jealousy shall depart from thee, and I will be quiet, and will be no more angry.

43 Because thou hast not remembered the days of thy youth, but hast fretted me in all these things; behold, therefore I also will recompense thy way upon thine head, saith the Lord GOD: and thou shalt not commit this lewdness above all thine abominations.

44 ¶ Behold, every one that useth proverbs shall use this proverb against thee, saying, As is the mother, so is her daughter.

45 Thou art thy mother's daughter, that lotheth her husband and her children; and thou art the sister of thy sisters, which lothed their husbands and their children: your mother was an Hittite, and your father an Amorite.

46 And thine elder sister is Samaria, she and her daughters that dwell at thy left hand: and † thy younger sister, that dwelleth at thy right hand, is Sodom and her daughters.

Before CHRIST 594.

† Heb. lesser than thou.

47 Yet hast thou not walked after their ways, nor done after their abominations: but, ‖ as if that were a very little thing, thou wast corrupted more than they in all thy ways.

‖ Or, that was lothed as a small thing.

48 As I live, saith the Lord GOD, Sodom thy sister hath not done, she nor her daughters, as thou hast done, thou and thy daughters.

49 Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy.

50 And they were haughty, and committed abomination before me: therefore [b] I took them away as I saw good.

[b] Gen. 19. 24.

51 Neither hath Samaria committed half of thy sins; but thou hast multiplied thine abominations more than they, and hast justified thy sisters in all thine abominations which thou hast done.

40. — and they shall stone thee with stones,] The ordinary punishment for adultery was stoning, John viii. 5. So the walls of the city of Jerusalem were beaten down with stones, flung out of battering engines. See Jer. xxxiii. 4. Calmet, W. Lowth.

41. — many women:] Many nations. The Syrians, Philistines, and other nations. W. Lowth.

—— thou also shalt give no hire any more.] Thou shalt not be able any more to give the hire of fornication to thy mercenary lovers. Bp. Hall.

42. — to rest,] I will reject you, and will think no more of you. Calmet.

43. — the days of thy youth,] The favours I conferred upon thee, and the covenants I made with thee in thy youth. Bp. Hall. See ver. 22.

44. Behold, every one that useth proverbs &c.] Thy notorious sin shall be the ordinary by-word of the world, who shall say, As is the mother Canaan, so is the daughter Judah. Bp. Hall.

45. Thou art thy mother's daughter, &c.] Like her in wickedness and sin: as she, so thou hast cast off thy God, and all that appertain unto Him. Bp. Hall.

—— which lothed] In imitation of which unnatural practice, thou hatest Me thy husband, and offerest thy children to idols. Abp. Newcome.

46. And thine elder sister is Samaria, &c.] Or the ten tribes of Israel. She, and those her daughter cities, that lie to the north; and thy younger sister that dwelleth to the south, is Sodom, and the cities appertaining unto her. Bp. Hall.

By Sodom, the Ammonites and Moabites seem here to be meant. These people, whose father Lot went out of Sodom, and whose country bordered upon the Dead sea, or the lake of Sodom, are called the younger sister of Jerusalem; partly because they were less in number than the Samaritans, and partly because they were more distant from Jerusalem than Samaria. Grotius, Calmet. Sodom was on the right, and Samaria was on the left: that is, the first was to the south, the second to the north. The Jews speak of the situation of places, upon the supposition that they stand with their faces to the east, and their backs to the west; the right hand will then be to the south, and the left to the north. The same way of speaking is still used in the ancient British, or Welsh language. Abp. Usher.

47. Yet hast thou not walked after their ways, &c.] Thou hast not contented thyself to do after their example; but, &c. Bp. Hall.

49. —this was the iniquity of — Sodom, &c.] We may learn from this passage of the Prophet, how odious in the sight of God are intemperance, vanity, and want of mercy to the poor. These reproaches may regard the ancient Sodomites less perhaps than the Moabites and the Ammonites of that day, who were extremely wicked and corrupted, as appears from Isai. xvi. 6; Jer. xlviii. 29, 30; and xlix. 4. Calmet.

—— abundance of idleness] In places, where there is least work, the worst sins do most prevail: and idleness therefore is by the Prophet reckoned one of the three great sins of Sodom, parents of the rest. It seldom happens in any way of life, that a sluggard and a profligate do not go together, or that he, who is idle, is not also dissolute. Dr. Isaac Barrow.

51. — and hast justified thy sisters in all &c.] Thou hast made thy sister's wickedness to appear small in comparison of thine. Bp. Hall. The ingratitude of Jerusalem was greater than that of Samaria. God had placed His name in Jerusalem, and they forsook His worship, and profaned His temple, by placing idols in it; a degree of idolatry beyond any thing the ten tribes had been guilty of. W. Lowth.

52. — bear thine own shame] Expect to undergo the shame and judgment, which thy own greater and more abominable sins have deserved. Bp. Hall.

[c] Gal. 4. 26.

62 And I will establish my covenant with thee; and thou shalt know that I am the LORD:

about 594.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, put forth a riddle, and speak a parable unto the house of Israel;

3 And say, Thus saith the Lord GOD; A great eagle with great wings, longwinged,

53. When I shall bring again their captivity, &c.] The meaning is, When the fulness of the Gentiles shall come into the Church, (some of whom may be compared to Sodom for wickedness,) then will I also remember you who are My ancient people. The conversion of the Gentiles is expressed in Jeremiah by the returning of the captivity of Moab, Ammon, and Elam, chap. xlviii. 47; xlix. 6, 39; and by the Egyptians, Ethiopians, and Syrians, acknowledging themselves His servants in the prophecy of Isaiah, chap. xix. 24, 25; xxiii. 18. And by the same analogy we are to understand the returning of "the captivity of Sodom," here, of the Gentiles coming into the Church. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome. See below, verses 60—63, which seem to explain the sense of this passage.

54. That thou mayest bear thine own shame, &c.] In the mean time thou shalt bear the shame and punishment due to thy sins, and shalt be some sort of comfort to thy neighbours, in being a companion with them in punishment, as thou hast been in wickedness. W. Lowth.

56, 57. For thy sister Sodom &c. — Before thy wickedness was discovered,] These words should be joined together in the same verse or sentence. W. Lowth. "Thou never thoughtest of the judgment which I brought upon thy sister Sodom, while thou wert transported with thy security and pride; before that God, by His inflicted judgments, brought forth thy wickedness to the notice of the world; and before He made thee a reproach to the Syrians, and to the Philistines, and to the people adjoining; all which have despitefully insulted upon thee." Bp. Hall.

59. — in breaking the covenant.] The solemn oath you entered into to be My people, and to serve no other God besides, Deut. xxix. 12—14. W. Lowth.

60. Nevertheless I will remember my covenant &c.] The Lord, having denounced a perpetual punishment upon the stubborn impenitent body of the Jewish nation, here promises to the remnant, that they shall be remembered and obtain mercy by that covenant, which is announced in the concluding part of the chapter. Poole.

—— an everlasting covenant.] That of the Gospel. See Jer. xxxii. 40. W. Lowth.

61. — when thou shalt receive thy sisters,] See ver. 53, 55. Converted with thee to Christianity. Abp. Newcome. Thou, who didst not blush, whilst thou wast false to thine husband, shalt now with a deep shame remember and detest thy lewdness, when thou shalt admit thy sisters into communion with thee, or own them as members of the Church of Christ. Poole.

—— I will give them unto thee for daughters,] Jerusalem thus restored shall be a type of that heavenly Jerusalem, which is "the mother of us all," Gal. iv. 26. And even in the times of the Apostles there was a particular deference paid to the Church of Jerusalem, as the mother Church of the Christian world. See Rom. xv. 26, 27. Accordingly she is styled "the mother of all Churches," by the second general council, in their synodical Epistle: a title, which the Church of Rome now assumes, without any pretence from Scripture or antiquity. W. Lowth.

—— not by thy covenant.] But by the covenant under the Gospel. Bp. Hall, Abp. Newcome.

The Gentile nations, represented in this very remarkable prophecy by Sodom and Samaria, are become the daughters of Jerusalem by that new alliance, in which Jesus Christ has been graciously pleased to comprehend strangers together with His children, the Gentiles together with the Jews. Calmet.

62. And I will establish my covenant with thee;] With thee, O Israel, first; and then with the Gentiles, as thy children; with all the genuine children of Abraham, father of the faithful. Poole.

verses. In more than one place, conquerors are represented under the figure of eagles, which are birds of prey, remarkable for their swiftness, Deut. xxviii. 49; Jer. iv. 13. W. Lowth. See the note on Jer. xlviii. 40.

——feathers, which had divers colours,] An allusion to the various nations which composed the Babylonian empire. Michaelis. Or to the rites and various forms of government in those nations. Bp. Hall.

—— came unto Lebanon, and took the highest branch of the cedar:] Came to Judea, where Lebanon is conspicuous and renowned, and took Jehoiachin captive, ver. 12, and 2 Kings xxiv. 12. Bp. Hall.

Respecting the "cedar," see note at 1 Kings v. 6.

It seems there is a foundation in nature for joining the eagle and the cedars together. "We employed the rest of the day," says La Roque, (speaking of the spot where the cedars of Lebanon grew,) "in attentively surveying the beauties of this place, in measuring some of the cedars, and in cutting off many of their branches with their cones; which we sent away with a number of large eagle's feathers, which were found in the same place." Harmer.

4. — the top of his young twigs,] All their prime nobility and able soldiery. Bp. Hall.

—— a land of traffick;] Babylon is called a land of traffick, because in fact it was at that time the most celebrated place of all the East for commerce. Its situation possessed infinite advantages in this respect: the two rivers, the Tigris and Euphrates, and the Persian gulph, opened it a way into the richest and most distant countries. The vast extent of the dominions of Nebuchadnezzar afforded the greatest facilities to the journies of the merchant, and to the transport of merchandise; finally, the affluence of the people, and the riches of Babylon, attracted thither from all parts of the world a multitude of traders. Calmet.

Strabo takes notice, that the merchants who travelled by land to Babylon, went through the country of the Arabians, called Scenitæ: and vessels of great burden came up to the walls of it from the Persian gulph, by the Euphrates, as appears from Pliny. W. Lowth.

5. — of the seed of the land,] Of the king's seed, as it is explained ver. 13, that is, Zedekiah. W. Lowth, Bp. Hall.

—— in a fruitful field;] The land of Judea. Abp. Newcome.

6. — of low stature, whose branches turned toward him, &c.] Alluding to the tributary state of Zedekiah, and to his subjection to the king of Babylon. Abp. Newcome.

7. — another great eagle] Pharaoh king of Egypt. This prince was also great and powerful, but less so than the king of Babylon. Calmet.

—— this vine did bend her roots toward him,] Zedekiah, weary of the yoke of Babylon, requested succour from the king of Egypt, thinking, under the protection of Egypt, to cast off the Babylonish yoke, and to set himself at liberty. For the event, see Jer. xxxvii. 4—7. Calmet.

—— that he might water it] That the king of Egypt might protect Zedekiah. Abp. Newcome.

8. It was planted in a good soil] The words are to the same purpose as ver. 5, to shew that Zedekiah's condition was so good under the king of Babylon, that he needed not to have broken his oath, out of a desire to better it; whereby he involved himself and his country in ruin, 2 Kings xxiv. 20. W. Lowth.

9. — even without great power] It is an effect which may be produced with ease, God being on the side of the Chaldeans. Abp. Newcome. In fact, the conquest of Jerusalem cost but little to the king of Babylon. Zedekiah made but a slight resistance; he fled during the night with a few of his people, and was taken in the desert of Jericho. Calmet.

10. — when the east wind toucheth it?] The Prophet compares the army of Nebuchadnezzar to a parching wind that blasts the fruits of the earth, withers the leaves of the trees, and makes every thing look naked and bare. See chap. xix. 12; Isai. xxvii. 8. W. Lowth.

13. And hath taken of the king's seed, &c.] Hath made Zedekiah swear an oath of fealty to him, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13. W. Lowth.

—— the mighty of the land:] As hostages, for performance of the covenant between him and Zedekiah. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST about 594.

15 But he rebelled against him in sending his ambassadors into Egypt, that they might give him horses and much people. Shall he prosper? shall he escape that doeth such things? or shall he break the covenant, and be delivered?

16 As I live, saith the Lord GOD, surely in the place where the king dwelleth that made him king, whose oath he despised, and whose covenant he brake, even with him in the midst of Babylon he shall die.

17 Neither shall Pharaoh with his mighty army and great company make for him in the war, by casting up mounts, and building forts, to cut off many persons:

18 Seeing he despised the oath by breaking the covenant, when, lo, he had given his hand, and hath done all these things, he shall not escape.

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD; As I live, surely mine oath that he hath despised, and my covenant that he hath broken, even it will I recompense upon his own head.

[a] Chap. 12. 13. & 32. 3.

20 And I will [a] spread my net upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare, and I will bring him to Babylon, and will plead with him there for his trespass that he hath trespassed against me.

21 And all his fugitives with all his bands shall fall by the sword, and they that remain shall be scattered toward all winds: and ye shall know that I the LORD have spoken it.

22 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD; I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and will set it; I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain and eminent:

Before CHRIST about 594.

23 In the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it: and it shall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit, and be a goodly cedar: and under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; in the shadow of the branches thereof shall they dwell.

24 And all the trees of the field shall know that I the LORD have brought down the high tree, have exalted the low tree, have dried up the green tree, and have made the dry tree to flourish: I the LORD have spoken and have done it.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 God reproveth the unjust parable of sour grapes. 5 He sheweth how he dealeth with a just father: 10 with a wicked son of a just father: 14 with a just son of a wicked father: 19 with a wicked man repenting: 24 with a just man revolting. 25 He defendeth his justice, 31 and exhorteth to repentance.

THE word of the LORD came unto me again, saying, 594.

2 What mean ye, that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel, saying, The [a] fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge? [a] Jer. 31. 29.

3 As I live, saith the Lord GOD, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel.

4 Behold, all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: the soul that sinneth, it shall die.

15. — that they might give him horses &c.] Cavalry for war. Egypt was a country which abounded in horses, of which there was a great scarcity in Judea. W. Lowth. See notes at Deut. xvii. 16.

16. — in the midst of Babylon he shall die.] See chap. xii. 13.

17. — by casting up mounts,] See Jer. xxxii. 24. It appears from Ezekiel, chap. xxx. 21, that there was a battle in which Pharaoh was beaten. Calmet.

18. — when, lo, he had given his hand,] See the notes on 2 Kings x. 15; 1 Chron. xxix. 24.

20. — spread my net] See chap. xii. 13.

21. — scattered] Some in Egypt, some in Chaldea, and others in different countries where chance, or rather the avenging hand of God, conducted them. Calmet.

22. — I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar, &c.] I will at the last work out the delivery and redemption of My people; out of the seed of David, will I raise up the Messiah, and set him on high in My holy Church. Bp. Hall.

23. In the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it:] Even in My glorious evangelical Church will I exalt His power; and He shall spread My Gospel, and enlarge His spiritual dominions all the world over; and all His elect shall shroud themselves under His grace and protection. Bp. Hall.

The holy mountain is often used by the Prophets to denote the Christian Church. W. Lowth.

24. And all the trees of the field shall know &c.] And all the people of the earth shall know, that I have brought down the proud and mighty tyrants of the world; and have exalted this meek and despised Saviour of mankind, above every name that is named in heaven and earth. Bp. Hall.

These circumstances, mentioned in ver. 22—24, can properly refer to no other than our Saviour Christ; who has collected in His Church, and under His empire, all the birds of heaven; that is, all those who have been able to elevate themselves above earthly things, by attaching themselves only to God through the profession and the practice of Christianity. W. Lowth, Bp. Hall, Calmet. Whereas the judgments threatened in this chapter might seem to indicate the utter extirpation of the seed of David, the Lord is here pleased to assure its continuance, and the raising of the Messiah from that house according to promise. Poole. And thus this prophecy, as well as that contained in the last chapter, closes its denunciation of woes with a striking passage relating to the kingdom of Christ.

Chap. XVIII. ver. 2. — concerning the land of Israel,] With respect to the desolations made in it by the sword, famine, and pestilence: chap. vi. 2, 3; and vii. 2. W. Lowth.

—— The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge?] The Chaldee paraphrase explains the proverb rightly: "The fathers have sinned, and the sons are smitten:" see the notes on Exod. xx. 5; Deut. v. 9: also on Jer. xxxi. 29, 30.

4. — all souls are mine;] All persons and their lives. I will deal with them without prejudice or partiality. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST 594.

5 ¶ But if a man be just, and do that which is † lawful and right,

6 And hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lifted up his eyes to the idols of the house of Israel, neither hath [b] defiled his neighbour's wife, neither hath come near to [c] a menstruous woman,

7 And hath not [d] oppressed any, but hath restored to the debtor his [e] pledge, hath spoiled none by violence, hath [f] given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment;

8 He that hath not given forth upon [g] usury, neither hath taken any increase, that hath withdrawn his hand from iniquity, hath executed true judgment between man and man,

9 Hath walked in my statutes, and hath kept my judgments, to deal truly; he is just, he shall surely live, saith the Lord GOD.

10 ¶ If he beget a son that is a ‖ robber, a shedder of blood, and ‖ that doeth the like to any one of these things,

11 And that doeth not any of those duties, but even hath eaten upon the mountains, and defiled his neighbour's wife,

12 Hath oppressed the poor and needy, hath spoiled by violence, hath not restored the pledge, and hath lifted up his eyes to the idols, hath committed abomination,

13 Hath given forth upon usury, and hath taken increase: shall he then live? he shall not live: he hath done all these abominations; he shall surely die; his † blood shall be upon him.

14 ¶ Now, lo, if he beget a son, that seeth all his father's sins which he hath done, and considereth, and doeth not such like,

15 That hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lifted up his eyes to the idols of the house of Israel, hath not defiled his neighbour's wife,

16 Neither hath oppressed any, † hath not withholden the pledge, neither hath spoiled by violence, but hath given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment,

17 That hath taken off his hand from the poor, that hath not received usury nor increase, hath executed my judgments, hath walked in my statutes; he shall not die for the iniquity of his father, he shall surely live.

18 As for his father, because he cruelly oppressed, spoiled his brother by violence, and did that which is not good among his people, lo, even he shall die in his iniquity.

19 ¶ Yet say ye, Why? doth not the son bear the iniquity of the father? When the son hath done that which is lawful and right, and hath kept all my statutes, and hath done them, he shall surely live.

20 The soul that sinneth, it shall die. [h] The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son: the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him.

21 But if the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die.

22 All his transgressions that he hath committed, they shall not be mentioned

6. — eaten upon the mountains, &c.] Feasted on the sacrifices there offered to false gods, chap. vi. 2, 13. Abp. Newcome. Eating part of the sacrifice was properly maintaining communion with the idol to whom it was offered. W. Lowth.

—— neither hath lifted up his eyes] In prayer and adoration. Abp. Newcome.

7. — hath restored to the debtor his pledge,] God commanded the Jews not to detain any pledge they took from a poor man all night; which was in effect to enjoin them to lend to the poor without either pawn or usury. See Exod. xxii. 25, 26; Deut. xxiv. 12, 13. W. Lowth.

8. — upon usury,] See Deut. xxiii. 19, 20, in which it appears, that usury was permitted towards strangers. We may therefore conclude, that taking increase or interest may be agreeable to justice, if duly circumstanced. Every kind and degree of usury was forbidden to the Israelites amongst each other, to promote a spirit of mutual kindness: but this law was peculiar to them. Abp. Newcome. Oppressive usury to the poor may be here meant, because it is joined with violence and want of charity. W. Lowth.

9. — he shall surely live,] By life is meant, in the Old Testament, all that happiness which is contained in the literal sense of the promises belonging to that covenant; and under these were comprehended the promises of a better life, wherein God will bestow upon His servants the peculiar marks of His favour. W. Lowth.

13. — his blood shall be upon him.] His destruction is owing wholly to himself. See chap. xxxiii. 4. W. Lowth.

19. Yet say ye, Why? doth not the son &c.] The Jews still appealed to their own experience, as the ground of their complaint, mentioned ver. 2. God replies, that now every man shall bear his own burden. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

20. The soul that sinneth, it shall die.] The people, whom Ezekiel addressed, presumptuously complained that they were punished for the sins of their forefathers, though in truth they had merited their captivity by persisting in evil. God therefore, very consistently with His former declarations, here announces by the Prophet His purpose to make such distinction between the righteous and the wicked, that each man should be sensible of having deserved his sufferings. And he assures the people, with especial reference to eternal punishment, that "the soul that sinned should die," and that "the son should not bear the iniquity of his father:" that each should be responsible only for his own conduct. Dr. Gray.

unto him: in his righteousness that he hath done he shall live.

[i] Chap. 33. 11.

23 [i] Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord GOD: and not that he should return from his ways, and live?

24 ¶ But when the righteous turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and doeth according to all the abominations that the wicked man doeth, shall he live? All his righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned: in his trespass that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he die.

[k] Chap. 33. 20.

25 ¶ Yet ye say, [k] The way of the LORD is not equal. Hear now, O house of Israel; Is not my way equal? are not your ways unequal?

26 When a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and dieth in them; for his iniquity that he hath done shall he die.

27 Again, when the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive.

Before CHRIST 594.

28 Because he considereth, and turneth away from all his transgressions that he hath committed, he shall surely live, he shall not die.

29 Yet saith the house of Israel, The way of the LORD is not equal. O house of Israel, are not my ways equal? are not your ways unequal?

30 Therefore I will judge you, O house of Israel, every one according to his ways, saith the Lord GOD. [l] Repent, and turn ‖ yourselves from all your transgressions; so iniquity shall not be your ruin.

[l] Matt. 3. 2. ‖ Or, others.

31 ¶ Cast away from you all your transgressions, whereby ye have transgressed; and make you a [m] new heart and a new spirit: for why will ye die, O house of Israel?

[m] Jer. 32. 39. ch. 11. 19. & 36. 26.

32 For [n] I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord GOD: wherefore turn ‖ yourselves, and live ye.

[n] Chap. 33. 11. 2 Pet. 3. 9. ‖ Or, others.

23. Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die?] That those which are now wicked should die everlastingly? Is it not rather My desire that men should repent, and that the repentant should live? Is not this the sum of My Gospel, which I send into the world? Do not I call, and cry, and sue to men, that they would return from their sins, and be saved? Bp. Hall. In conformity to this, St. Paul instructs us, that "God would have all men to be saved," and is "not willing that any should perish," 1 Tim. ii. 4; 2 Pet. iii. 9. W. Lowth.

24. — All his righteousness that he hath done &c.] Such an one sins against a clearer light, and greater convictions, and is withal guilty of ingratitude, in doing despite unto the Spirit of grace. "It had been better for him not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after he hath known it, to turn from the holy commandment," 2 Pet. ii. 21. W. Lowth.

25. Yet ye say, The way of the Lord is not equal.] Why? Because He punishes the children for the fathers: for this is the subject of the chapter. God had already answered this complaint: see ver. 5, 9, &c. Here He gives another reason to justify His conduct; namely, that those very persons who complain that "The way of the Lord is not equal," and "our fathers have eaten sour grapes, and our teeth are set on edge;" these Jews themselves are culpable in many ways, and have well deserved to be found guilty. "Are not your ways unequal?" Calmet.

26, 27. When a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness, &c.] It is an opinion that prevails among the Jews even till this day, that at the day of judgment a considerable number of good actions shall overbalance men's evil ones. See chap. xxxiii. 13. So they thought it a hard case for a man who had been righteous the far greater part of his life, if he did at last commit iniquity, that his former righteousness should avail him nothing. In opposition to this doctrine God here declares, that a righteous man sinning, and not repenting, should die in his sins; and that a wicked man, upon his repentance, should save his soul alive. W. Lowth.

30. — every one according to his ways,] You complain of the partiality of My providence, therefore will I be indeed impartial to you, and deal with you according to your deserts: you demand justice, and you shall have it; but remember that it will descend in punishment. Since you call Me so strictly to account, I will be strict and exact in My reckoning with you: "I will judge you, O house of Israel, every one according to his ways, saith the Lord God." Dr. Ogden.

31. — and make you a new heart &c.] The Prophets often exhort the Jews to an inward purity and holiness, thereby to take them off from relying upon an outward legal righteousness, and an exactness in the observance of the ritual parts of the law. By thus instructing them in a more excellent way of serving God, than the ceremonial law did directly prescribe, they prepared their minds for receiving those truths which the Gospel would more fully discover. God promises (chap. xxxvi. 26) to "give them a new heart," and to "put within them a new spirit;" here He exhorts them to make themselves a new heart, and a new spirit. Which difference of expression is thus to be reconciled; that although God works in us to will and to do, and is the first Mover in our regeneration, yet we must work together with His grace, at least willingly receive it, and not quench or resist its motions. W. Lowth.

The repentance, to which God here joins the promise of pardon, is that which withdraws a man from sin, and leads him, as is often repeated in this chapter, to repair the evil he has done by restitution, and by all other possible means. In a word, the Lord declares, there is no repentance effectual, but that which produces by God's grace a new heart, and a change of inclinations, followed by actual amendment, reformation, and future holiness of life. Ostervald.

32. For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth,] The holy Scriptures in general expressly declare, that the good and gracious God was from the beginning, and is still, using the best, fittest, and wisest means to render all His creatures, one as well as another, blessed and happy: and if any of them, through their own selfwilled obstinacy and perverseness, miss of these joys, it will be greatly contrary to His inclination and desire. Thus when Adam was in paradise, the good God kindly cautioned him against the danger of disobedience. And when man by transgression fell, He immediately comforted him, by telling him of the remedy He had prepared for his reconciliation and recovery, even the Seed of the woman, which was to bruise the serpent's head; that Seed, in whom all the nations of the earth were to be blessed; and who, in the fulness of time, was to "give His life a ransom for many," to "taste death for every man." And in consequence of this first promise, how gracious, yea, how compassionate, is the tenour of every declaration, which He made from time to time on this head. "Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord God: and not that he should return from his ways, and live? Make you a new heart

1 A lamentation for the princes of Israel, under the parable of lions' whelps taken in a pit, 10 and for Jerusalem, under the parable of a wasted vine.

594. MOREOVER take thou up a lamentation for the princes of Israel,

2 And say, What is thy mother? A lioness: she lay down among lions, she nourished her whelps among young lions.

3 And she brought up one of her whelps: it became a young lion, and it learned to catch the prey; it devoured men.

4 The nations also heard of him; he was taken in their pit, and they brought him with chains unto the land of [a] Egypt.

[a] 2 Kings 23. 33. Jer. 22. 11.

5 Now when she saw that she had waited, and her hope was lost, then she took another of her whelps, and made him a young lion.

6 And he went up and down among the lions, he became a young lion, and learned to catch the prey, and devoured men.

‖ Or, their widows.

7 And he knew ‖ their desolate palaces, and he laid waste their cities; and the land was desolate, and the fulness thereof, by the noise of his roaring.

8 Then the nation set against him on every side from the provinces, and spread their net over him: he was taken in their pit.

Before CHRIST 594.

9 And they put him in ward ‖ in chains, and brought him to the king of Babylon: they brought him into holds, that his voice should no more be heard upon the mountains of Israel.

‖ Or, in hooks.

10 ¶ Thy mother is like a vine ‖ in thy blood, planted by the waters: she was fruitful and full of branches by reason of many waters.

‖ Or, in thy quietness, or, in thy likeness,

11 And she had strong rods for the sceptres of them that bare rule, and her stature was exalted among the thick branches, and she appeared in her height with the multitude of her branches.

12 But she was plucked up in fury, she was cast down to the ground, and the [b] east wind dried up her fruit: her strong rods were broken and withered; the fire consumed them.

[b] Hosea 13. 15.

13 And now she is planted in the wilderness, in a dry and thirsty ground.

14 And fire is gone out of a rod of her branches, which hath devoured her fruit, so that she hath no strong rod to be a sceptre to rule. This is a lamentation, and shall be for a lamentation.

and a new spirit: for why will ye die, O house of Israel?" Why will ye die, O sons of Adam? seeing that God would have all men to be saved, and is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. Dean Tucker. See the note on chap. xxxiii. 11.

Chap. XIX. ver. 1. —take thou up a lamentation &c.] Sing a funeral dirge for the princes of Israel. Compare chap. xxvi. 17; xxvii. 2. W. Lowth.

2. —A lioness:] An allusion to Gen. xlix. 9. Grotius. Judea was among the nations, like a lioness among the beasts of the forest. She had strength and sovereignty. Abp. Newcome. Or, perhaps, on account of her ferocious and cruel disposition: see chap. vii. 23; Jer. xxii. 17. W. Lowth.

3. —one of her whelps:] See ver. 6. Jehoahaz the son of Josiah is meant: whom Pharaoh-necho put in bands, and took into Egypt, 2 Kings xxiii. 33, 34. He followed not the good example of his father Josiah. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

4. —in their pit,] Like a lion who is taken in a pitfall covered with earth and branches, that he may fall into it in passing over. Calmet.

The Arabs dig a pit where the lions are observed to enter the inclosures for cattle, and covering it slightly with reeds or small branches of trees, they frequently decoy and catch them. The practice is alluded to in this passage. Dr. Shaw.

5. —her hope was lost,] The object of her hope, Jehoahaz, detained in Egypt. Abp. Newcome.

—— another of her whelps,] She set up another of the seed royal, even Jehoiakim the son of Josiah. Bp. Hall. Pharaoh seems to have made this appointment with the joint consent of the people: the younger brother had been set up without the participation of Pharaoh. W. Lowth.

6. —he went up and down among the lions, &c.] He ruled fiercely and wickedly among his people, and followed those courses of oppression and violence, which his brother had led him into. See Jer. xxii. 13—17; xxxvii. 2. Bp. Hall.

7. —he knew their desolate palaces,] He made himself master of the riches and pleasant seats of the great men of the land. W. Lowth.

8. —set against him] See 2 Kings xxiv. 2.

9. —that his voice should no more be heard upon the mountains of Israel.] The words allude to a lion's seeking his prey upon the mountains. W. Lowth.

10. Thy mother is like a vine in thy blood,] Like a vine in the time of her first peaceable plantation. Bp. Hall. See the margin.

—— planted by the waters:] This circumstance is mentioned of the vine, chap. xvii. 8. Abp. Newcome. In a very fruitful soil. Poole. Compare ver. 16; and see Ps. i. 3; Jer. xvii. 8.

11. —strong rods for the sceptres of them that bare rule,] From her sprung sovereign princes, who were themselves very powerful, and made their people appear considerable among their neighbours. A rod or sceptre is an emblem of authority. W. Lowth.

—— among the thick branches,] Of other trees. In several countries they join the vines to trees, about which they wind themselves and run very high. Michaelis.

12. But she was plucked up in fury,] God in His anger removed her out of her land. Compare Jer. xii. 14. W. Lowth.

13. And now she is planted in the wilderness, &c.] Her people are carried captive, and planted like a vine in a foreign and a barren soil. Bp. Hall, Abp. Newcome.

14. And fire is gone out of a rod of her branches, &c.] Signifying that Zedekiah's breaking his oath of fealty to the king of Babylon, hath been the occasion of the utter destruction of the royal family, and the entire ruin of the government. W. Lowth, Bp. Hall.

—— This is a lamentation, and shall be for a lamentation.] Ezekiel composed this lamentation five years before the destruction of Jerusalem actually took place. He here predicts, that it should be remembered, and that it should be sung by future generations. Calmet.

CHAP. XX.

1 God refuseth to be consulted by the elders of Israel. 5 He sheweth the story of their rebellions in Egypt, 10 in the wilderness, 27 and in the land. 33 He promiseth to gather them by the gospel. 45 Under the name of a forest he sheweth the destruction of Jerusalem.

Before CHRIST 593.

about 593. AND it came to pass in the seventh year, in the fifth month, the tenth day of the month, that certain of the elders of Israel came to enquire of the LORD, and sat before me.

2 Then came the word of the LORD unto me, saying,

3 Son of man, speak unto the elders of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Are ye come to enquire of me? As I live, saith the Lord GOD, I will not be enquired of by you.

‖ Or, plead for them. [a] Chap. 22. 2. & 23. 36.

4 Wilt thou ‖ [a] judge them, son of man, wilt thou judge them? cause them to know the abominations of their fathers:

‖ Or, sware: and so ver. 6, &c. [b] Exod. 3. 8. & 4. 31.

5 ¶ And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD; In the day when I chose Israel, and ‖ lifted up mine hand unto the seed of the house of Jacob, and made myself [b] known unto them in the land of Egypt, when I lifted up mine hand unto them, saying, I am the LORD your God;

6 In the day that I lifted up mine hand unto them, to bring them forth of the land of Egypt into a land that I had espied for them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands:

7 Then said I unto them, Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt: I am the LORD your God.

8 But they rebelled against me, and would not hearken unto me: they did not every man cast away the abominations of their eyes, neither did they forsake the idols of Egypt: then I said, I will pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the midst of the land of Egypt.

Before CHRIST about 593.

9 But I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen, among whom they were, in whose sight I made myself known unto them, in bringing them forth out of the land of Egypt.

10 ¶ Wherefore I [c] caused them to go forth out of the land of Egypt, and brought them into the wilderness. [c] Exod. 13. 18.

4. Wilt thou judge them,] Wilt thou plead with Me for them any more? Bp. Hall. See also the margin of our Bible. But the words may be more significantly translated, "Wilt thou not judge them?" that is, Wilt thou not reprove or condemn them? See ver. 30 of this chapter, and chap. xxxviii. 17: the phrase is properly rendered by our translators, 2 Sam. xxiii. 17: and see 1 Sam. ii. 27; and the note there. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

7. — the abominations of his eyes,] His idols. See chap. xviii. 6. Abp. Newcome.

9. But I wrought for my name's sake,] This is elsewhere assigned as the reason why God did not punish the Israelites according to their deserts; namely, because it would turn to God's dishonour in the heathen world; as if He were not able to make good those gracious promises He had given them; see chap. xxxvi. 21, 22; Exod. xxxii. 12; Numb. xiv. 13. This was a proper consideration to check the vain presumption of the Jews, who imagined that God's gracious dealings were owing to their own desires; see ver. 44 of this chapter, and chap. xxxvi. 22. W. Lowth. See the note on Jer. xiv. 7.

11. — live in them.] Lev. xviii. 5. Enjoy a long life and every temporal blessing; eternal life, though not promised, would also have been the lot of the true Israelite. Abp. Newcome. See the note on chap. xviii. 9.

your fathers, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols:

19 I am the LORD your God; walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them;

20 And hallow my sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the LORD your God.

21 Notwithstanding the children rebelled against me: they walked not in my statutes, neither kept my judgments to do them, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; they polluted my sabbaths: then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the wilderness.

22 Nevertheless I withdrew mine hand, and wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted in the sight of the heathen, in whose sight I brought them forth.

23 I lifted up mine hand unto them also in the wilderness, that I would scatter them among the heathen, and disperse them through the countries;

24 Because they had not executed my judgments, but had despised my statutes, and had polluted my sabbaths, and their eyes were after their fathers' idols.

25 Wherefore I gave them also statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live;

Before CHRIST 593.

26 And I polluted them in their own gifts, in that they caused to pass [h] through the fire all that openeth the womb, that I might make them desolate, to the end that they might know that I am the LORD.

[h] Chap. 16. 21.

27 ¶ Therefore, son of man, speak unto the house of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Yet in this your fathers have blasphemed me, in that they have † committed a trespass against me.

† Heb. trespassed a trespass.

28 For when I had brought them into the land, for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to them, then they saw every high hill, and all the thick trees, and they offered there their sacrifices, and there they presented the provocation of their offering: there also they made their sweet savour, and poured out there their drink offerings.

29 Then ‖I said unto them, What is the high place whereunto ye go? And the name thereof is called Bamah unto this day.

‖ Or, I told them what the high place was, or, Bamah.

30 Wherefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers? and commit ye whoredom after their abominations?

31 For when ye offer your gifts, when ye make your sons to pass through the fire, ye pollute yourselves with all your idols, even unto this day: and shall I be enquired of by you, O house of Israel? As I

Deuteronomy, particularly those in chap. xxix, xxx, xxxi, and xxxii, which were uttered after that rebellious generation were all consumed, as God had threatened them, (see Numb. xiv. 32, 33; xxvi. 64, 65,) and were designed as warnings to succeeding generations, Deut. xxxi. 16—21. W. Lowth.

25. Wherefore I gave them also statutes that were not good,] God intended not here His own statutes and judgments, but the idolatrous statutes and judgments, the corrupt principles and practices, of the heathen nations, to which He sometimes gave up and abandoned His own people, because they first deserted and abandoned Him. This is the sense given to the passage by the Targum of Jonathan, and in the speech of St. Stephen in the New Testament, Acts vii. 42; and the context points to the same interpretation; for that this is its true sense appears chiefly from this, that God here describes these statutes and judgments by characters directly opposite to those He gives of His own in the same chapter. For it appears from ver. 11, 13, 21, and other passages, that the chief distinction of God's own law was that a man "should live in them;" whereas He expressly says of these, that they were statutes and judgments, whereby "they should not live." Also, at ver. 18, we have mention of statutes and of judgments, (the same words in the Hebrew as in this verse,) yet not meaning God's statutes and judgments, but the corrupt customs and manners of their idolatrous ancestors, such as God permitted or gave them up to, because they chose them, as is intimated in ver. 25. The original word for "give," is frequently used in the permissive sense; and therefore "I gave them" in this verse may amount to no more than "I suffered such things." Vitringa, Dr. Waterland, W. Lowth, Dr. Berriman. See also Ps. lxxxi. 12; Rom. i. 24.

26. — I polluted them in their own gifts, in that they caused to pass through the fire &c.] This sufficiently intimates what kind of statutes and judgments God was just before speaking of; namely, the rites and practices of the heathen, whereby God polluted them, that is, gave them up to their own hearts' lusts, to defile and pollute themselves. The Israelites had provoked God many ways, and more especially by their frequent idolatries; and therefore God gave them up to the vilest and most deplorable idolatry of all; namely, that of offering up their children as burnt offerings to Moloch. Vitringa, Dr. Waterland.

——that I might make them desolate, &c.] The consequence of which was, that they would be exposed to My anger, and at length would acknowledge My hand in the judgments inflicted on them. Abp. Newcome.

28. — then they saw every high hill, &c.] They cast their eyes upon those hills and groves whereon the heathen had been wont to offer their idolatrous sacrifices; and there, contrary to My commandments, they made their sinful oblations to provoke Me to wrath. Bp. Hall.

29. — What is the high place &c.] What mean you that ye go to the high place? Should you not go to the altar of God, and bring your sacrifices to the temple, instead of leaving My temple and the service I prescribed, and in other places unrequired doing supposed duties? Poole.

——And the name thereof is called Bamah unto this day.] The words probably refer to some noted high place, which the Jews frequented to perform their idolatrous worship. W. Lowth. The very word told them their wickedness, that they acted against the express will of God, and framed themselves to the idolatries of the nations. Poole.

35 And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face.

36 Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord GOD.

Before CHRIST 593.

39 As for you, O house of Israel, thus saith the Lord GOD; Go ye, serve ye every one his idols, and hereafter also, if ye will not hearken unto me: but pollute ye my holy name no more with your gifts, and with your idols.

43 And there shall ye remember your ways, and all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled; and ye shall lothe yourselves in your own sight for all your evils that ye have committed.

44 And ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I have wrought with you for

31. — I will not be enquired of by you.] I will answer you as little as you regard Me. Poole.

32. — that which cometh into your mind shall not be at all, &c.] The Jews had all along a fond desire of worshipping the gods of their neighbours, and could not bear that imputation of singularity, to which their peculiar way of worship exposed them. They thought likewise, by worshipping the gods of the heathen, to live more undisturbedly among them; but God tells them here, that He will prevent this purpose of their's from taking effect. W. Lowth.

33. — surely with a mighty hand, &c.] I will no longer try to reclaim you by the gentle methods of patience and forbearance, but will govern you, as masters do rebellious servants, by stripes and corrections, and thus cure you of your hankering after heathen customs and idolatries. W. Lowth.

34. And I will bring you out from the people, &c.] You would have Me abandon you for ever, as the nations whom I suffer to go on quietly in their ways. But I will punish you, and retain you in your allegiance to Me. Calmet.

35. And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, &c.] I will bring you into the desert land of your captivity under the heathen, and there will I argue this case with you: laying before you those offences wherewith you have justly provoked Me. Bp. Hall. The phrase alludes to the wilderness, through which the Jews passed in their way to Canaan, in order to the trial of the obedient, and the destruction of the rebellious. W. Lowth.

37. — under the rod,] Both of correction and guidance. Bp. Hall.

—— into the bond of the covenant:] And I will recall you to the memory and recognition of that bond and mutual covenant which has been made between us. Bp. Hall.

Or, "I will bring you into the discipline of My covenant;" that is, bring you into the chastisement due for breaking My covenant, Lev. xxvi. 25. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

38. — will purge out] I will separate the righteous from the wicked; see ver. 37. This may be understood of the captive Israelites in Chaldea and Babylon; God well knew how to distinguish among the captives, the just from the unjust. He will bring back the former into their country, and will disperse the latter into every part of the world. The passage may have further reference to the Jews who rejected our Saviour; they have been driven from their country, and have not re-entered the land of Israel. Calmet.

39. — Go ye,] A permission, full of indignation and rebuke. W. Lowth. See the notes on Numb. xxii. 20; 2 Kings ii. 17, 18.

40. For in mine holy mountain, &c.] But for you, who are the true spiritual seed of faithful Israel, you shall all serve Me in My holy Church, and I will both expect and graciously accept of those services and devotions which ye shall offer unto Me. Bp. Hall.

—— all of them in the land,] All of the house of Israel that are restored shall serve Me; there shall be no separation of tribes. Abp. Newcome.

—— your offerings, and the firstfruits of your oblations,] The Prophet here expresses the Christian worship by those religious oblations which were proper to his own time; as the other Prophets frequently describe the state of the Christian Church by representations taken from the Jewish temple and service, Isai. xix. 19; lvi. 7; lx. 7; lxvi. 23. W. Lowth.

43. — and ye shall lothe yourselves] See chap. vi. 9; xvi. 63.

44. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, &c.] As in the height of God's vengeance on the sins of this wretched people, the distant prospect always terminated in a mercy; so with a mercy and a promise of better times the whole of this prophetick scene is closed, in order that those, to whom it is addressed, should, however criminal, not be left in an utter state of desperation, but be afforded some shadow of repose in the prospect of future peace and tranquillity. The idea of mercy is naturally attached to that of repentance and reformation; and with mercy the prophecy ends. Bp. Warburton.

47 And say to the forest of the south, Hear the word of the LORD; Thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I will kindle a fire in thee, and it shall devour every green tree in thee, and every dry tree: the flaming flame shall not be quenched, and all faces from the south to the north shall be burned therein.

48 And all flesh shall see that I the LORD have kindled it: it shall not be quenched.

CHAP. XXI.

1 Ezekiel prophesieth against Jerusalem with a sign of sighing. 8 The sharp and bright sword, 18 against Jerusalem, 25 against the kingdom, 28 and against the Ammonites.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face toward Jerusalem, and drop thy word toward the holy places, and prophesy against the land of Israel,

Before CHRIST 593.

3 And say to the land of Israel, Thus saith the LORD; Behold, I am against thee, and will draw forth my sword out of his sheath, and will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked.

4 Seeing then that I will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked, therefore shall my sword go forth out of his sheath against all flesh from the south to the north:

5 That all flesh may know that I the LORD have drawn forth my sword out of his sheath: it shall not return any more.

6 Sigh therefore, thou son of man, with the breaking of thy loins; and with bitterness sigh before their eyes.

7 And it shall be, when they say unto thee, Wherefore sighest thou? that thou shalt answer, For the tidings; because it cometh: and every heart shall melt, and all hands shall be feeble, and every spirit shall faint, and all knees † shall be weak as water: behold, it cometh, and shall be brought to pass, saith the Lord GOD.

† Heb. shall go into water.

8 ¶ Again the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

9 Son of man, prophesy, and say, Thus saith the LORD; Say, A sword, a sword is sharpened, and also furbished:

10 It is sharpened to make a sore slaughter; it is furbished that it may glitter: should we then make mirth? ‖ it contemneth the rod of my son, as every tree.

‖ Or, it is the rod of my son, it despiseth every tree.

45. Moreover the word &c.] The next chapter should have begun here; as what is contained in the 2d and following verses of that chapter is an explanation of what is included in the latter part of this. Grotius, Houbigant.

46. — the forest of the south &c.] Ezekiel was in the northern part of Chaldea, and therefore Judea was to the south of him. Abp. Secker supposes, that a city is called a forest, rather from its inhabitants than its buildings. In this verse there are three Hebrew words for the "south." Abp. Newcome.

47. — every green tree &c.] The righteous as well as the wicked, see chap. xxi. 3. Many of these two classes were alike to be led into captivity; though in other respects a great difference was made between them. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

—— and all faces from the south to the north] From one end of the land to the other. The length of Judah lay north and south. Poole.

49. — Doth he not speak parables?] They complain of the obscurity of my prophecies. Bp. Hall. God therefore commands him, chap. xxi, to utter plainly what, ver. 47, 48, he was here instructed to deliver parabolically. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

The foregoing chapter presents us with a detail of the favours, conferred by God upon the Jews; of their ingratitude for His blessings, and insensibility to His warnings; and of the severe judgments, which were for this reason to overtake them. God has done infinitely more for us than for the Jews; He has redeemed us by His only Son, our Lord Jesus Christ; He has given us the knowledge of His holy laws, by which we may obtain life; and the warnings, which He gives us, to induce us to serve and fear Him, are not less express, nor less frequent, than those addressed to His ancient people. If, after all, we fall into infidelity and disobedience, we shall be infinitely more criminal than the Jews, and our punishment will be proportionally more severe. Osterwald.

Chap. XXI. ver. 2. Son of man, set thy face] Without all parables I say unto thee plainly, "Set thy face toward Jerusalem." Bp. Hall.

—— set thy face, — drop thy word, — prophesy] These expressions are correspondent to those at chap. xx. 46. Abp. Newcome.

—— the holy places,] The temple and the several courts, which were holy in different degrees. Abp. Newcome.

3. — the righteous and the wicked.] A plain reference to the green tree and the dry, chap. xx. 47. I will sweep every man in the common destruction; the righteous will I remove to their advantage and glory; the wicked to their confusion. Bp. Hall.

5. — it shall not return any more.] Into its sheath; as the sense is more fully expressed, ver. 30; till it has executed My commands. W. Lowth. The sword of the king of Babylon is meant, the instrument of God's vengeance. Calmet.

6. Sigh therefore — with the breaking of thy loins;] Sigh so deeply and so strongly as to break thy girdle from thy loins, and by this sighing intimate unto them that great sorrow which is coming unto them. Bp. Hall. See Jer. xxiii. 9; Dan. vii. 28.

10. — it contemneth the rod of my son, as every tree.] It makes no distinction between the sceptre and common wood; between the branches of the royal family, whom I honoured with the title of My sons, (Ps. lxxxix. 26,) and the meanest of the people. W. Lowth.

Before CHRIST 593.

11 And he hath given it to be furbished, that it may be handled: this sword is sharpened, and it is furbished, to give it into the hand of the slayer.

12 Cry and howl, son of man: for it shall be upon my people, it shall be upon all the princes of Israel: ‖ terrors by reason of the sword shall be upon my people: [a] smite therefore upon thy thigh.

13 ‖ Because it is a trial, and what if the sword contemn even the rod? it shall be no more, saith the Lord GOD.

11. — of the slayer.] Of the king of Babylon. W. Lowth.

12. — smite therefore upon thy thigh.] An action expressive of grief; compare chap. vi. 11; Jer. xxxi. 19; where see the note.

13. Because it is a trial,] A calamity. W. Lowth. The sense may be, "for the firmness of the sword has been proved; and what if it destroy not only the common branches, but even the rod of the sceptre? Abp. Newcome.

—— it shall be no more,] The diadem and throne shall be no more; see ver. 27; the regal succession shall end in Zedekiah. Abp. Newcome.

14. — smite thine hands together,] A sign of grief, chap. vi. 11; of rage, Numb. xxiv. 10; of astonishment, chap. xxii. 13. But many think it here a gesture of encouragement to the victorious Chaldeans. Abp. Newcome.

—— and let the sword be doubled the third time, the sword of the slain:] The expression may mean no more than if the Prophet had said, "Let the stroke be repeated twice and thrice," that is, "oftentimes." So that phrase is used, Job xxxiii. 29, "All these things worketh God twice and thrice with man," where our translation very fitly expresses the sense "oftentimes." A form of speech, much like those elsewhere used; "For three transgressions, and for four," Amos i. 3. "Give a portion to seven, and also to eight," Eccles. xi. 2. W. Lowth.

"The sword of the slain" in this verse should probably be rendered "the sword of the soldiers," that is, of the Babylonians; and "the sword of the great men that are slain" should be "the sword of the great soldier," that is, of the warlike king of Babylon, for thus it is expressly called in the 19th verse, "the sword of the king of Babylon." Dr. Kennicott.

—— into their privy chambers.] Whither they went to hide themselves; see 1 Kings xxii. 25. W. Lowth.

15. — wrapped up] In the scabbard, but sharpened and ready for slaughter. Calmet.

16. Go thee — either on the right hand, or on the left,] The words are addressed to the sword, which is directed to go through the land without restraint, to the south or to the north; these two quarters being expressed in the Hebrew language by the right and left; see chap. xvi. 46, and note. W. Lowth.

17. — my fury to rest:] See chap. v. 13; xxiv. 13.

19. — appoint thee two ways,] "Describe or paint two roads diverging from one." God foreshews His Prophet, that the king of Babylon, coming with his army into Syria, and finding that the Ammonites had entered into a confederacy with Egypt as well as Zedekiah, was in doubt against which of the two people he should first make war; and committed the decision of this matter to his arts of divination, described ver. 21. W. Lowth.

20. — to Rabbath] Or, Rabbah, chap. xxv. 5; the chief city of the Ammonites, 2 Sam. xii. 26; Jer. xlix. 2.

21. For the king of Babylon stood at the parting of the way,—to use divination: he made his arrows bright,] This way of divining by arrows is thus described by St. Jerome, in his commentary upon this place: "They wrote on several arrows the names of the cities they intended to assault, and then putting them all together promiscuously in a quiver, they drew them out thence as lots are drawn; and that city whose name was written on the arrow first drawn, was the city they first made war upon." W. Lowth.

—— he made his arrows bright,] Or rather, he mingled his arrows; which sense of the word agrees better with the description of this kind of divination given by St. Jerome. It is preferred by Dr. Pocock, who confirms this exposition from the Arabick use of the word, and also by Houbigant. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

Abp. Potter notices the practice among the Greeks, in which divination was made by arrows shaken together in a quiver. The method of divination practised by the idolatrous Arabs, but forbidden by the Koran, is too singular to be unnoticed. "Seven divining arrows were kept at the temple of Mecca; but generally in divination, the idolatrous Arabs made use of three only; on one was written, 'My lord hath commanded me;' on another, 'My lord hath forbidden me;' and the third was blank. If the first was drawn, they looked upon it as an approbation of the enterprise in question; if the second, they made a contrary conclusion; but if the third happened to be drawn, they mixed them and drew over again, till a decisive answer was given by one of the others." Abp. Newcome.

—— he consulted with images,] In Hebrew "teraphim," which signifies all sorts of idols, principally of the human form, Hos. iii. 4; and it is apparent from several passages of Scripture, that they were consulted as oracles. Dr. E. Pocock. Gen. xxxi. 19; 1 Sam. xv. 23, &c.

—— he looked in the liver.] The practice of predicting the future by inspecting the fibres of the liver in an animal recently killed, was very common in antiquity. Grotius conjectures, that the Chaldeans communicated this superstitious custom to the Lydians, the Lydians to the Tuscans, and the Tuscans to the people of Italy. Calmet.

24 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD; Because ye have made your iniquity to be remembered, in that your transgressions are discovered, so that in all your doings your sins do appear; because, I say, that ye are come to remembrance, ye shall be taken with the hand.

25 ¶ And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end,

26 Thus saith the Lord GOD; Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high.

† Heb. Perverted, perverted, perverted, will I make it.

27 † I will overturn, overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him.

Before CHRIST 593.

28 ¶ And thou, son of man, prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord GOD concerning the Ammonites, and concerning their reproach; even say thou, The sword, the sword is drawn: for the slaughter it is furbished, to consume because of the glittering:

29 Whiles they see vanity unto thee, whiles they divine a lie unto thee, to bring thee upon the necks of them that are slain, of the wicked, whose day is come, when their iniquity shall have an end.

30 ‖ Shall I cause it to return into his sheath? I will judge thee in the place where thou wast created, in the land of thy nativity.

‖ Or, Cause it to return.

31 And I will pour out mine indignation upon thee, I will blow against thee in the fire of my wrath, and deliver thee into the hand of ‖ brutish men, and skilful to destroy.

‖ Or, burning.

32 Thou shalt be for fuel to the fire; thy blood shall be in the midst of the land; thou shalt be no more remembered: for I the LORD have spoken it.

---

divinations shew that he was to go to the right hand; that is, towards Jerusalem. Dathius. Supposing the face towards the east, the southern branch of the two roads, which was towards the right hand, led towards Jerusalem; for this city lay to the south of Rabbah. You must represent Nebuchadnezzar as coming from Dan, and marching along the Jordan. Here Rabbah was situated at the left hand, and Jerusalem at the right. Abp. Newcome, Michaelis.

In coming from beyond the Euphrates into Syria and Phenicia, they commonly took their journey through Damascus. They passed the Euphrates at Thapsacus; entered into Palestine by the plain of Libanus, under mount Hermon, and crossed the Jordan above the lake Semochonites. They did not come directly from Babylon through Arabia Deserta, the shortest rout, on account of the sterility of the country. Calmet.

Though the manner, which the king of Babylon chose to determine him what course to take, was such, yet God was pleased so to direct it, that he turned first against Jerusalem. God governs all things by His providence: He ever presides over such events, as we imagine to depend upon mere chance; and, generally speaking, over the actions of men; so that men, without knowing it, become the instruments of executing what He has resolved to do or permit. Ostervald.

—— to appoint captains, to open the mouth in the slaughter,] Whose office it was to encourage the army to fall upon the enemy and destroy them. W. Lowth.

23. And it shall be unto them as a false divination] But this process shall be unto the Jews, when some of their friends behold it, and report it at Jerusalem, as a deceitful lot, such as the event would not verify; it shall even appear so to the Jews, who had sworn false oaths to the Chaldeans, (2 Chron. xxxvi. 13,) and ought therefore to have expected the Divine vengeance. But he (Nebuchadnezzar) is mindful of their perjury, and gladly turns his arms first against them, to revenge himself on them. Abp. Newcome.

25. And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel,] The words are addressed to king Zedekiah, whom the Prophet calls "profane" and "wicked," chiefly with respect to his breaking that solemn oath uttered in the name of God, whereby he had engaged himself to be tributary to the king of Babylon, chap. xvii. 19. W. Lowth.

26. — exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high.] As Zedekiah shall be brought down from his kingly dignity, so another branch of that family, namely, Christ, (see ver. 27,) shall be advanced from an obscure original and low condition, to the supreme degree of sovereignty. W. Lowth.

27. I will overturn, — it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him.] This is a threat, that the kingdom should never recover its former glory and strength, but consume, till the sceptre should be quite taken away from Judah, and way be made for the Messiah, who is He that was to come, whose was the dominion, and to whom the Father would give it: so that the final desolation of the temporal kingdom of the seed of David is here threatened, and the eternal kingdom of the Messiah is promised. The triple use of the word "overturn," expresses the certainty of the event. Poole.

28. And thou, son of man, &c.] In ver. 19, 20, Rabbath, the chief city of the Ammonites, was mentioned, as being in equal danger with Jerusalem. God here directs the Prophet to resume the subject of Rabbath, and to declare the ruin of it. Poole.

—— the Ammonites, and concerning their reproach;] They insulted over their brethren the Jews, for which they are often reproved very severely by the Prophets, and threatened with like judgments. See chap. xxv. 2—6; Zeph. ii. 8, 10. W. Lowth.

29. Whiles they see vanity unto thee, whiles they divine a lie &c.] While thy wizards feed thee with false predictions to stir thee up against those already miserable and distressed Israelites, against those wicked revolters from Me, whose judgment is now to be fully accomplished. Bp. Hall.

—— to bring thee upon the necks of them that are slain,] To add thee to the number of those who are slain in Judea, and make thy condition like theirs. W. Lowth, Calmet.

30. — in the land of thy nativity.] The Ammonites were destroyed in their own country. The Jewish nation was sent into captivity. W. Lowth, Abp. Newcome.

31. — blow against thee] To melt thee, as it were, in the furnace. See chap. xxii. 20, 21. Abp. Newcome.

32. — thou shalt be no more remembered:] See chap. xxv. 10.

The Jewish nation still subsists. The Ammonites are lost in the mass of mankind, and have been long forgotten. Abp. Newcome.

Chap. XXII. ver. 2. — wilt thou judge,] See chap. xx. 4.

—— the bloody city?] See chap. xxiii. 37, 45; xxiv. 6, 9; 2 Kings xxi. 16.

3. — that her time may come,] See chap. vii. 7. Her time of punishment and vengeance. Abp. Newcome.

6. Behold, the princes of Israel,] These were probably the members of the great Sanhedrim, or the king's counsellors and chief officers of state. See Jer. xxvi. 10; xxxvi. 12. W. Lowth.

—— every one were in thee to their power to shed blood.] The Hebrew reads, "with his arm to shed blood." See the margin: and the sense may be, "they have employed all the force of their arms to shed blood in the midst of thee." Calmet.

9. — in thee they eat upon the mountains:] In the midst of thee there are those that offer idolatrous sacrifices to their false gods, in their high places. Bp. Hall.

10. In thee have they discovered their fathers' nakedness:] That is, taken their mother in law to wife, which St. Paul calls, "such fornication as is not so much as named among the Gentiles," 1 Cor. v. 1. W. Lowth.

12. — gifts to shed blood;] Innocent blood. Abp. Secker. The judges may be here particularly meant. W. Lowth.

—— and hast forgotten me,] The forgetfulness of God is the source of the greatest disorders; for as St. Jerome well observes, The remembrance of God excludes all sin. Men rush into crimes in proportion as they forget God. Calmet.

13. — have smitten mine hand] With astonishment and indignation. See chap. xxi. 14. Abp. Newcome.

15. — will consume thy filthiness out of thee.] I will purge thee in the furnace of afflictions, and take that method to consume thy dross, and put an end to thy idolatrous practices. Compare ver. 18, 19; chap. xxiii. 27. W. Lowth.

16. And thou shalt take thine inheritance in thyself in the sight of the heathen,] The margin of our Bible reads, "Thou shalt be profaned in thyself;" which expresses the sense much better; that is, thou shalt no longer enjoy the privileges of a city called by My name, and set apart for My residence, but shalt be laid open as common ground, to be profaned by infidels. See Isai. xlvii. 6. W. Lowth.

18. — dross:] The house of Israel is in My sight like silver alloyed with several baser metals. I am about to act towards them as a refiner, who purifies and separates the metals in the fire. Calmet.

19, 20. — Because ye are all become dross, &c.] Because you are thus depraved, I will deal with you accordingly; I will gather you all up as into one furnace, which shall be Jerusalem, and therefore I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem.

Before CHRIST 593.

† Heb. According to the gathering.

20 † As they gather silver, and brass, and iron, and lead, and tin, into the midst of the furnace, to blow the fire upon it, to melt it; so will I gather you in mine anger and in my fury, and I will leave you there, and melt you.

21 Yea, I will gather you, and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath, and ye shall be melted in the midst thereof.

22 As silver is melted in the midst of the furnace, so shall ye be melted in the midst thereof; and ye shall know that I the LORD have poured out my fury upon you.

23 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

24 Son of man, say unto her, Thou art the land that is not cleansed, nor rained upon in the day of indignation.

25 There is a conspiracy of her prophets in the midst thereof, like a roaring lion ravening the prey; they [h] have devoured souls; they have taken the treasure and precious things; they have made her many widows in the midst thereof.

[h] Matt. 23. 14.

† Heb. offered violence to.

26 Her priests have † violated my law, and have profaned mine holy things: they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they shewed difference between the unclean and the clean, and have hid their eyes from my sabbaths, and I am profaned among them.

27 Her [i] princes in the midst thereof are like wolves ravening the prey, to shed blood, and to destroy souls, to get dishonest gain.

Before CHRIST 593.

[i] Mic. 3. 11. Zeph. 3. 3.

28 And her prophets have daubed them with untempered morter, seeing vanity, and divining lies unto them, saying, Thus saith the Lord GOD, when the LORD hath not spoken.

29 The people of the land have used ‖ oppression, and exercised robbery, and have vexed the poor and needy: yea, they have oppressed the stranger † wrongfully.

30 And I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it: but I found none.

31 Therefore have I poured out mine indignation upon them; I have consumed them with the fire of my wrath: their own way have I recompensed upon their heads, saith the Lord GOD.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 The whoredoms of Aholah and Aholibah. 22 Aholibah is to be plagued by her lovers. 36 The prophet reproveth the adulteries of them both, 45 and sheweth their judgments.

THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying, 593.

2 Son of man, there were two women, the daughters of one mother:

3 And they committed whoredoms in Egypt; they committed whoredoms in their youth: there were their breasts pressed, there I will send the fire of My judgment upon you. Bp. Hall.

24. — Thou art the land that is not cleansed, nor rained upon in the day of indignation.] Thou art a land notoriously unclean with thy abominable sins, and therefore shalt be seized upon by My judgments without mitigation; when My fire shall flame up to consume thee, there shall not be so much as a shower of rain for the quenching thereof. Bp. Hall.

The metaphor of fire, which had been used in the foregoing verses, seems to be pursued here; and the admonition of the Prophets is to be understood under the figure of rain. Calmet, W. Lowth. See chap. xx. 46.

25. — a conspiracy of her prophets] That is, of the false prophets. These are often reproved for making a gain of their profession. See Jer. vi. 13; Micah iii. 5, 11. W. Lowth. Probably they agreed together in supporting each other's false prophecies. See chap. xiii. 11, 12. Calmet.

—— they have devoured souls;] They make merchandise of men's souls; or else they take away their lives by false accusation, and then seize upon their substance. Compare ver. 27, and Matt. xxiii. 14. W. Lowth. Or, the consequence of their false prophecies, the destruction of men's lives by the judgments which fall on impenitence, is charged on them.

26. — and have hid their eyes from my sabbaths,] Absenting themselves from the holy rites to be performed in My courts Abp. Newcome.

28. And her prophets have daubed them &c.] Have soothed them in their sins; and in a base flattery have spoken plausible things to them, no less false than pleasing. Bp. Hall. See chap. xiii. 6—10, and the note there.

30. — but I found none.] The Jews had generally given themselves up to idolatry, injustice, uncleanness, and abominations of every kind; and had profaned in the most shocking manner the religion and the service of God. The corruption spread among persons in a publick character: the prophet seduced the people; the priests broke the law, and profaned the holy things; the magistrates were addicted to injustice, dishonest gain, fraud, and violence. This deprived them of the Divine protection, and obliged God, as it were, to put His threatenings into execution. These sins, no doubt, God does still abhor, and much more in Christians: to whom the punishments of the Jews should be a warning, and especially to pastors and governours, that they be not the authors of corruption and of publick calamities, and so, in the end, of eternal perdition to those, whom God has placed under their care. Ostervald.

Chap. XXIII. ver. 2. — there were two women,] The style of this chapter, like that of chap. xvi, is adapted to men among whom, at that time, no refinement subsisted. Large allowance must be made for language addressed to an ancient Eastern people, in the worst period of their history; all whose ideas were sensual, and whose grand inducement to idolatry seems to have been, the brutal impurities which it encouraged. Abp. Newcome.

—— the daughters of one mother:] Samaria and Jerusalem are described in this chapter as sisters, the offspring of the same land or country. Compare chap. xvi. 46; Jer. iii. 7, 8. W. Lowth.

3. And they committed whoredoms in Egypt;] Idolatry; see chap. xx. 7, 8.

—— in their youth:] The time when the Israelites were in Egypt, or were lately departed out of it, is called their "youth" in and there they bruised the teats of their virginity.

4 And the names of them were Aholah the elder, and Aholibah her sister: and they were mine, and they bare sons and daughters. Thus were their names; Samaria is Aholah, and Jerusalem Aholibah.

5 And Aholah played the harlot when she was mine; and she doted on her lovers, on the Assyrians her neighbours,

6 Which were clothed with blue, captains and rulers, all of them desirable young men, horsemen riding upon horses.

7 Thus she † committed her whoredoms with them, with all them that were † the chosen men of Assyria, and with all on whom she doted: with all their idols she defiled herself.

8 Neither left she her whoredoms brought from Egypt: for in her youth they lay with her, and they bruised the breasts of her virginity, and poured their whoredom upon her.

9 Wherefore I have delivered her into the hand of her lovers, into the hand of the [a] Assyrians, upon whom she doted.

[a] 2 Kings 17. 23.

10 These discovered her nakedness: they took her sons and her daughters, and slew her with the sword: and she became † famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her.

† Heb. a name.

11 And when her sister Aholibah saw this, † she was more corrupt in her inordinate love than she, and in her whoredoms † more than her sister in her whoredoms.

Before CHRIST 593.

12 She doted upon the [b] Assyrians her neighbours, captains and rulers clothed most gorgeously, horsemen riding upon horses, all of them desirable young men.

† Heb. she corrupted her inordinate love more than, &c. † Heb. more than the whoredoms of her sister.

13 Then I saw that she was defiled, that they took both one way,

14 And that she increased her whoredoms: for when she saw men pourtrayed upon the wall, the images of the Chaldeans pourtrayed with vermillion,

[b] 2 Kings 16. 7.

15 Girded with girdles upon their loins, exceeding in dyed attire upon their heads, all of them princes to look to, after the manner of the Babylonians of Chaldea, the land of their nativity:

16 And † as soon as she saw them with her eyes, she doted upon them, and sent messengers unto them into Chaldea.

† Heb. at the sight of her eyes.

17 And the † Babylonians came to her into the bed of love, and they defiled her with their whoredom, and she was polluted with them, and her mind was † alienated from them.

† Heb. children of Babel. † Heb. loosed, or, disjointed.

18 So she discovered her whoredoms, and discovered her nakedness: then my mind was alienated from her, like as my mind was alienated from her sister.

19 Yet she multiplied her whoredoms, in calling to remembrance the days of her the Prophets, because that was the time when God first owned them for His people. See ver. 8, 19; chap. xvi. 8, 22; Jer. ii. 2; Hos. ii. 15. W. Lowth.

4. And the names of them were Aholah the elder, &c.] Both of these divided people had their names from a tent, or tabernacle. Israel, which is the greater part of the ten tribes, is Aholah, "her own tabernacle," which she would needs erect according to her own device, to draw away clients from My temple. Judah is Aholibah, "My tent or tabernacle in her;" because of the place of My worship settled there. Bp. Hall.

5. — when she was mine;] When she was under My dominion. Houbigant. While she professed to be Mine. Bp. Hall.

—— on the Assyrians her neighbours,] The king of Assyria was a very powerful prince, and therefore his alliance was courted both by the kings of Israel and Judah, 2 Kings xv. 29; xvi. 7; and ver. 12. of this chapter. W. Lowth.

The Assyrians taught them the worship of Baal, and inspired them with the rage for making sacrifices upon high places. Calmet.

6. — clothed with blue,] The Chaldeans, the Assyrians, and the Persians, chiefly admired the colour of purple and hyacinth. Dresses of these colours were reserved for the prince and the great lords, and one of the most distinguished rewards for merit and service was the permission to wear them. Calmet. See Nahum ii. 3.

—— horsemen riding upon horses.] Horses were scarce in Judea, which made the Jews, in proportion as they renounced their dependence upon Heaven, apply themselves to the neighbouring countries for troops of horse, in the time of any hostile invasion, Isai. xxx. 16; xxxi. 1. W. Lowth.

8. — her whoredoms brought from Egypt:] All the precautions taken by Moses, all the zeal of Joshua and his successors, were insufficient to root out the propensity to idolatry, which the Jews had imbibed in Egypt. Calmet.

10. — and she became famous among women;] And she became a noted and remarkable example of God's judgments among the nations. Bp. Hall.

11. And when her sister Aholibah saw this,] Saw the judgment inflicted on Samaria; instead of taking warning by it, she advanced to greater degrees of idolatry. Bp. Hall, W. Lowth.

14. — men pourtrayed upon the wall, the images of the Chaldeans] The deified men worshipped by the Chaldeans must be meant. These the inhabitants of Chaldea had represented on the walls of Jerusalem; and the Jews desired to possess the idols, that they might pay them Divine honours. Abp. Newcome. Such as Bel, Nebo, and Merodach, mentioned Isai. xlvi. 1; Jer. l. 2. Abp. Newcome, W. Lowth.

15. — exceeding in dyed attire upon their heads,] Flowing, luxuriant, in the turbans worn by them. Abp. Newcome.

16. — and sent messengers] This probably relates to those times when a correspondence was maintained between the cities of Babylon and Jerusalem, after that Nebuchadnezzar had conquered Judea, and made it a tributary kingdom, in the beginning of the fourth year of Jehoiakim, Dan. i. 1, 2; 2 Kings xxiv. 1. W. Lowth.

17. — and her mind was alienated] Through satiety she loathed them; but still she desired other paramours, chap. xvi. 29. Abp. Newcome.

The representation of idolatry under the figure of the inordinate lust of adultery is still kept up. W. Lowth.

18. So she discovered her whoredoms,] She was open and notorious in them, and in the highest degree shameless. Abp. Newcome.

youth, wherein she had played the harlot in the land of Egypt.

20 For she doted upon their paramours, whose flesh is as the flesh of asses, and whose issue is like the issue of horses.

21 Thus thou calledst to remembrance the lewdness of thy youth, in bruising thy teats by the Egyptians for the paps of thy youth.

22 ¶ Therefore, O Aholibah, thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I will raise up thy lovers against thee, from whom thy mind is alienated, and I will bring them against thee on every side;

23 The Babylonians, and all the Chaldeans, Pekod, and Shoa, and Koa, and all the Assyrians with them: all of them desirable young men, captains and rulers, great lords and renowned, all of them riding upon horses.

24 And they shall come against thee with chariots, wagons, and wheels, and with an assembly of people, which shall set against thee buckler and shield and helmet round about: and I will set judgment before them, and they shall judge thee according to their judgments.

25 And I will set my jealousy against thee, and they shall deal furiously with thee: they shall take away thy nose and thine ears; and thy remnant shall fall by the sword: they shall take thy sons and thy daughters; and thy residue shall be devoured by the fire.

26 They shall also strip thee out of thy clothes, and take away thy † fair jewels.

27 Thus will I make thy lewdness to cease from thee, and thy whoredom brought from the land of Egypt: so that thou shalt not lift up thine eyes unto them, nor remember Egypt any more.

Before CHRIST 593.

28 For thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, I will deliver thee into the hand of them whom thou hatest, into the hand of them from whom thy mind is alienated:

29 And they shall deal with thee hatefully, and shall take away all thy labour, and shall leave thee naked and bare: and the nakedness of thy whoredoms shall be discovered, both thy lewdness and thy whoredoms.

30 I will do these things unto thee, because thou hast gone a whoring after the heathen, and because thou art polluted with their idols.

31 Thou hast walked in the way of thy sister; therefore will I give her cup into thine hand.

32 Thus saith the Lord GOD; Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup deep and large: thou shalt be laughed to scorn and had in derision; it containeth much.

33 Thou shalt be filled with drunkenness and sorrow, with the cup of astonishment and desolation, with the cup of thy sister Samaria.
